THE WORKS

OF

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

EDITED BY

WILLIAM GEORGE CLARK

AND

WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT

London
MACMILLAN AND CO.
1878

[All Rights reserved.]
IN preparing the text of this volume, we have in general followed the same rules as in the so-called 'Cambridge Shakespeare': rules which we adopted originally after much deliberation, and of which the soundness has been confirmed by our subsequent experience.

As however the two editions differ in plan, the one recording in foot-notes all the various readings and conjectural emendations, the other giving only the text, we have in some particulars modified our rules.

For instance, in cases where the text of the earliest editions is manifestly faulty, but where it is impossible to decide with confidence which, if any, of several suggested emendations is right, we have in the 'Cambridge Shakespeare' left the original reading in our text, mentioning in our notes all the proposed alterations: in this edition, we have substituted in the text the emendation which seemed most probable, or in cases of absolute equality, the earliest suggested. But the whole number of such variations between the texts of the two editions is very small.

In this volume, whenever the original text has been corrupted in such a way as to affect the sense, no admissible emendation having been proposed, or whenever a lacuna occurs too great to be filled up with any approach to certainty by conjecture, we have marked the passage with an obelus (†).
As in the larger work, we have numbered the lines of each scene for convenience of reference.

In the stage directions we have preserved as far as we could, consistently with clearness, the language of the oldest texts.

The Glossary has been prepared by the Rev. J. M. Jephson.

We trust that the title which has been chosen for the present edition will neither be thought presumptuous nor be found inappropriate. It seems indeed safe to predict that any volume which presents, in a convenient form, with clear type and at a moderate cost, the complete works of the foremost man in all literature, the greatest master of the language most widely spoken among men, will make its way to the remotest corners of the habitable globe.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

ALONSO, King of Naples.
SEBASTIAN, his brother.
PROSPERO, the right Duke of Milan.
ANTONIO, his brother, the usurping Duke of Milan.
FERDINAND, son to the King of Naples.
GONZALO, an honest old Counsellor.
ADRIAN, FRANCISCO, Lords.
CALIBAN, a savage and deformed Slave.
TRINCULO, a Jester.
STEPHANO, a drunken Butler.
Master of a Ship.

Boatswain.
Mariners.
MIRANDA, daughter to Prospero.
ARIEL, an airy Spirit.
IRIS, CERES, JUNO, NYMPHS, Reapers, presented by Spirits.
Other Spirits attending on Prospero.

SCENE—A ship at sea: an island.

ACT I.

SCENE I. On a ship at sea: a tempestuous noise of thunder and lightning heard.

Enter a Ship-Master and a Boatswain.

Mast. Boatswain!
Boats. Here, master: what cheer?
Mast. Good, speak to the mariners: fall to, yarely, or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir.

Enter Mariners.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts! cheerly, cheerly, my hearts! yare, yare! Take in the topsail. Tend to the master's whistle. Blow, till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, FERDINAND, GONZALO, and others.

Alon. Good boatswain, have care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.
Ant. Where is the master, boatswain?
Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour: keep your cabins: you do assist the storm.
Gon. Nay, good, be patient.
Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What cares these roarers for the name of king? To cabin: silence! trouble us not.

Gon. Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself.

You are a counsellor; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority: if you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap. Cheerly, good hearts! Out of our way, I say.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallowes. Stand fast, good Fate, to his hanging: make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage. If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable.

[Exit.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the topmast! yare! lower, lower! Bring her to with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather or our office.

Re-enter SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, and GONZALO.

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o'er and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, incharitable dog!

Boats. Work you then.

Ant. Hang, cur! hang, you whoreson, insolent noisemaker! We are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him for drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nutshell and as leaky as an unstanched wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold! set her two courses off to sea again; lay her off.

Enter Mariners yet.

Mariners. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost!

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let's assist them,

For our case is as theirs.

Seb. I'm out of patience.

Ant. We are merely cheanted of our lives by drunkards:

This wide-chapp'd rascal—would thou mightst lie drowning

The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hang'd yet, Though every drop of water swear against it And gape at widest to glut him.

[Confused noise within. 'Mercy on us!—' 'We split, we split!!--Farewell my wife and children!—' 'Farewell, brother!'—'We split, we split, we split!']

Ant. Let's all sink with the king.
Scene II. The island. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's cheek,
Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffered
With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel,
Who had, no doubt, some noble creature in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock Against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd.
Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth or er'd
It should the good ship so have swallow'd and
The fraughting souls within her.

Pros. Be collected:
No more amazement: tell your piteous heart
There's no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day!

Pros. No harm.
I have done nothing but in care of thee,
Of thee, my dear one, thee, my daughter, who
Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am, or that I am more better
Then Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Pros. Tis time
I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me. So:
[Leys down his mantle.

Lie there, my art. Wipe thou thine eyes; have Comfort.
The direful spectacle of the wrench, which touch'd
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision in mine art
So safely ordered that there is no soul—
No, not so much petulancy as an hair
Beizd to any creature in the vessel
Which thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st sink.

Sit down;
For thou must now know farther.

Mir. You have often
Begun to tell me what I am, but stopp'd
And left me to a bootless inquisition,
Concluding 'Stay: not yet.'

Pros. The hour's now come;
The very minute bids thee one thin ear; Obey and be attentive. Canst thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell? I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not 40
Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pros. By what? by any other house or person?
Of any thing the image tell me that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. 'Tis far off
And rather like a dream than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Had I not Four or five women once that tended me?

Pros. Thou hast, and more, Miranda. But how is it
That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else
In the dark backward and abysm of time? 50
If thou remember'st aught ere thou camest here,
How thou camest here thou mayst.

Mir. But that I do not.

Pros. Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year since,
Thy father was the Duke of Milan and
A prince of power.

Mir. Sir, are not you my father?

Pros. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was Duke of Milan; and thou his only heir
And princess no worse issued.

Mir. O the heavens!
What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed was't we did?

Pros. Both, both, my girl: 60
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heaved thence,
But blessedly holp hither.

Mir. O, my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance! Please you, further.

Pros. My brother and thy uncle, call'd Antonio—
I pray thee, mark me—that a brother should
Be so peridious—he whom next thyself
Of all the world I loved and to him put
The manage of my state; as at that time
Through all the signories it was the first
And Prospero the prime duke, being so reputed
In dignity, and for the liberal arts
Without a parallel; those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rap't in secret studies. Thy false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

Mir. Sir, most heedfully.

Pros. Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them, who to advance and who
To trash for over-topping, new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or changed
'em,
Or else new form'd 'em; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts i' the state
To which he pleased his car; that now he was
The ivy which had hid my princely trunk,
And suck'd my verdure out on't. Thou attend'st:

Mir. O, good sir, I do.

Pros. I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness and the bettering of my mind
With that which, but by being so retired,
O'er-prized all popular rate, in my false brother
Awaked an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had indeed no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact, like one
† Who having into truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie, he did believe
He was indeed the duke; out o' the substitution,
And executing the outward face of royalty, With all prerogative: hence his ambition growing.

Dost thou hear?
Mir.  Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.
Pros. To have no screen between this part he play'd.
And him he play'd it for, he needs will be Absolute Milan. Me, poor man, my library Was dukedom large enough: of temporal royalties

He thinks me now incapable; confederates—
So dry he was for sway—wi' the King of Naples
To dry him annual tribute, do him homage,
Subject his coronet to his crown and bend
The dukedom yet unbow'd—alas, poor Milan!—
To most ignoble stooping.
Mir.  O the heavens!
Pros. Mark his condition and the event; then tell me
If this might be a brother.
Mir.  I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother:
Good wombs have borne bad sons.
Pros.  Now the condition.

This King of Naples, being an enemy
To me inverteate, heartens my brother's suit;
Which was, that he, in lieu o' the premises
Of homage and I know not how much tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom and confer fair Milan
With all the honours on my brother: whereon,
A treacherous army levied, one midnight
Fated to the purpose did Antonio open
The gates of Milan, and, I the dead of darkness,
The ministers for the purpose hurried thence
Me and thy crying self.
Mir.  Alack, for pity!
I, not remembering how I cried out then,
Will cry it o'er again: it is a hint
There wrings mine eyes to't.
Pros.  Hear a little further.
And then I'll bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon's; without the which this story
Were most impertinent.
Mir.  Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?
Pros.  Well demanded, wench:
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not,
So dear the love my people bore me, nor set
A mark so bloody on the business, but
With colours fairer painted their foul ends.
In few, they hurried us aboard a bark,
Bore us some leagues to sea; where they prepared
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it: there they hoist us,
To cry to the sea that roar'd to us, to sigh
To the winds whose pity, sighing back again, 150
Did us but loving wrong.
Mir.  Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you!
Pros.  O, a cherubin
Thou wast that did preserve me. Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt,

Under my burthen groan'd; which raised in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up Against what should ensue.
Mir.  How came we ashore?
Pros. By Providence divine.
Some food we had and some fresh water that 160
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, being then appointed
Master of this design, did give us, with Rich garments, linens, stuffs and necessaries,
Which since have steadied much; so, of his gentleness,
Knowing I loved my books, he furnish'd me
From mine own library with volumes that I prize above my dukedom.
Mir.  Would I might
But ever see that man!
Pros. Now I arise! I resume his mantle.
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow. 170
Here in this island we arrived; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit
Than other princesses can that have more time
For vainer hours and tutors not so careful.
Mir.  Heavens thank you for't! And now, I pray you, sir,
For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason
For raising this sea-storm?
Pros.  Know thus far forth.
By accident most strange, bountiful Fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore; and by my prescience 180
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star, whose influence
If now I court not but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after drop. Here cease more questions:
Thou art inclined to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way? I know thou canst not choose.

[Miranda sleeps.

Come away, servant, come. I am ready now,
Approach, my Ariel, come.
Enter Ariel.
Ari. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail!
I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be't to fly, 190
To swim, to dive into the fire, ride
On the curl'd clouds, to thy strong bidding task
Ariel and all his quality, and all his
And his obedience, and all his service,
And all his parts of some import.
Pros.  Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?
Ari. To every article.
I boarded the king's ship; now on the heak,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin.
I flamed amazement: sometime I'd divide,
And burn in many places: on the topmast,
The yards and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet and join. Jove's lightnings, the precursors
O' the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary
And sight-outrunning were not; the fire and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring the most mighty Neptune
Seem to besiege and make his bold waves tremble,
Yet, his dread trident shake.
Pros. My brave spirit!
Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?
Ari. Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad and play'd
Some tricks of desperation. All but mariners 210
Plunged in the foaming brine and quit the vessel,
Then all afire with me: the king's son, Ferdinand,
With hair up-staring,—then like reeds, not hair,—
Was the first man that leapt; cried, 'Hell is empty,
And all the devils are here.'

Pros. Why, that's my spirit!

But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. Close by, my master.

Pros. But are they, Ariel, safe?

Ari. Not a hair perish'd;

On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before: and, as thou bastest me,
In troops I have dispersed them 'bout the isle. 220

The king's son have I landed by himself;
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs
In an odd angle of the isle and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.

The mariners say how thou hast disposed
And all the rest o' the fleet.

Ari. Safely in harbour

Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where once
Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still- vex'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:
The mariners all under hatches stow'd;

Who, with a charm join'd to their suffer'd labour,
I have left asleep: and for the rest o' the fleet
Which I dispersed, they all have met again
And are upon the Mediterranean flote,
Bound sadly home for Naples,

Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd

And his great person perish.

Ari. Ariel, thy charge

Exactly is perform'd: but there's more work.

What is the time o' the day?

Ari. Past the mid season.

Pros. At least two glasses. The time 'twixt six and now

Must by us both be spent most preciously.

Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,

Let me remember thee what thou hast promised,
Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pros. How now? moody? What is't thou canst demand?

Ari. My liberty.

Pros. Before the time be out? no more!

Ari. I prithee,

Remember I have done thee worthy service;

Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakes, served

Without or grudge or grumblings: thou didst promise

To have me a full year.

Pros. Dost thou forget

From what a torment I did free thee?

Ari. No.

Pros. Thou dost, and think'st it much to tread

the ooz

Of the salt deep,

To run upon the sharp wind o' the north,
To do me business in the veins o' the earth
When it is baked with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir.

Pros. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot

The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

Ari. No, sir.

Pros. Thou hast. Where was she born?

Speak; tell me,

Ari. Sir, in Argier.

Pros. O, was she so? I must

Once in a month recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Argier,
Thou know'st, was banish'd: for one thing she did
They would not take her life. Is not this true?

Ari. Ay, sir.

Pros. This blue-eyed hag was hither brought with child

And here was left by the sailors. Thou, my slave,
As thou report'st thyself, wass thou then her servant;
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To acht her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprison'd thou didst painfully remain

A dozen years; within which space she died
And left thee there; where thou didst vent thy groans
As fast as mill-wheels strive. Then was this island—

Save for the son that she did litter here,

A freckled whelp hag-born—not honour'd with

A human shape.

Ari. Yes, Caliban her son.

Pros. Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in; thy groans
Did make wolves howl and penetrate the breasts
Of ever angry bears: it was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo: it was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pr. If thou more murmur'st, I will send an oak
And peg thee in his knotty entrails till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Ari. Pardon, master; I will be correspondent to command

And do my spiriting gently.

Pros. Do so, and after two days

I will discharge thee.

Ari. That's my noble master! What shall I do? say what; what shall I do? 300

Pros. Go make thyself like a nymph o' the sea:

be subject
To no sight but thine and mine, invisible
To every eyeball else. Go take this shape
And hither come in't: go, hence with diligence!

[Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;

Awake!

Mir. The strangeness of your story put Heaviness in me.

Pros. Shake it off. Come on; We'll visit Caliban my slave, who never Yields us kind answer,

Mir. 'Tis a villain, sir, I do not love to look on.

Pros. But, as 'tis,

We cannot miss him: he does make our fire,

Fetch in our wood and serves in offices
That profit us. What, ho! slave! Caliban!
Thou earth, thou! speak,
Cal. [Within] There's wood enough within.
Pros. Come forth, I say! there's other business for thee:
Come, thou tortoise! when?
Re-enter Ariel like a water-nymph.
Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.
Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.]
Pros. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself
Upon thy wicked dam, come forth!

Enter Caliban.
Cal. As wicked dew as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye
And blister you all o'er!
Pros. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps,
Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins
Shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee; thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honeycomb, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made 'em.
Cal. I must eat my dinner. 330
This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou takest from me. When thou camest first,
Thou strokedst me and madest much of me,
wouldst give me
Water with berries in't, and teach me how
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I loved thee
And show'd thee all the qualities o' the isle,
The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place and fertile:
Cursed be I that did so! All the charms
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which first was mine own king: and here you stye me
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me
The rest o' the island.
Pros. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, not dinner! I have used thee,
Filth as thou art, with human care, and lodged thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.
Cal. O ho, O ho! wouldn't had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had people else 341
This isle with Calibans.
Pros. Ahhorded slave,
Which any print of goodness wilt not take,
Being capable of all! I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. But thy vile race,
Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures

Could not abide to be with; therefore wait thou
Deservedly confined into this rock,
Who hadst deserved more than a prison.
Cal. You taught me language: and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you
For learning me your language!
Pros. Hag-seed, hence! Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou'rt best,
To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, malice? If thou negleést or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps,
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.
Cal. No, pray thee.
[Aside] I must obey: his art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Sycorax,
And make a vassal of him.
Pros. So, slave; hence! [Exit Caliban.

Re-enter Ariel, invisible, playing and singing;
Ferdinand following.

Ariel's song.
Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Courtsied when you have and kiss'd
The wild waves whish.
Foot it fealty here and there;
And, sweet sprites, the burthen bear.
Burthen [dispersedly]. Hark, hark!
Bow-wow.

The watch-dogs bark:

Ari. Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer
Cry, Cook-a-diddle-dow.

Fer. Where should this music be? 'tis the air or the earth?
It sounds no more: and, sure, it waits upon
Some god o' the island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather. But 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.
Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Burthen. Ding-dong.

Ari. Hark! now I hear them.—Ding-dong, bell.

Fer. The ditty does remember my drown'd father.
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes. I hear it now above me.
Pros. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance
And say what thou seest yond.
Mir. What is't? a spirit?
Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir, 410
It carries a brave form. But 'tis a spirit.
Pros. No, wench; it eats and sleeps and hath such senses
As we have, such. This gallant which thou seest
Was in the wreck; and, but he's something staid
With grief that's beauty's canker, thou mightst call him
A goodly person: he hath lost his fellows
And strays about to find 'em.
Mir. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.
Pros. [Aside] It goes on, I see,
As my soul prompts it. Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free thee Within two days for this.

Fer. Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend! Vouchsafe my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island;
And that you will some good instruction give
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid or no?
Mir. No wonder, sir;
But certainly a maid.
Fer. My language! heavens!
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pros. How? the best? 430
What wert thou, if the King of Naples heard thee?
Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me;
And that he does I weep: myself am Naples,
Who with mine eyes, never since at ebb, beheld
The king my father wreck'd.

Mir. Alack, for mercy!
Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the Duke of Milan
And his brave son being twain.

Pros. [Aside] The Duke of Milan
And his more braver daughter could control thee,
If now 'twere fit to do't. At the first sight
They have changed eyes. Delicate Ariel,
I'll set thee free for this. [To Fer.] A word, good sir;
I fear you have done yourself some wrong; a word.
Mir. Why speaks my father so ungently? This Is the third man that e'er I saw, the first
That e'er I sigh'd for: pity move my father
To be inclined my way!
Fer. O, if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pros. Soft, sir! one word more.
[Aside] They are both in either's powers; but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light. [To Fer.] One word more;
I charge thee
That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp
The name thou owest not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.

Fer. No, as I am a man.
Mir. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple;
If the ill spirit have so fair a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.

Pros. Speak not you for him; he's a traitor. Come;
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together:
Sea-water shalt thou drink; thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow.

Fer. No;
I will resist such entertainment till
Mine enemy has more power.

Mir. [Drum, and is charmed from moving.]

Mir. O dear father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle and not fearful.

Pros. What? I say,
My foot my tutor? Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who makes a show but darest not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess'd with guilt: come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick
And make thy weapon drop.

Mir. Beseech you, father.

Pros. Hence! hang not on my garments.

Mir. Sir, have pity;
I'll be his surety.

Pros. Silence! one word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What! An advocate for an impostor! hush!
Thou think'st there is no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban: foolish wench! To the most of men this is a Caliban 480
And they to him are angels.

Mir. My affections
Are then most humble; I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Fer. Come on; obey:
Thy nerves are in their infancy again
And have no vigour in them.

Fer. So they are;
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats,
To whom I am subdued, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' the earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pros. [Aside] It works. [To Fer.] Come on.
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel! [To Fer.] Follow me.

[To Ariel.] Hark what thou else shalt do me.

Mir. Be of comfort;
My father's of a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech: this is unwonted
Which now came from him.

Pros. Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then exactly do
All points of my command.

Ari. To the syllable. 500

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Scene I. Another part of the island.

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, GONZALO,
ADRIAN, FRANCISCO, and others.

Gen. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause,
So have we all, of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe
Is common: every day some sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant and the merchant
Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

_Alon._  Prifthee, peace.

_Seb._  He receives comfort like cold porridge.

_Ant._  The visitor will not give him o'er so.

_Seb._  Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by and by it will strike.

_Gon._  Sir,—

_Seb._  One: tell.

_Gon._  When every grief is entertain'd that 's offer'd,
Comes to the entertainer—

_Seb._  A dollar.

_Gon._  Dolour comes to him, indeed: you have spoken truer than you purposed. 20
_Seb._  You have taken it wiselier than I meant you should.

_Gon._  Therefore, my lord,—

_Ant._  Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!

_Alon._  I prifthee, spare.

_Gon._  Well, I have done: but yet,—

_Seb._  He will be talking.

_Ant._  Which, of he or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

_Seb._  The old cock.

_Ant._  The cockerel.

_Seb._  Done. The wager?

_Ant._  A laughter.

_Seb._  A match!

_Adr._  Though this island seem to be desert,—

_Seb._  Ha, ha, ha! So, you're paid.

_Ant._  Uninhabitable and almost inaccessible,—

_Seb._  Yet,—

_Ant._  He could not miss't.

_Ant._  It must needs be of subtle, tender and delicately temperance.

_Ant._  Temperance was a delicate wrench.

_Seb._  Ay, and a subtle; as he most learnedly delivered.

_Adr._  The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

_Seb._  As if it had lungs and rotten ones.

_Ant._  Or as 'twere perfumed by a fen.

_Gon._  Here is everything advantageous to life.

_Ant._  True; save means to live. 50

_Seb._  Of that there's none, or little.

_Gon._  How lush and lusty the grass looks! how green!

_Ant._  The ground indeed is tawny.

_Seb._  With an eye of green in't.

_Ant._  He misses not much.

_Seb._  No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

_Gon._  But the rarity of it is,—which is indeed almost beyond credit,—

_Seb._  As many vouch'd rarities are.

_Gon._  That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses, being rather new-dyed than stained with salt water.

_Ant._  If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say he lies?

_Seb._  Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

_Gon._  Methinks our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the King of Tunis.

_Seb._  'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

_Adr._  Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to their queen.

_Gon._  Not since widow Dido's time.

_Ant._  Widow! a pox o' that! How came that widow in? widow Dido!

_Seb._  What if he had said 'widower Æneas' too? Good Lord, how you take it!

_Adr._  'Widow Dido' said you? you make me study of that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

_Gon._  This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

_Adr._  Carthage?

_Gon._  I assure you, Carthage.

_Seb._  His word is more than the miraculous harp; he hath raised the wall and houses too.

_Ant._  What impossible matter will he make easy next?

_Seb._  I think he will carry this island home in his pocket and give it his son for an apple. 91

_Ant._  And, sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

_Gon._  Ay.

_Ant._  Why, in good time.

_Gon._  Sir, we were talking that our garments seem now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

_Ant._  And the rarest that e'er came there.

_Seb._  Bate, I beseech you, widow Dido. 100

_Ant._  O, widow Dido! ay, widow Dido.

_Gon._  Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.

_Ant._  That sort was well fished for.

_Gon._  When I wore it at your daughter's mar-rriage?

_Alon._  You cram those words into mine ears against
The stomach of my sense. Would I had never Married my daughter there! for, coming thence,
My son is lost and, in my rate, she too,
Who is so far from Italy removed
I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee?

_Fran._  Sir, he may live:
I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him; his bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd,
As stooping to relieve him: I not doubt
He came alive to land.

_Alon._  No, no, he's gone.

_Seb._  Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss,
That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,
But rather lose her to an African:
Where she at least is banish'd from your eye,
Who hath cause to wet the grief on't.

_Alon._  Prifthee, peace.
Enter Ariel, invisible, playing solemn music.
Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.
Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.
Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy?
Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find
They are inclined to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir,
Do not omit the heavy offer of it:
It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth,
It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord,
Will guard your person while you take your rest,
And watch your safety.
Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy.

Ari.

Ant. Why 200
Doth it not then our eyelids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.
Ant. Nor I; my spirits are nimble.
They fell together all, as by consent;
They dropp’d, as by a thunder-stroke. What might,
Worthy Sebastian? O, what might?—No more:—
And yet me thinks I see it in thy face,
What thou shalt be: the occasion speaks thee,
And
My strong imagination sees a crown
Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What, art thou waking?
Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and surely
It is a sleepy language and thou speak’st
Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say?
This is a strange repose, to be asleep
With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving,
And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,
Thou let’st thy fortunate sleep—die, rather; wink’st
Whilest thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly;
There’s meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if need me; which to do
Trebles thee o’er.

Seb. Well, I am standing water.

Ant. I’ll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant.

Seb.

Ant. If you but knew how you the purpose cherish
Whiles thus you mock it! how, in stripping it,
You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,
Most often do so near the bottom run
By their own fear or sloth.

Seb. Pr’thee, say on:

Ant.

Seb.

Ant.

Seb.

Ant. Thus, sir:
Although this lord of weak remembrance, this,
Scene I.

THE TEMPEST.

Who shall be as of little memory
When he is earth'd, hath here almost persuaded,—
For he's a spirit of persuasion, only
Professes to persuade,—the king his son's alive,
'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd
As he that sleeps here swims.

I have no hope
That he's undrown'd.

What great hope have you! no hope that way is Another way so high a hope that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,
But doubt discovery there. Will you grant with me
That Ferdinand is drown'd?

He's gone.

Who's the next heir of Naples?

She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells
Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the sun were post—
The man 'tis the moon's too slow—till new-born chins
Be rough and razorable; she that—whom from?
We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast again,
And by that destiny to perform an act
Whereof what's past is prologue, what to come
In yours and my discharge.

What stuff is this! how say you?
'Tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis;
So is she heir of Naples; 'twixt which regions
There is some space.

A space whose every cubit
Seems to cry out, 'How shall that Claribel
Measure us back to Naples? Keep in Tunis,
And let Sebastian wake.' Say, this was death
That now hath seized them; why, they were no worse
Than now they are. There be that can rule Naples
As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo: I myself could make
A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore
The mind that I do! what a sleep were this
For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Methinks I do.

And how does your content
Tender your own good fortune?

I remember 270
You did supplant your brother Prospero.

True:

And look how well my garments sit upon me;
Much feater than before: my brother's servants
Were then my fellows; now they are my men.

But, for your conscience.

Ay, sir; where lies that? if 'twere a kibe,
'Twould put me to my slippur: but I feel not
This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences,
That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candied be they, And melt ere they molest! Here lies your brother,
No better than the earth he lies upon,
If he were that which now he's like, that's dead; Whom I, with this obedient steel, three inches of it, Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you, doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for eye might put
This ancient morsel, this Sir Prudence, who Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest,

They'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk;
They'll tell the clock to any business that
We say betits the hour,

Thy case, dear friend, 290
Shall be my precedent; as thou go'st Milan,
I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword; one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou payest;
And I the king shall love thee.

Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo.

O, but one word. [They talk apart.

Re-enter Ariel, invisible.

My master through his art foresees the danger
That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth—
For else his project dies—to keep them living.

[Sings in Gonzalo's ear.

While you here do snoring lie,

Open-eyed conspiracy
His time doth take.
If of life you keep a care,
Shake off slumber, and beware:
Awake, awake!

Then let us both be sudden.

Now, good angels
Preserve the king.

Why, how now? ho, awake! Why are you drawn?

Wherefore this ghastly looking?

What's the matter?

While we stood here securing your repose,
Even now, we heard a hollow burst of belowing
Like bulls, or rather lions: did'nt not wake you?
It struck mine ear most terribly.

I heard nothing.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear,
To make an earthquake! sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions.

Heard you this, Gonzalo?

Upon mine honour, sir, I heard a humm-

And that a strange one too, which did awake me:
I shaked you, sir, and cried: as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn: there was a noise, 320
That's verily. 'Tis best we stand upon our guard,
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Lead off this ground; and let's make Further search
For my poor son.

Heavens keep him from these beasts! For he is, sure, i' the island.

Lead away.

Prospero my lord shall know what I have done:

So, king, go safely on to seek thy son. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban with a burden of wood. A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall and make him
By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin-shows, pitch me i' the mire,
Nor lead me, like a firebrand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but
For every trifle are they set upon me;
Sometimes like apes that now and shatter at me
And after bite me, then like hedgehogs which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way and mount
Their pricks at my footfall; sometime am I
All wound with adders who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.

Enter Trinculo.

Lo, now, lo!
Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly. I'll fall flat;
Perchance he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub, to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing;
I hear it sing i' the wind: yond same black cloud,
yond huge cherry to a sailor, a chaff-boggy ball that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before, I know not where to hide my head:
yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls.
What have we here? a man or a fish? dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish: a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of not of the newest Poor-John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, as once I was, and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would another man make a an; any strange beast there makes a man:
when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame boggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.
Legged like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunderbolt. [Thunder.]
Alas, the storm is come again! my best way is to creep under his gaberline; there is no other shelter hereabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bad-fellows. I will here shroud till the dregs of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing: a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die ashore—

This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a man's funeral: well, here's my comfort. [Drinks.
Sings.]

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I,
The gunner and his mate
Loved Mall, Meg and Marian and Margery, 50
But none of us cared for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a tang,
yod go hang a sailor, a chaff-boggy ball.
She loved not the savour of tar nor of pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she did itch:
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang!

This is a scurvy tune too: but here's my comfort.
[Drinks.]

Cal. Do not torment me: Oh!
Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here? Do you put tricks upon 'em with savages and men of Ind, ha? I have not scaped drowning to be afraid now of your four legs; for it hath been said, As proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground; and it shall be said so again while Stephano breathes at's nostrils.
Cal. The spirit torments me; Oh!

Ste. This is some monster of the isle with four limbs, who hath got, as I take it, an auge.
Where the devil should be learn our language?
I will give him some relief, if it be but for that.
If I can recover him and keep him tame and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's-leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, prithee; I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him;
he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.
Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou shalt not know that voice: it should be —but he is drowned; and these are devils: O defend me!

Ste. Four legs and two voices: a most deleterious mate! His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend: his backward voice is to utter soul-speeches and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague.
Come. Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano! 100

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him. I have no long speech.

Trin. Stephano! If thou beest Stephano, touch me and speak to me; for I am Trinculo—
be not afraid—thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth: I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo indeed. How camest thou to be the siege of this moon-calf? can he vent Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke. But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now thou art not drowned. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's tender, for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitan's scaped!
Ste. Prithee, do not turn me about; my stom-mach is not constant.

Cal. [Aside] These be fine things, an if they be not spirits. 121

That's a brave god and bears celestial liquor.
I will kneel to him.

Ste. How didst thou scape? How camest thou here? swear by this bottle how thou camest hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack which the sailors heaved o'erdboard, by this bottle which I made of the bark of a tree with mine own hands since I was cast ashore.

Cal. I'll swear upon that bottle to be thy true salvation. Ste: But the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here; swear then how thou escapest.
Scene II.

The Tempest.

Trinc. Swum ashore, man, like a duck: I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book. Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trinc. O Stephano, hast any more of this?

Ste. The whole butt, man: my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! how does thine age?

Cal. Hast thou not dropp'd from heaven? 140

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee. I was the man i' the moon when time was,

Cal. I have seen thee in her and I do adore thee:
My mistress show'd me thee and thy dog and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents: swear.

Trinc. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster! I afraid of him! A very weak monster! The man i' the moon! A most poor credulous monster! Well drawn, monster, in good sooth!

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' th' island;
And I will kiss thy foot: I prithee, be my god.

Trinc. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster! when 's god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot; I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on then; down, and swear.

Trinc. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurry monster! I could find in my heart to beat him,— 160

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trinc. But that the poor monster's in drink: an abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs: I'll pluck thee berries;
I'll fish for thee and get thee wood enough.
A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,
Thou wondrous man.

Trinc. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I prithee, let me bring thee where crabs grow:
And I will by my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts;
Show thee a jay's nest and instruct thee how
To snare the nimble marmoset; I'll bring thee
To clustering filberts and sometimes I'll get thee
Young scamels from the rock. Will'lt thou go with me?

Ste. I prithee now, lead the way without any more talking. Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here: here; bear my bottle: fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. [Sings drunkenly]

Farewell, master; farewell, farewell!

Trinc. A howling monster: a drunken monster!

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;
Nor fetch in fering
At requiring;
Nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish:
Ban, Ban, Canacian
Has a new master: get a new man.

Freedoom, hey-day! hey-day, freedoom! freedoom,
hey-day, freedoom! 191

Ste. O brave monster! Lead the way. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Scene I. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Ferd. There be some sports are painful, and their labour Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness
Are nobly undergone and most poor matters
Point to rich ends. This may mean task
Would be as heavy to me as odious, but
The mistress which I serve quickens what's dead
And makes my labours pleasures: O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabb'd,
And he's composed of harshness. I must remove
Some thousands of these logs and pile them up,
Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work, and says, such baseness
Had never like executor. I forget:
But these sweet thoughts do ever refresh my labours,
Most busy lest, when I do it.

Enter Miranda; and Prospero at a distance, unseen.

Mir. Alas, now, pray, you,
Work not so hard: I would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that you are enjoined to pile!
Pray, set it down and rest you: when this burns,
I'll weep for having wearied you. My father
Is hard at study; pray now, rest yourself; 20
He's safe for these three hours.

Ferd. O most dear mistress,
The sun will set before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you'll sit down,
I'll bear your logs the while: pray, give me that;
I'll carry it to the pile.

Ferd. No, precious creature;
I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
Than you should such dishonour undergo,
While I sit lazy by.

Mir. It would become me
As well as it does you: and I should do it
With more much ease; for my good will is to it,
And yours it is against.

Pros. Poor worm, thou art infected!
This visitation shows it.

Mir. You look wearily.

Ferd. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me
When you are by at night. I do beseech you—
Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers—
What is your name?

Mir. Miranda.—O my father,
I have broke your hest to say so!

Ferd. Admired Miranda! Indeed the top of admiration! worth
What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady
I have eyed with best regard and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues
Have I liked several women; never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she owed
And put it to the foil: but you, O you,
So perfect and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best!
Mir. I do not know
One of my sex; no woman's face remember,
Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen
More that I may call men than you, good friend,
And my dear father: how features are abroad,
I am skillless of; but, by my modesty,
The jewel in my dower, I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you,
Nor can imagination form a shape,
Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle
Something too wildly and my father's precepts
I therein do forget.

Fer. I am in my condition
A prince, Miranda: I do think, a king;
I would, not so!—and would no more endure
This wooden slavery than to suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak:
The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service: there resides,
To make me slave to it; and for your sake
Am I this patient log-man.

Mir. Do you love me?

Fer. O heaven, O earth, bear witness to this sound
And crown what I profess with kind event
If I speak true! if hollowly, invert
What best is boded me to mischief! I
Beyond all limit of what else i' the world
Do love, prize, honour you.

Mir. I am a fool
To weep at what I am glad of.

Pros. Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace
On that which breeds between 'em!

Fer. Wherefore weep you?

Mir. At mine unworthiness that dare not offer
What I desire to give, and much less take
What I shall die to want. But this is trifling;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself;
The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!
I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest;
And I thus humble ever.

Mir. My husband, then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom: here's my hand.

Mir. And mine, with my heart in't: and now farewell
Till half an hour hence.

Fer. A thousand thousand!

[Exeunt Fer. and Mir. severally.

Pros. So glad of this as they I cannot be,
Who are surprised withal; but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book,
For yet ere supper-time must I perform
Much business appertaining. [Exit.

SCENE II. Another part of the island.

Enter CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO.

Ste. Tell not me; when the butt is out, we'll drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em. Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster! the folly of this island! They say there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if th' other two be brained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee; thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drown'd his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me; I swim, ere I could recover the shore, five and thirty leagues off and on. By this light, thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, Monsieur Monster.

Trin. Nor go neither; but you'll lie like dogs and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoe.

I'll serve him; he's not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou deboshed fish, thou, was there ever man a coward that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being half a fish and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. 'Lord' quoth he! That a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I prithee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in thy head: if you prove a mutineer,—the next tree! The poor monster's my subject and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry, will I: kneel and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter ARIEL, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant, a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the island.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou: I would my valiant master would destroy thee! I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in's tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum, then, and no more. Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle; From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him,—for I know thouarest, But this thing dare not,—

Ste. That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea, my lord: I'll yield him thee asleep,
Scene II.

THE TEMPEST.

Where thou mayst knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not.

Cal. What a pied ninny's this! Thou scurvy patch!

I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows
And take his bottle from him: when that's gone
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him
Where the quick freshes are.

Trin. Trinculo, run into no further danger:
interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out o' doors and make a stock-fish of thee.

Cal. I'll go farther off.

Ste. Didst thou not say he lied?
Ari. Thou liest.
Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Beats Trin.]

As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Ste. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits and hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! this can sack and drinking do. A murrun on your mon-ter, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Prithhee, stand farther off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time
I'll beat him too.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him,
I' th'afternoon to sleep: there thou mayst brain him,
Having first seized his books, or with a log
Batter his skull, or paunch with him a stake,
Or cut his wazzend with thy knife. Remember
First to possess his books; for without them
He's but a sot, as I am, nor hath not
One spirit to command: they all do hate him
As rootedly as I. Burn but his books.
He has brave utensils,—for so he calls them,—
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.
And that most deeply to consider is
The beauty of his daughter: he himself
Calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman,
But only Sycorax my dam and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax
As great'st does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant.
And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter
And I will be king and queen,—save our graces!—
And Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys.
Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.
Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee; but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep.
Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou makest me merry; I am full of pleasure;
Let us be jocund: will you troll the catch
You taught me but while-ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings.

Flout 'em and scout 'em
And scout 'em and flout 'em;
Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

Ariel plays the tune on a tabour and pipe.
Ste. What is this same?
Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of Nobody.
Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a man, take't as thou list.
Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies pays all debts: I defy thee.

Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou afraid?
Ste. No, master, not I.

Cal. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises,
Sounds and sweet airs, that give delight and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about mine ears, and sometime voices
That, if I then had waked after long sleep,
Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming,
The clouds methought would open and show riches
Ready to drop upon me, that, when I waked,
I cried to dream again.

Cal. This will prove a brave kingdom to me,
where I shall have my music for nothing.
Cal. When Prospero is destroyed.
Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away; let's follow it, and after do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow. I would I could see this taborer: he lays it on.

Trin. Wilt come? I'll follow, Stephano.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo,
Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can go no further, sir:
My old bones ache: here's a maze trod indeed
Through forth-rights and meanders! By your patience,
I needs must rest me.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who am myself attach'd with weakness,
To the dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest.
Even here I will put off my hope and keep it
No longer for my flatterer: he is drown'd
Whom we thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our fruitless search on land. Well, let him go.

Ant. [Aside to Seb.] I am right glad that he's so out of hope.
Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose
That you resolved to effect.

Seb. [Aside to Ant.] The next advantage
Will we take throughly.
Ant. [Aside to Seb.] Let it be to-night;
For, now they are oppress'd with travel, they
Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance
As when they are fresh.

Seb [Aside to Ant.] I say, to-night: no more.

[Solemn and strange music.

Alon. What harmony is this? My good friends, hark!

Gen. Marvellous sweet music!
Enter Prospero above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet; they dance about it with gentle actions of salutation; and, inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.

Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Seb. A living drollery. Now I will believe That there are unicorns, that in Arabia There is one tree, the phoenix' throne, one phoenix At this hour reigning there.

Ant. I'll believe both; And what does else want credit, come to me, And I'll be sworn 'tis true: travellers ne'er did lie, Though fools at home condemn 'em.

Gon. If in Naples I should report this now, would they believe me? If I should say, I saw such islanders— For, certes, these are people of the island— Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note, Their manners are more gentle-kind than of Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

[Aside] Honest lord, Thou hast said well; for some of you there present Are worse than devils.

Alon. I cannot too much muse Such shapes, such gesture and such sound, expressing, Although they want the use of tongue, a kind of excellent dumb discourse.

Seb. No matter, since They have left their viands behind; for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here?

Alon. Not I.

Gon. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys, Who would believe that there were mountaineers Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at'em Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find Each puffer-out of five for one will bring us Good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to and feed, Although my last: no matter, since I feel The best is past. Brother, my lord the duke, Stand to and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table; and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Art. You are three men of sin, whom Destiny, That hath to instrument this lower world And what is in't, the never-surfeited sea Hath caused to belch up you; and on this island Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad; And even with such-like valour men hang and drown Their proper selves.

Alon., Seb., &c., draw their swords. You fools! I and my fellows Are ministers of Fate: the elements, Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with bemock'd-at stabs Kill the still-closing waters, as to diminish One dowe that 's in my plume: my fellow-ministers Are like invulnerable. If you could hurt, Your swords are now too massy for your strengths And will not be uplifted. But remember— For that's my business to you—that you three From Milan did supplant good Prospero; Embosed unto the sea, which hath requit it, Him and his innocent child: for which foul deed The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Incensed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures, Against your peace. Thee of thy son, Alonso, They have bereft; and do pronounce by me: Lingering perdition, worse than any death Can be at once, shall step by step attend You and your ways; whose wraths to guard you from— Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls Upon your heads—is nothing but heart-sorrow &c And a clear life ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder; then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance, with mocks and moves, and carrying out the table.

Pros. Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring: Of my instruction hast thou nothing bated In what thou hadst to say: so with good life And observation strange, my meeker ministers Their several kinds have done. My high charms work And these mine enemies are all knit up In their distractions; they now are in my power: And in these fits I leave them, while I visit You, my Ferdinand, whom they suppose is drown'd, And his and mine loved darling. [Exit above.

Gon. I the name of something holy, sir, why stand you In this strange stare?

Alon. O, it is monstrous, monstrous! Meatigh't the billows spoke and told me of it; These winds did sing it to me, and the thunder, That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounced The name of Prosper: it did bass my trespass. Therefore my son i' the ooze is bedded, and I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded And with him there lie mudded. [Exit. Seb. But one fendi at a time, I'll fight their legions o'er.

Ant. I'll be thy second. [Exit Seb. and Ant.

Gon. All three of them are desperate: their great guilt, Like poison given to work a great time after, Now 'gins to bite the spirits. I do beseech you That are of supper joints, follow them swiftly And hinder them from what this ecstasy May now provoke them to. [Exit.

Adr. Follow, I pray you. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene I. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pros. If I have too austerely punish'd you, Your compensation makes amends, for I Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats and pease; Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep; Thy banks with plowed and twilled brims, Which spongy April at thy best betrays, To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy broom-groves, Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves, Being less-born; thy pole-clipt vineyard; And thy sea-marge, sterile and rocky-hard, Where thou thyself dost air,—the queen of the sky, Whose watery arch and messenger am I, Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace, Here on this grass-plot, in this very place, To come and sport; her peacocks fly amain: Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hall, many-colour'd messenger, that ne'er Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter; Who with thy saffron wings upon my flowers Diffusest honey-drops, refreshing showers, And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown So My bosky acres and my unshrub'd down, Rich scarfs to my modest earth; why hath thy queen Summon'd me hither, to this short-grass'd green? Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate; And some donation freely to estate On the blest lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow, If Venus or her son, as thou dost know, Do now attend the queen? Since they did plot The means that dusky Dis my daughter got, Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society Be not afraid: I met her deity Cutting the clouds towards Paphos and her son Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have done Some wanton charm upon this man and maid, Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid Till Hymen's torch be lighted: but in vain; Mars's hot minion is returned again; Her waipish-headed son has broke his arrows, Swears he will shoot no more but play with sparrows And be a boy right out.

Cer. High'st queen of state, Great Juno, comes; I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be And honour'd in their issue. [They sing:

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing, Long continuance, and increasing, Hourly joys be still upon you! Juno sings her blessings on you.

Which spongy April at thy best betrays, To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy broom-groves, Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves, Being less-born; thy pole-clipt vineyard; And thy sea-marge, sterile and rocky-hard, Where thou thyself dost air,—the queen of the sky, Whose watery arch and messenger am I, Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace, Here on this grass-plot, in this very place, To come and sport; her peacocks fly amain: Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am. Pros. Thou and thy meaner fellows your last service Did worthily perform; and I must use you In such another trick. Go bring the rabbit, O'er whom I give thee power, here to this place: Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Pros. Presently?

Ari. Ay, with a twink. Pros. Before you can say 'come' and 'go,' And breathe twice and cry 'so, so,' Each one, tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop and mow. Do you love me, master? no?

Pros. Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well, I conceive. [Exit. 50

Pros. Look thou be true; do not give dailiance Too much the rein: the strongest oats are straw To the fire! the blood: be more abstemious, Or else, good night your vow! Fer. I warrant you, sir; The white cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the ardour of my liver.

Pros. Well, Now come, my Ariel! bring a corollary, Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertly! No tongue! all eyes! be silent. [Soft music.
Spring come to you at the farthest
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcity and want shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.
Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold
To think these spirits?
Pros. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines call'd to enact
My present fancies.
Pros. Let me live here ever;
So rare a wonder'd father and a wife
Makes this place Paradise.

[Pros. and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.]
Sweet, now, silence! Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;
There's something else to do: hush, and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd.
Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wind-ring brooks,
With your sedged crowns and ever-harmless looks.
Leave your crisp channels and on this green lawn.
Answer your summons. Juno does command:
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love; be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.
You sunburnt sicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow and be merry;
Make holiday: your rye-straw hats put on
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance;
towards the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.
Pros. [Aside] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban and his confederates against my life: the minute of their plot
Is almost come. [To the Spirits.] Well done! avoid; no more!
Fer. This is strange: your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mir. Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.
Pros. You do look, my son, in a moved sort,
as if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir,
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits
And melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgious palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself;
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is round'd with a sleep. Sir, I am vex'd;
Bear with my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not distur'd with my infirmity:
If you be pleased, retire into my cell
And there repose; a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.
Fer. Mir. We wish your peace. [Exeunt.

Pros. Come with a thought. I thank thee,
Ariel: come.

Enter Ariel.
Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to. What's thy pleasure?
Pros. Spirit, We must prepare to meet with Caliban.
Ari. Ay, my commander: when I presented Ceres,
I thought to have told thee of it, but I fear'd
Lest I might anger thee.
Pros. Say again, where didst thou leave these varied?
Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking;
So full of valour that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advancing with their eyelids, lifted up their noses
As they snelt music: so I charm'd their ears
That calf-like they my lowing follow'd through Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, prickling goss and thorns,
Which entered their frail shins: at last I left them
The filthy-mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to the chins, that the foul lake
O'erstunk their feet.
Pros. This was well done, my bird.
Thy shape invisible retain thou still:
The trumpery in my house, go bring it hither,
For stave to catch these thieves.
Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.]
Pros. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains,
Humbly taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
And as with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind cankers. I will plague them all,
Even to roaring.

Re-enter Ariel, loaden with glistering apparel, &c.

Come, hang them on this line.

Prospero and Ariel remain, invisible. Enter
Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole may not
Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.
Ste. Monster, your fairy, which you say is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss: at which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you, look you,—

Trin. Thou wert but a lost monster.
Cal. Good my lord, give me my favour still.
Be patient, for the prize I'll bring thee to Shall hoodwink this miscrope: therefore speak sofily.
All's hush'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,— Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.
Scene I.]

THE TEMPEST.

Trin. That’s more to me than my wetting; yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.
Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o’er ears for my labour.
Calf. Pray thee, my king, be quiet. See’st thou here,
This is the mouth o’ the cell: no noise, and enter.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For aye thy foot-licker.
Ste. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy
Stephano! look what a wardrobe here is for thee!
Calf. Let it alone, thou fool; it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster! we know what belongs to a frippery. O king Stephano!
Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo; by this hand, I’ll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.
Calf. The dropsy drowns this fool! what do you mean
To dote thus on such luggage? Let’s alone
And do the murder first: if he awake,
From toe to crown he’ll fill our skins with pinches,
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster. Mistress line, is not this my Jerkin? Now is the Jerkin under the line: now, Jerkin, you are like to lose your hair and prove a bald Jerkin.

Trin. Do, do; we steal by line and level, an’t like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest; here’s a garment for’t: wit shall not go unrewarded while I am king of this country. ‘Steal by line and level’ is an excellent pass of page; there’s another garment for’t.

Trin. Monster, come, put some lime upon your fingures, and away with the rest.

Calf. I will have none on’t: we shall lose our time,
And all be turn’d to baracoles, or to apes
With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay-to your fingures; help to bear this away where my hog-head of wine is, or I’ll turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of dogs and hounds, and hunt them about, Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pros. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pros. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark! hark! hark! [Calf., Ste., and Trin. are driven out.]

Go charge my goblins that they grind their joints With dry convulsions, shorten up their sices With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make them
Than pard or cat o’ mountain.

Ari. Hark, they roar!

Pros. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou Shall have the air at freedom: for a little Follow, and do me service. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

Scene I. Before Prospero’s cell.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes, and Ariel.

Pros. Now does my project gather to a head: My charms crack not; my spirits obey; and time Goes upright with his carriage. How’s the day? Air. On the sixth hour: at which time, my lord, You said our work should cease.

Pros. I did say so,
When first I raised the tempest. Say, my spirit, How fares the king and his followers?

Ari. Confined together
In the same fashion as you gave in charge,
Just as you left them: all prisoners, sir,
In the line-grove which heather-tends your cell;
They cannot budge till your release. The king, His brother and yours, abide all three distracted
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brimful of sorrow and dismay: but chiefly
Him that you termed, sir, ‘The good old lord, Gonzalo’;
His tears run down his beard, like winter’s drops
From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works ‘em
That if you now beheld them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pros. Dost thou think so, spirit?

Ari. Mine would, sir, while I humbly

Pros. And mine shall. Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions, and shall not myself,
One of their kind, that relish all as sharply,
Passion as they, be kindlier moved than thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the quick.
Yet with my nobler reason ‘gainst my fury
Do I take part: the rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further. Go release them, Ariel: My charms I’ll break, their senses I’ll restore,
And they shall be themselves. I’ll fetch them, sir. [Exit.

Pros. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes and groves,
And ye that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune and do fly him
When he comes back: you demi-puppets that
By moonshine do the green sour ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites, and you whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid, weak masters though ye be, I have bedim’d
The noontide sun, call’d forth the mutinous winds,
And, ‘twixt the green sea and the azure vault
Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire and ruf’d Jove’s stout oak
With his own bolt; the storm’d-bas’d promontory
Have I made shake and by the spurs pluck’d up
The pine and cedar; graves at my command
Have waked their sleepers, oped, and let ’em forth
By my so potent art. But this rough magic
I here abuse, and it has brought me to
Some heavenly music, which even now I do,
To work mine end upon their senses that
This airy charm is for, I’ll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And deeper than did ever plummet sound
I'll drown my book.  [Solemn music.

Re-enter Ariel before: then Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo: Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero
observing, speaks:

A solemn air and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy cure thy brains,
Now useless, boil'd within thy skull! There stand,
For you are spell-stopp'd.
Holy Gonzalo, honourable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the show of thine,
Fall fellowly drops. The charm dissolves apace,
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. O good Gonzalo,
My true preserver, and a loyal sir
To him thou follow'st! I will pay thy graces 70
Home both in word and deed. Most cruelly
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act.
Thou art pinch'd for't now, Sebastian. Flesh and blood,
You, brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,
Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian,
Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong,
Would here have kill'd thy king; I do forgive thee.
Unnatural though thou art. Their understanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide 80
Will shortly fill the reasonable shore
That now lies foul and muddy. Not one of them
That yet looks on me, or would know me: Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell:
I will discourse me, and myself present
As I was sometime Milan: quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ariel sings and helps to attire him.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I:
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back do I fly 90
After summer merrily.
Merrily, merrily shall I live now
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom: so, so, so.
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master and the boatswain
Being awake, enforce them to this place, 100
And presently, I prithee,
Ari. I drink the air before me, and return
Or ere your pulse twice beat.  [Exit.

Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder and amazement
Inhabits here: some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearful country?

Pro. Behold, sir king,
The wronged Duke of Milan, Prospero:

For more assurance a living prince
Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee and thy company I bid 110
A hearty welcome.

Alon. Whether thou be'st he or no,
Or some enchanted tribe to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know: thy pulse
Beats as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee,
The affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me: this must crave,
As if this be at all, a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign and do entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs. But how should Prospero
Be living and be here?

Pro. First, noble friend, 120
Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot Be measured or confined.

Gon. Whether this be
Or be not, I'll not swear.

Pro. You do yet taste
Some subtleties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain. Welcome, my friends all!  [Aside to Seb. and Ant.] But you, my brace of hards, were I so minded,
Here I could pluck his highness' frown upon you
And justify you traitors: at this time
I will tell no tales.

Pro. No.

For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest fault; all of them: and require
My dukedom of thee, which perforce, I know,
Thou must restore.

Alon. If thou be'st Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were wreck'd upon this shore; where I have lost—
How sharp the point of this remembrance is!—
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pro. I am woe for't, sir.

Alon. Irreparable is the loss, and patience 140
Says it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather think
You have not sought her help, of whose soft grace
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid
And rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss!
Pro. As great to me as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter?
O heavens, that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddied in that oozy bed Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire
That they devour their reason and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath: but, howsoever you have Been justified from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan, who most strangely

THE TEMPEST.

Scene I.

Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed,
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing:
At least bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.

Here Prospero discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.

Mir. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dear'st love, I would not for the world.
Mir. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
And I would call it fair play.
Alon. If this prove a vision of the Island, one dear son Shall I twice lose. Sek. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful;
I have cursed them without cause. [Kneels.
Alon. Now all the blessings Of a glad father compass thee about! 150
Arise, and say how thou camest here.
Mir. O, wonder! How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in't!
Pros. Tis new to thee. Alon. What is this maid with whom thou wast at play?
Your el'd acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But by immortal Providence she's mine:
I chose her when I could not ask my father 190
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life; and second father
This lady makes him to me.
Fer. I am hers:
But, O, how oddly will it sound that I
Must ask my child forgiveness!
Pros. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burthen our remembrance with
A heaviness that's gone.
Gon. I have inly wept, 200
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown!
For it is you that have chalk'd forth the way
Which brought us hither.
Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo! Gonz. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O, rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis

And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife
Where he himself was lost, Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle and all of us ourselves
When no man was his own.
Alon. [To Fer. and Mir.] Give me your hands:
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart
That doth not wish you joy?
Gon. Be it so! Amen!
Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.

O, look, sir, look, sir! here is more of us:
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace or board, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
Boats. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king and company; the next, our ship—
Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split—
Is tight and yare and bravely rigg'd as when
We first put out to sea.
Ari. [Aside to Pros.] Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.
Pros. [Aside to Ari.] My trick'sy spirit!
Alon. These are not natural events; they strengthen
From strange to stranger. Say, how came you hither?
Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And—how we know not—all clapp'd underhatches;
Where but even now with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awaked; straightforward, at liberty;
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good and gallant ship, our master
Capering to eye her: on a trice, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them
And were brought moping his popinjay.
Ari. [Aside to Pros.] Was't well done? 240
Pros. [Aside to Ari.] Bravely, my diligence.
Thou shalt be free.
Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.

Pros. Sir, my liege,
Do not infest your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you,
Which to you shall seem probable, of every
These happen'd accidents; till when, be cheerful
And think of each thing well. [Aside to Ari.]
Come hither, spirit: 251
Set Caliban and his companions free:
Untie the spell. [Exit Ariel.] How fares my gracious sir?

There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd lads that you remember not.
Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel.
Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune;
Coragio, bully-monster, coragio!
THE TEMPEST.

ACT V.

Trin. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight. 260
Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed! How fine my master is! I am afraid He will chastise me.
Seb. Ha, ha! What things are these, my lord Antonio? Will money buy 'em?
Ant. Very like; one of them Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.
Pros. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords, Then say if they be true. This mis-shapen knave, His mother was a witch, and one so strong That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs, And deal in her command without her power. 271 These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil— For he's a bastard one—had plotted with them To take my life. Two of these fellows you Must know and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine.
Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death.
Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butter?
Seb. He is drunk now; where had he wine?
Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em? 280 How camest thou in this pickle?
Trin. I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing.
Seb. Why, how now, Stephano!
Ste. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a cramp.
Pros. You'll be king o' the isle, sirrah?
Str. I should have been a sore one then.
Alon. This is a strange thing as e'er I look'd on.
Pros. He is as disproportion'd in his manners As in his shape. Go, sirrah, to my cell; 291 Take with you your companions; as you look To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.
Cal. Ay, that I will: and I'll be wise hereafter And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass Was I, to take this drunkard for a god And worship this dull fool!
Pros. Go to; away!
Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.
Seb. Or stole it, rather. 300
[Exeunt Cal., Ste., and Trin.]

Pros. Sir, I invite your highness and your train To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest For this one night; which, part of it, I'll waste With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it Go quick away; the story of my life And the particular accidents gone by Since I came to this isle: and in the morn I'll bring you to your ship and so to Naples, Where I have hope to see the nuptial Of these our dearest loved solemnized: And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.
Alon. I long To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.
Pros. I'll deliver all;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales And sail so expeditious that shall catch Your royal fleet far off. [Aside to Ari.] My Ariel, chick, That is thy charge: then to the elements Be free, and fare thou well! Please you, draw near,

EPILOGUE.

SPOKEN BY PROSPERO.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown, And what strength I have's mine own, Which is most faint: now, 'tis true, I must be here confined by you, Or sent to Naples. Let me not, Since I have my dukedom got And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell In this bare island by your spell; But release me from my bands With the help of your good hands: 10 Gentle breath of yours my sails Must fill, or else my project fails, Which was to please. Now I want Spirits to enforce, art to enchant, And my ending is despair, Unless I be relieved by prayer, Which pieces so that it assaults Mercy itself and frees all faults. As you from crimes would pardon'd be, Let your indulgence set me free. 20

SCENE, Verona; Milan; the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Verona. An open place.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus: Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Were’t not affection chains thy tender days To the sweet glances of thy honour’d love, I rather would entreat thy company To see the wonders of the world abroad Than, living dully sluggardized at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness, But since thou lovest, love still and thrive therein, Even as I would when I to love begin.

Pro. wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu.

Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Command thy grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy beadsmen, Valentine.

Val. That’s on some shallow story of deep love:

How young Leander cross’d the Hellespont.

Pro. That’s a deep story of a deeper love;

For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. ’Tis true; for you are over boots in love,

And yet you never swim the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots.

Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?

Val. To be in love, where scorn is bought with groans;

Coy looks with heart’sore sighs; one fading moment’s mirth

With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:

If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain;

If lost, why then a grievous labour won;

However, but a folly bought with wit, Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear you’ll prove.

Pro. ’Tis love you cavil at: I am not Love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you;

And he that is so yoked by a fool, Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud The eating canker dwells, so eating love Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud Is eaten by the canker ere it be blow’d Even so by love the young and tender wit Is turn’d to folly, blasting in the bud, Losing his verdure even in the prime And all the fairest effects of future hopes.

But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee That art a votary to fond desire! Once more adieu! my father at the road Expects my coming; there to see me shipp’d.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave.

To Milan let me hear from thee by letters Of thy success in love and what news else Betideth here in absence of thy friend:

And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan!

Val. As much to you at home! and so, farewell.

[Exit.

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love:

He leaves his friends to dignify them more;

I leave myself, my friends and all, for love.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos’d me,

Made me neglect my studies, lose my time,

War with good counsel, set the world at nought;

Made wit with musing weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you! Saw you my master?

Pro. But now he parted hence, to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipp’d already, And I have play’d the sheep in losing him.

Pro. Indeed, a sheep doth very often stray,
An if the shepherd be a while away.

Speed. You conclude that my master is a shepherd then and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Pro. True; and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard but I'll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me; therefore I am no sheep.

Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd; the shepherd for food follows not the sheep: thou for wages followest thy master; thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore thou art a sheep.

Speed. Such another proof will make me cry 'baa.'

Pro. But, dost thou hear? gavest thou my letter to Julia?

Speed. Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave you a written letter to her, a laced mutton, and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttions.

Speed. If the ground be overcharged, you were best stick her.

Pro. Nay: in that you are astray, 'twere best pound you.

Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.

Pro. You mistake; I mean the pound,—a pindolf.

Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over,

'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.

Pro. But what said she?

Speed. [First nodding] Ay,

Pro. Nod—Ay—why, that's noddy.

Speed. You mistook, sir; I say, she did nod; and you ask me if she did nod; and I say, 'Ay.'

Pro. And that set together is noddy.

Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.

Pro. No, no; you shall have it for bearing the letter.

Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fain to bear with you.

Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?

Speed. Marry, sir, the letter, very orderly; having nothing but the word 'noddy' for my pains.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief: what said she?

Speed. Open your purse, that the money and the matter may be both at once delivered.

Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains. What said she?

Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.

Pro. Why, couldst thou perceive so much from her?

Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; no, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter; and being so hard to me that brought your mind, I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling your mind. Give her no token but stones; for she's as hard as steel.

Pro. What said she? nothing?

Speed. No, not so much as 'Take this for thy pains.' To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testerned me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself: and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck,

Which cannot perish having thee aboard,

Being destined to a drier death on shore.

[Exit Speed.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,

Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love?

Luc. Ay, madam, so you stumble not unheedfully.

Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen

That every day with parle encounter me,

In thy opinion which is worthiest love?

Luc. Please you repeat their names, I'll show my mind

According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What think' st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour?

Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;

But, were I you, he never should be mine.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?

Luc. Well of his wealth; but of himself, so so.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?

Luc. Lord, Lord! to see what folly reigns in us!

Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon, dear madam: tis a passing shame

That I, an unworthy body as I am,

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?

Luc. Then thus: of many good I think him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason;

I think him so because I think him so.

Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why he, of all the rest, hath never moved me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Luc. Fire that's closest keep burn's most of all.

Jul. They do not love that do not show their love.

Luc. O, they love least that men know their love.
Jul. I would I knew his mind.
Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.
Jul. 'To Julia.' Say, from whom?
Luc. That the contents will show.
Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee?
Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Proteus.
He would have given it you; but I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray.
Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker!
Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?
To whisper and conspire against my youth?
Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth
And you an officer fit for the place.
There, take the paper: see it be return'd;
Or else return no more into my sight.
Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate.
Jul. Will ye be gone?
Luc. That you may ruminate.
[Exit.
Jul. And yet I would I had o'erlooked the letter:
It were a shame to call her back again
And pray her to a fault for which I chid her.
What a fool is she, that knows I am a maid,
And would not force the letter to my view!
Since maids, in modesty, say 'no' to that
Which they would have the profferer construe 'ay.'
Fie, fie, how wayward is this foolish love
That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse
And presently all humbled kiss the rod!
How chirfully I chid Lucetta hence,
When willingly I would have had her here!
How angrily I taught my brow to frown,
When inward joy enforced my heart to smile!
My penance is to call Lucetta back
And ask remission for my folly past.
What ho! Lucetta!

Re-enter Lucetta.
Luc. What would your ladyship?
Jul. Is't near dinner-time?
Luc. I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat
And not upon your maid.
Jul. What is't that you took up so gingerly?
Luc. Nothing.
Jul. Why didst thou stoop, then?
Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall.
Jul. And is that paper nothing?
Luc. Nothing concerning me.
Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.
Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,
Unless it have a false interpreter.
Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.
Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune.
Give me a note: your ladyship can set.
Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible.
Best sing it to the tune of 'Light o' love.'
Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.
Jul. Heavy! belie it hath some burden then?
Luc. Ay, and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Re-enter Lucetta.
Luc. Madam,
Dinner is ready, and your father stays.
Jul. Well, let us go.
Luc. What, shall these papers like tell-tales here?
Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.
Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.
Jul. I see you have a month's mind to them.
Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;
I see things two, although you judge I wink.
Jul. Come, come; will't please you go?
[Exeunt.}
Scene III. The same. Antonio's house.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that Wherewith my brother held you in the closet?
Pan. 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.
Ant. Why, what of him?
Pan. He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some to discover islands far away;
Some to the studious universities.
For any or for all these exercises
He said that Proteus your son was meet,
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.
Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me about Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider'd well his loss of time
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutor'd in the world:
Experience is by industry achieved
And perfected by the swift course of time.
Then tell me, whither were I best to send him?
Pan. I think your lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the emperor in his royal court.
Ant. I know it well.
Pan. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him thither:
There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,
And be in eye of every exercise
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.
Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advis'd:
And that thou mayst perceive how well I like it
The execution of it shall make known.
Even with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.
Pan. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso
With other gentlemen of good esteem
Are journeying to salute the emperor
And to commend their service to his will.
Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go:
And, in good time, I now will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. There is no news, my lord, but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well beloved
And daily graced by the emperor:
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how stand you affeeted to his wish?
Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will 61
And not depending on his friendly wish.
Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end.
I am resolved that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentine in the emperor's court:
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go:
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.
Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:
Please you, deliberate a day or two.
Ant. Look, what thou want'st shall be sent after thee:
No more of stay! to-morrow thou must go.
Come on, Panthino: you shall be employ'd
To hasten on his expedition.

[Exeunt Ant. and Pan.

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire for fear of burning.
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to show my father Julia's letter, 80
Lest he should take exceptions to my love;
And with the vantage of mine own excuse
Hath he excepted most against my love.
O, how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day,
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away!

Re-enter Panthino.

Pan. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:
He is in haste; therefore, I pray you, go. 81
Pro. Why, this it is: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answers 'no.'

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene I. Milan. The Duke's palace.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.
Val. Not mine: my gloves are on.
Speed. Why, then, this may be yours, for this is but one.
Val. Ha! let me see: ay, give it me, it's mine:
Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine!
Ah, Silvia, Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! Madam Silvia!
Val. How now, sirrah?
Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.
Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?
Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook. 10
Val. Well, you'll be still too forward.
Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.
Val. Go to, sir: tell me, do you know Madam Silvia?
Speed. She that your worship loves?
Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?
Speed. Marry, by these special marks: first, you have learned, like Sir Proteus, to wreath your arms, like a malecontent; to relish a love-song, like a robin-redbreast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a schoolboy that had lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak pulling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to row as a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you looked sadly, it was for want of money: and now you are metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

\[ Val. \] Are all these things perceived in me?

\[ Speed. \] They are all perceived without ye.

\[ Val. \] Without me? they cannot.

\[ Speed. \] Without you? nay, that's certain, for, without you were so simple, none else would: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you and shine through you like the water in an urinal, that not an eye that sees you but is a physician to comment on your madly.

\[ Val. \] But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

\[ Speed. \] She that you gaze on so as she sits at supper?

\[ Val. \] Hast thou observed that? even she, I mean.

\[ Speed. \] Why, sir, I know her not.

\[ Val. \] Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet knowest she not?

\[ Speed. \] Is she not hard-favoured, sir?

\[ Val. \] Not so fair, boy, as well-favoured.

\[ Speed. \] Sir, I know that well enough.

\[ Val. \] What dost thou know?

\[ Speed. \] That she is not so fair as, of you, well-favoured.

\[ Val. \] I mean that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.

\[ Speed. \] That's because the one is painted and the other out of all count.

\[ Val. \] How painted? and how out of count?

\[ Speed. \] Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

\[ Val. \] How esteemest thou me? I account of her beauty.

\[ Speed. \] You never saw her since she was deformed.

\[ Val. \] How long hath she been deformed?

\[ Speed. \] Ever since you loved her.

\[ Val. \] I have loved her ever since I saw her; and still I see her beautiful.

\[ Speed. \] If you love her, you cannot see her.

\[ Val. \] Why?

\[ Speed. \] Because Love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have when you chid at Sir Proteus for going unguarded!

\[ Val. \] What should I see then?

\[ Speed. \] Your own present folly and her passing deformity: the he, being in love, could not see to gather his hose, and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

\[ Val. \] Belike, boy, then, you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

\[ Speed. \] True, sir; I was in love with my bed:

I thank you, you swung me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

\[ Val. \] In conclusion, I stand affected to her, go Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.

\[ Val. \] Last night she enjoined me to write some lines to one she loves.

\[ Speed. \] And have you?

\[ Val. \] I have.

\[ Speed. \] Are they not lamely writ?

\[ Val. \] No, boy, but as well as I can do them.

Peace! here she comes.

\[ Speed. [Aside] \] O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! Now will he interpret to her.

Enter Silvia.

\[ Val. \] Madam and mistress, a thousand good-mornings.

\[ Speed. [Aside] \] O, give ye good even! here's a million of manners.

\[ Sil. \] Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.

\[ Speed. [Aside] \] He should give her interest, and she gives it him.

\[ Val. \] As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter Unto the secret nameless friend of yours;

Which I was much unwilling to proceed in But for my duty to your ladyship.

\[ Sil. \] I thank you, gentle servant: 'tis very clerkeiy done.

\[ Val. \] Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off;

For being ignorant to whom it goes

I writ at random, very doubtful.

\[ Sil. \] Perchance you think too much of so much pains?

\[ Val. \] No, madam; so it stand you, I will write, Please you command, a thousand times as much;

And yet—

\[ Sil. \] A pretty period! Well, I guess the sequel;

And yet I will not name it; and yet I care not; And yet take this again; and yet I thank you, Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

\[ Speed. [Aside] \] And yet you will; and yet another 'yet."

\[ Val. \] What means your ladyship? do you not like it?

\[ Sil. \] Yes, yes; the lines are very quaintly writ; But since unwillingly, take them again.

Nay, take them.

\[ Val. \] Madam, they are for you.

\[ Sil. \] Ay, ay; you writ them, sir, at my request; But I will none of them; they are for you.

I would have had them writ more movingly.

\[ Val. \] Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.

\[ Sil. \] And when it's writ, for my sake read it over,

And if it please you, so; if not, why, so.

\[ Val. \] If it please me, madam, what then?

\[ Sil. \] Why, if it please you, take it for your labour;

And so, good morrow, servant. [Exit.

\[ Speed. \] O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible, As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple!

My master sues to her, and she hath taught her suitor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor.
O excellent device! it was there ever heard a better,
That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?
Val. How now, sir? what are you reasoning with yourself?
Speed. Nay, I was rhyming: 'tis you that have the reason. 150
Val. To do what?
Speed. To be a spokesman for Madam Silvia.
Val. To whom?
Speed. To yourself: why, she wooes you by a figure.
Val. What figure?
Speed. By a letter, I should say.
Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?
Speed. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?
Val. No, believe me.
Speed. No believing you, indeed, sir. But did you perceive her earnest?
Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.
Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.
Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.
Speed. And that letter hath she delivered, and there an end.
Val. I would it were no worse.
Speed. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well: 170
For often have you writ to her, and she, in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again
reply;
Or fearing else some messenger that might her mind discover,
Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it.
Why muse you, sir? 'tis dinner-time.
Val. I have dined.
Speed. Ay, but he Taken, sir; though the channeled Love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my viuuals and would fain have meat. O, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved. [Exit.

SCENE II. Verona. Julia's house.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.
Jul. I must, where is no remedy.
Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.
Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.
Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.
[Giving a ring. Pro. Why, then, we'll make exchange; here, take you this.
Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.
Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy;
And when that hour o'erslips me in the day
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake, 20
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance
Torment me for my love's forgetfulness!
My father stays my coming; answer not;
The tide is now: nay, not thy tide of tears;
That tide will stay me longer than I should.
Julia, farewell! [Exit Julia.

What, gone without a word?

Ay, so true love should do: it cannot speak;
For truth hath better deeds than words to grace it.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pan. Sir Proteus, you are stay'd for.
Pro. Go; I come, I come. 20

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. The same. A street.

Enter LAUNCE, leading a dog.

Launce. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault. I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with Sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think Crab my dog be the sourest-natured dog that lives: my father weeping, my father wailing, my sister cries, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted our shed one tear: he is a stone, a very pebble stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog: a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandson, having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it.
This shoe is my father: no, this left shoe is my father: no, no, this left shoe is my mother:
nay, that cannot be so neither: yes, it is so, it is so, it hath the worser sole. This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father; a vengeance on't! there 'tis: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily and as small as a wand: this hat is Nan, our maid: I am the dog: no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog—Oh! the dog is me, and I am myself: ay, so, so. Now come I to my father;
Father, your blessing; now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping: now should I kiss my father; now should I kiss my mother; now should I kiss my sister; mark the moan she makes. Now the dog all this while sheds not a tear nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pan. Launce, away, away, aboard! thy master is shipped and thou art to post after with oars.
What's the matter? why weepest thou, man?
Away, ass! you'll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Launce. It is no matter if the tied were lost;
for it is the unkindest tied that ever any man tied.

Pan. What's the unkindest tide?

Launce. Why, that's tied here, Crab, my dog.

Pan. Tut, man, I mean thou'lt lose the flood, and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage, and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master, and,
in losing thy master, lose thy service, and, in losing thy service,—Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Launce. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Pan. Where should I lose my tongue?

Launce. In thy tale.

Pan. In thy tale!

Enter SIlVIA, VALENTINE, THURIO, and Speed.

Sil. Servant!
Val. Mistress?
Speed. Master, Sir Thurio frowns on you.
Val. Ay, boy, it's for love.
Speed. Not of you.
Val. Of my mistress, then.
Speed. 'Twere good you knocked him. [Exit.]
Sil. Servant, you are sad.
Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.
Thu. Seem you that you are not?
Val. Haply I do.
Thu. So do counterfeit.
Val. So do you.
Thu. What seem I that I am not?
Sil. Wise.
Thu. What instance of the contrary?
Val. Your folly.
Thu. And how quote you my folly?
Val. I quote it in your jerkin.
Thu. My jerkin is a doublet.
Val. Well, then, I'll double your folly.
Thu. How?
Sil. What, angry, Sir Thurio! do you change colour?
Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of chameleon.
Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood than live in your air.
Val. You have said, sir.
Thu. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time.
Val. I know it well, sir; you always end ere you begin.
Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.
Val. 'Tis indeed, madam; we thank the giver.
Sil. Who is that, servant?
Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire. Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.
Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.
Val. I know it well, sir; you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers, for it appears, by their bawd livories, that they live by your bare words.
Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more; here comes my father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset. Sir Valentine, your father's in good health: What say you to a letter from your friends? Of much good news?
To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant

To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability:

Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of; nothing else.

Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed:

Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Pro. I'll die on him that says so but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. That you are worthless.

Re-enter Thurio.

Thu. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you.

Sil. I wait upon his pleasure. Come, Sir Thurio,

Go with me. Once more, new servant, welcome:

I'll leave you to confer of home affairs;

When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship,

[Exeunt Silvia and Thurio.

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady? and how thrives your love?

Pro. O tell me, tales of love were wont to weary you;

I know you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that love is alter'd now:

I have done penance for contemning Love,

Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me

With bitter fasts, with penitential groans,

With nightly tears and daily heart-sore sighs;

For in revenge of my contempt of love,

Love hath chased sleep from my enthralled eyes

And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow.

O gentle Proteus, Love's a mighty lord

And hath so humbled me as I confess

There is no woe to his correction

No tears to his service, no such joy on earth.

Now no discourse, except it be of love;

Now can I break my fast, dine, sup and sleep,

Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye.

Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises.

Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills,

And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,

Yet let her be a principality,

Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any;

Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too:

She shall be dignified with this high honour—
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss 160
And, of so great a favour growing proud,
Disdain to root the summer-swelling flower
And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can is nothing
To her whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine own,

And I as rich in having such a jewel
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl, 170
The water nectar and the rocks pure gold.
Forgive me that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes
Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone along with her, and I must after,
For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you?

Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd: nay, more,

Our marriage-hour,

With all the cunning manner of our flight,

Determined of; how I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords, and all the means
Plotted 'gainst all other; for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,

In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. No, but before: I shall inquire you forth;

I must unto the road, to disembar

Some necessaries that I needs must use,

And then I'll presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will. [Exit Valentine.

Even as one heat another heat expels,

Or as one nail by strength drives out another,

So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten:

'Tis it mine, or Valentine's praise,

Her true perfection, or my false transgression,

That makes me reasonless to reason thus?

She is fair; and so is Julia that I love—

Tis so, but now my love is thaw'd:

Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,

Bears no impression of the thing it was.

Methinks my zeal to Valentine is cold,

And that I love him not as I was wont.

O, but I love his lady too much;

And that's the reason I love him so little.

How shall I dote on her with more advice,

That thus without advice begin to love her!

'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,

And that hath dazzled my reason's light;

But when I look on her perfection,

There is no reason but I shall be blind.

If I can check my error love, I will;

If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

[Exit.

SCENE V. The same. A street.

Enter Speed and Launce severally.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan!

Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this always, that a man is never undone till he be hanged, nor never welcome to a place till some certain shot be paid and the hostess say 'Welcome.'

Launce. Come on, you madcap, I'll to the alehouse with you presently; where, for one shot of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with Madam Julia?

Laurence. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. How then? shall he marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why, then, how stands the matter with them?

Laurence. Marry, thus; when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou! I understand thee not.

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not! My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou sayest?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too; look thee, I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Launce. Why, stand-under and stand-under is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match?

Launce. Ask my dog: if he say ay, it will; if he say no, it will; if he shake his tail and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how sayest thou, that my master is become a notable lover?

Launce. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Launce. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistakest me.

Launce. Why, fool, I meant not thee; I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt, go with me to the alehouse; if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service. [Exeunt.]
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enamell'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage,
And so by many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wild ocean.
Then let me go and hinder not my course;
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I'll rest, as after much turmoil
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.
Luc. But in what habit will you go along?
Jul. Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men:
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseech some well-reputed page.
Luc. Why, then, your ladyship must cut your hair.
Jul. No, girl; I'll knit it up in silken strings
With twenty odd-conceited true-love's knots.
To make the fantastick may become a youth
Of greater time than I shall show to be.
Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?
Jul. That fits as well as 'Tell me, good my lord,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?'
Why even what fashion thou best likest, Lucetta.
Luc. You must needs have them with a codpiece,
Madam.
Jul. Out, out, Lucetta! that will ill favour'd.
Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin,
Unless you have a codpiece to stick pins on.
Jul. Lucetta, as thou lovest me, let me have
What thou thinkest meet and is most mannerly.
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unstaide a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandaliz'd.
Luc. If you think so, then stay at home and love not.
Jul. Nay, that I will not.
Luc. Then never dream on inframy, but go.
If Proteus like your journey when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd when you are gone:
I fear me, he will scarce be pleased withal.
Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears
And instances of infinite love
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.
Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.
Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect!
But truer stars did govern Proteus' birth;
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles,
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate,
His tears pure messengers sent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth.
Luc. Pray heaven he prove so, when you come to him!
Jul. Now, as thou lovest me, do him not that wrong.
To bear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only deserve my love by loving him:
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my long journey.

All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lads, my reputation;
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come, answer not, but to it presently!
I am impatient of my tarryance.

ACT III.

SCENE I. Milan. The Duke's palace.

Enter DUKE, THURIO, and PROTEUS.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile;
We have some secrets to confer about.

[Exit Thu.

Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover
The law of friendship bids me to conceal;
But when I call to mind your gracious favours
Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.
Know, worthy prince, Sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter:
Myself am one made privy to the plot.
I know you have determined to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be stol'n away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus, for my duty's sake, I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended drift
Than, by concealing it, heap on your head
A pack of sorrows which would press you down,
Being unprepared, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest

Which to requite, command me while I live.
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judged me fast asleep,
And oftentimes have purposely to forbid
Sir Valentine her company and my court;
But fearing lest my jealous aim might err
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
And that it was that I ever yet have shun'd,
I gave him gentle looks, whereby to find
That which thyself hast now disclosed to me.
And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof myself have ever kept;
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devised a
How he her chamber-window will ascend
And with a corded ladder fetch her down;
For which the youthful lover now is gone
And this way comes he with it presently;
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my Lord, do it so cunningly
That my discovery be not aimed at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretense.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my Lord; Sir Valentine is coming.

[Exit.

Enter VALENTINE.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?
Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.
Duke. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenour of them doth but signify
My health and happy being at your court.
Duke. Nay then, no matter; stay with me awhile;
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
Tis not unknown to thee that I have sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio to my daughter.
Val. I know it well, my Lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth and qualities
Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter:
Cannot your Grace win her to fancy him?
Duke. No, trust me; she is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty,
Neither regarding that she is my child
Nor fearing me as if I were her father;
And may I say to thee, this pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her;
And, where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherished by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolved to take a wife
And turn her out to who will take her in:
Then let her beauty be her wedding-dower;
For me and my possessions she esteems not.
Val. What would your Grace have me to do
in this? 80
Duke. 'Tis there a lady in Verona here
Whom I affect; but she is nice and coy
And nought esteems my aged eloquence:
Now therefore would I have thee to my tutor—
For long ago I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is changed—
How and which way I may bestow myself
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.
Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels often in their silent kind
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.
Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.
Val. A woman sometimes scorches what best contents her.
Send her another; never give her o'er;
For scorn at first makes after-love the more.
If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you:
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone;
For why, the fools are mad, if left alone.
Take no refusal, whatever she doth say;
For 'get you gone,' she doth not mean 'away!'
Flatter and praise, commend, extoll their graces;
Though 'e'er so black, say they have angels' faces.
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.
Duke. But she I mean is promised by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of worth,
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.
Val. Why, then, I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock'd and keys kept safe,
That no man hath recourse to her by night.
Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?
Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,
And built so shuffling that one cannot climb it
Without apparent hazard of his life.
Val. Why then, a ladder quaintly made of cords,
To cast up, with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hero's tower,
So bold Leander would venture it.
Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder.
Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me that.
Duke. This very night; for Love is like a child,
That longs for every thing that he can come by.
Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.
Duke. But, hark thee; I will go to her alone:
How shall I best convey the ladder thither?
Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak that is of any length.
Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn?
Val. Ay, my good lord.
Duke. Then let me see thy cloak:
I'll get me one of such another length.
Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.
Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?
I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me.
What letter is this same? What's here? 'To Silvia!'
And here an engine fit for my proceeding.
I'll be so bold to break the seal for once. [Reads.
My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly,
And slaves they are to me that send them flying:
O, could their master come and go as lightly,
Himself would lodge where senseless they are lying!
My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them:
While I, their king, that hither them importune,
Do curse the grace that with such grace hath bless'd them,
Because myself do want my servants' fortune:
I curse myself, for they are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be.'
What's here?
'Tis Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee.'
'Tis so: and here's the ladder for the purpose.
Why, Phaethon,—for thou art Merops' son,—
Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car
And with thy daring folly burn the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?
Go, base intruder! overweening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates,
And think my patience, more than thy desert,
Is privilege for thy departure hence:
Thank me for this more than for all the favours
Which all too much I have bestow'd on thee.
But if thou linger in my territories
Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer'd to the doom—
Which, unreversed, stands in effectual force—
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears:—
Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd;—
With them, upon her knees, her humble self;—
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became them
As if but now they waxed pale for woe:—
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire;—
But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.
Besides, her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of bad'ring there.
Val. No more: unless the next word that thou speak'st
Have some malignant power upon my life:
If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless doleour.
Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,
And study help for that which thou lament'st.
Time is the nurse and breeder of all good.
Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love;
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life.
Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that
And manage it against despairing thoughts.
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence;
Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd:
Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.
The time now serves not to expostulate:
Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate;
And, ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concern thy love-affairs.
As thou lovest Silvia, though not for thyself,
Regard thy danger, and along with me!
Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest—my boy,
Did him make haste and meet me at the Northgate.
Val. O my dear Silvia! Hapless Valentine! 260
Pro. [Exeunt Val. and Pro.]
Val. I am but a fool, look you; and yet
I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave: but that's all one, if he be but one knave.
He lives not now that knows me to be in love;
yet I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me; nor who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman; but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milkmaid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossip; yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages.
She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel; which is much in a bare Christian. [Pulling out a paper.] Here is the cate-log of her condition. 'Imprimis: She can fetch and carry. 'Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore she is better than a jade. 'Item: She can milk; look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter SPEED.

Speed. How now, Signior Launce! what news with your mastership?
Scene I.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

_Launce._ With my master's ship? why, it is at sea.

_Speed._ Well, your old vice still; mistake the word. What news, then, in your paper?

_Launce._ The blackest news that ever thou hearest.

_Speed._ Why, man, how black?

_Launce._ Why, as black as ink.

_Speed._ Let me read them.

_Launce._ 'Fie on thee, jolthead! thou canst not read.

_Speed._ Thou liest: I can.

_Launce._ I will try thee. Tell me this: who begot thee?

_Speed._ Marry, the son of my grandfather.

_Launce._ O illiterate loiterer! it was the son of thy grandmother: this proves thou canst not read.

_Speed._ Come, fool, come; try me in thy paper.

_Launce._ There; and Saint Nicholas be thy speed! _[Reads]_ 'Imprimis: She can milk.'

_Speed._ Ay, that she can.

_Launce._ 'Item: She brews good ale.'

_Speed._ And thereof comes the proverb: 'Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale.'

_Launce._ 'Item: She can sew.'

_Speed._ That's as much as to say, Can she so?

_Launce._ 'Item: She can knit.'

_Launce._ What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock?

_Speed._ 'Item: She can wash and scour.'

_Launce._ A special virtue; for then she need not be washed and scoured.

_Speed._ 'Item: She can spin.'

_Launce._ Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

_Speed._ 'Item: She hath many nameless virtues.'

_Launce._ That's as much as to say, bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers and therefore have no names.

_Speed._ 'Here follow her virtues.'

_Launce._ Close at the heels of her virtues.

_Speed._ 'Item: She is not to be kissed fasting, in respect of her breath.'

_Launce._ Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast. _Read on._

_Speed._ 'Item: She hath a sweet mouth.'

_Launce._ That makes amends for her sour breath.

_Speed._ 'Item: She doth talk in her sleep.'

_Launce._ It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in her talk.

_Speed._ 'Item: She is slow in words.'

_Launce._ O villain, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue; I pray thee, out with't, and place it for her chief virtue.

_Speed._ 'Item: She is proud.'

_Launce._ Out with that too; it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.

_Speed._ 'Item: She hath no teeth.'

_Launce._ I care not for that neither, because I love crusts.

_Speed._ 'Item: She is curst.'

_Launce._ Well, the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

_Speed._ 'Item: She will often praise her liquor.'

_Launce._ If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.

_Speed._ 'Item: She is too liberal.'

_Launce._ Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ down she is slow of: of her purse she shall not, for that I'll keep shut: now, of another thing she may, and that cannot I help. Well, proceed.

_Speed._ 'Item: She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.'

_Launce._ Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article. Rehearse that once more.

_Speed._ 'Item: She hath more hair than wit,—

_Launce._ More hair than wit? It may be; I'll prove it. The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit is more than the wit, for the greater hides the less. What's next?

_Speed._ 'And more faults than hairs,—

_Launce._ That's monstrous: O, that that were out!

_Speed._ 'And more wealth than faults.'

_Launce._ Why, that word makes the faults gracious. Well, I'll have her: and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible.—

_Speed._ What then?

_Launce._ Why, then will I tell thee—that thy master stays for thee at the North-gate.

_Speed._ For me?

_Launce._ For thee! ay, who art thou? he hath stayed for a better man than thee.

_Speed._ And must I go to him?

_Launce._ Thou must run to him, for thou hast stayed so long that going will scarce serve the turn.

_Speed._ Why didst not tell me sooner? pox of your love-letters! _[Exit._

_Launce._ Now will he be swung for reading my letter: an unmannerly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets! I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction. _[Exit._

Scene II.

_The same._ The Duke's palace.

_Enter Duke and Thurio._

_Duke._ Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love you, Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight. _Thurio._ Since his exile she hath despaired of most, Forsworn my company and rail'd at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her. _Duke._ This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat Dissolves to water and doth lose his form. A little time will melt her frozen thoughts And worthless Valentine shall be forgot. _Enter Proteus._

_Duke._ How now, Sir Proteus! Is your countryman According to our proclamation gone? _Proteus._ Gone, my good lord. _Duke._ My daughter takes his going grievously, _Proteus._ A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.
Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so. Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee—For thou hast shown some sign of good desert—Makes me the better to confer with thee. Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace Let me not live to look upon your grace. 21 Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect The match between Sir Thurio and my daughter. Pro. I do, my lord. Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant How she opposes her against my will. Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here. Duke. Ay, and perversely she perseveres so. What might we do to make the girl forget The love of Valentine and love Sir Thurio? 30 Pro. The best way is to slander Valentine With falsehood, cowardice and poor descent, Three things that women highly hold in hate. Duke. Ay, but she'll think that it is spoke in hate. Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it: These words must with circumstance be spoken By one whom she esteemeth as his friend. Duke. Then you must undertake to slander him. Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loath to do: 'Tis an ill office for a gentleman, especially against his very friend. Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage him, Your slander never can endanger him; Therefore the office is indifferent, being entreated to it by your friend. Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord: if I can do it By oath that I can speak in his dispraise, She shall not long continue love to him. But say this weed her love from Valentine, It follows not that she will lose Sir Thurio. 50 Thu. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him, Least it should ravel and be good to none, You must provide to bottom it on me; Which must be done by praising me as much As you in worth dispraise Sir Valentine. Duke. And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this kind, Because we know, on Valentine's report, You are already Love's firm votary And cannot soon revolt and change your mind. Upon this warrant shall you have access Where you with Silvia may confer at large; For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy, And, for your friend's sake, will be glad of you; Where you may temper her by your persuasion To hate young Valentine and love my friend. Pro. As much as I can do, I will effect: But you, Sir Thurio, are not sharp enough; You must lay lime to tangle her desires By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes Should be full- fraught with serviceable vows. 70 Duke. Ay. Much is the force of heaven-bred poesy. Pro. Say that upon the altar of her beauty You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart: Write till your ink be dry, and with your tears Moist it again, and frame some feeling line That may discover such integrity: For Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews, Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones, Makeigers tame and huge leviathans 80 Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands. After your dire-lamenting elegies, Visit by night your lady's chamber-window With some sweet concert; to their instruments Tune a deploring dump: the night's dead silence Will well become such sweet-complaining grievance. This, or else nothing, will inherit her. Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in love. Thu. And thy advice this night I'll put in practice. Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver, 90 Let us into the city presently To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in music. I have a sonnet that will serve the turn To give the onset to thy good advice. Duke. About it, gentlemen! Pro. We'll wait upon your grace till after supper, And afterward determine our proceedings. Duke. Even now about it! I will pardon you. Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The frontiers of Mantua. A forest. Enter certain Outlaws. First Out. Fellows, stand fast; I see a passenger. Sec. Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em. Enter Valentine and Speed. Third Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about ye; If not, we'll make you sit and rifle you. Speed. Sir, we are undone; these are the villains That all the travellers do fear so much. Val. My friends,—First Out. That's not so, sir: we are your enemies. Sec. Out. Peace! we'll hear him. Third Out. Ay, by my beard, we stick, for he's a proper man. 10 Val. Then know that I have little wealth to lose: A man I am cross'd with adversity; My riches are these poor habiliments, Of which if you should here disfurnish me, You take the sum and substance that I have. Sec. Out. Whither travel you? Val. To Verona. First Out. Whence came you? Val. From Milan. Third Out. Have you long sojourned there? Val. Some sixteen months, and longer might have stay'd, If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. First Out. What, were you banish'd thence? Val. I was. Sec. Out. For what offence? Val. For that which now torments me to rehearse:
Scene I.]

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

I kill’d a man, whose death I much repent; But yet I slew him manfully in fight, Without false vantage or base treachery. First Out. Why, ne’er repent it, if it were done so. But were you banish’d for so small a fault? Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom. Sec. Out. Have you the tongues? Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy. Or else I often had been miserable. Third Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood’s fat friar, This fellow were a king for our wild faction! First Out. We’ll have him. Sirs, a word. Speed. Masters, be one of them; it’s an honourable kind of thievery. Val. Peace, villain! Sec. Out. Tell us this: have you any thing to take to? Val. Nothing but my fortune. Third Out. Know, then, that some of us are gentlemen, Such as the fury of ungovern’d youth Thrust from the company of awful men: Myself was from Verona banish’d For practising to steal away a lady, An heir, and near allied unto the duke. Sec. Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman, Who, in my mood, I stabb’d unto the heart. First Out. And I for such like petty crimes as these. But to the purpose—for we cite our faults, That they may hold excus’d our lawless lives; And partly, seeing you are beautified With goodly shape and by your own report A linguist and a man of such perfection As we do in our quality much want— Sec. Out. Indeed, because you are a banish’d man, Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you: Are you content to be our general? To make a virtue of necessity And live, as we do, in this wilderness? Third Out. What say’st thou? wilt thou be of our cons’rt? Say ay, and be the captain of us all: We’ll do thee homage and be ruled by thee, Love thee as our commander and our king. First Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest. Sec. Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer’d. Val. I take your offer and will live with you, Provided that you do no outrages On silly women or poor passengers. Third Out. No, we detest such vile base practices. Come, go with us, we’ll bring thee to our crews, And show thee all the treasure we have got; Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Milan. Outside the Duke’s palace, under Silvia’s chamber.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine And now I must be as unjust to Thurio. Under the colour of commending him, I have access my own love to prefer; But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy, To be corrupted with my worthless gifts. When I protest true loyalty to her, She twits me with my falsehood to my friend; When to her beauty I commend my vows, She bids me think how I have been forsworn In breaking faith with Julia whom I loved: And notwithstanding all her sudden quips, The least whereof would quell a lover’s hope, Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love, The more it grows and fawneth on her sill. But here comes Thurio: now must we to her window, And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Thurio and Musicians.

Enter, at a distance. Host, and Julia in boy’s clothes.

Host. Now, my young guest, methinks you’re allycholly: I pray you, why is it? Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry. Host. Come, we’ll have you merry: I’ll bring you where you shall hear music and see the gentleman that you asked for.

Song.

Who is Silvia? what is she, That all our swains commend her? 40 Holy, fair and wise is she; The heaven such grace did lend her, That she might admired be. Is she kind as she is fair? For beauty lives with kindness. Love doth to her eyes repair, To help him of his blindness, And, being help’d, inhabits there. Then to Silvia let us sing, That Silvia is excelling; She excels each mortal thing Upon the dull earth dwelling: To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you sadder than you were before? How do you, man? the music likes you not. Jul. You mistake; the musician likes me not.
Host. Why, my pretty youth?
Jul. He plays false, father.
Host. How? out of tune on the strings? 60
Jul. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.
Host. You have a quick ear.
Jul. Ay, I would I were deaf; it makes me have a slow heart.
Host. I perceive you delight not in music.
Jul. Not a whist, when it jars so.
Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!
Jul. Ay, that change is the spite.
Host. You would have them always play but one thing?
Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, host, doth this Sir Proteus that we talk on Often resort unto this gentlewoman?
Host. I tell you what, Launce, his man, told me: he loved her out of all nick.
Jul. Where is Launce?
Host. Gone to seek his dog; which to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.
Host. Sir Thurio, fear not you: I will so please That you shall say my cunning drift excels.
Thu. Where meet we?
Pro. At Saint Gregory's well.
Thu. Farewell.
[Exeunt Thu. and Musicians.

Enter Silvia above.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen. Who is that that spake?
Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth, You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.
Sil. What's your will?
Pro. That I may compass yours.
Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this: That presently you lie you home to bed. You subscribe, my lord, false, disloyal man!
Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless, To be seduced by thy flattery,
That hast deceived so many with thy vows? Return, return, and make thy love amends.

For me, by this pale queen of night I swear, 100
I am so far from granting thy request
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit, And by and by intend to chide myself
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady; But she is dead.
Jul. [Aside] 'Twere false, if I should speak it; For I am sure she is not buried.
Sil. Say that she be; yet Valentine thy friend Survives to whom, thyself art witness, 110
I am betroth'd: and art thou not ashamed To wrong him with thy importunity?
Pro. I likewise hear that Valentine is dead.
Sil. And so suppose am I; for in his grave
Assure thyself my love is buried.
Pro. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth.
Sil. Go to thy lady's grave and call hers thence,
Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.
Jul. [Aside] He heard not that.
Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate, Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love, 121
The picture that is hanging in your chamber; To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh andweep: For since the substance of your perfect self Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow will I make true love.
Jul. [Aside] If 'twere a substance, you would, sure, deceive it,
And make it but a shadow, as I am.
Sil. I am very loath to be your idol, sir; But since your falsehood shall become you well To worship shadows and adore false shapes, 133
Send to me in the morning and I'll send it: And so, good rest.
Pro. As wretches have o'ernight
That wait for execution in the morn.
[Exeunt Pro. and Sil. severally.
Jul. Host, will you go?
Host. By my halidom, I was fast asleep.
Jul. Pray you, where lies Sir Proteus?
Host. Marry, at my house. Trust me, I think it is almost day.
Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night That e'er I watch'd and the most heaviest. 141
[Exeunt.

Scene III. The same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that Madam Silvia Entreated me to call and know her mind: There's some great matter she'd employ me in. Madam, madam!

Enter Silvia above.

Sil. Who calls?
Egl. Your servant and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship's command.
Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good morrow.
Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself: According to your ladyship's impose, I am thus early come to know what service It is your pleasure to command me in. 10
Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman— Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not— Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd: Thou art not ignorant what dear good will I bear unto the banish'd Valentine. Nor how my father would enforce me marry Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors. Thyself hast loved; and I have heard thee say No grief did ever come so near thy heart As when thy lady and thy true love died, 20
Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity. Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine, To Mantua, where I hear he makes abode; And, for the ways are dangerous to pass, I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour, But think upon my grief, a lady's grief, And on the justice of my dying hence, To keep me from a most unholy match, 30
Which heaven and fortune still rewards with plagues.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Jul. In what you please: I'll do what I can.
Pro. I hope thou wilt. [To Launce] How now, you whoreson peasant!
Where have you been these two days loitering?
Launce. Marry, sir, I carried Mistress Silvia down the dog you bade me.
Pro. And what says she to my little jewel?
Launce. Marry, she says your dog was a cur, and tells you currish thanks is good enough for such a present.
Pro. But she received my dog?
Launce. No, indeed, did she not: here have
I brought him back again.
Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?
Launce. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by the hangman boys in the marketplace: and then I offered her mine own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Go get thee hence, and find my dog again, or ne'er return again into my sight.
Away, I say! stay'st thou to vex me here?
[Exit Launce.
A slave, that still an end turns me to shame!
Sebastian, I have entertain'd thee,
Partly that I have need of such a youth
That can with some discretion do my business, 70
For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish stout,
But chiefly for thy face and thy behaviour,
Which, if my augury deceive me not,
Witness good bringing up, fortune and truth:
Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently and take this ring with thee,
Deliver it to Madam Silvia;
She loved me well deliver'd it to me.
Jul. It seems you loved not her, to leave her token.
She is dead, belike?
Pro. Not so; I think she lives. 80
Jul. Alas!
Pro. Why dost thou cry 'alas'?
Jul. I cannot choose
But pity her.
Pro. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?
Jul. Because methinks that she loved you
as well
As you do love your lady Silvia:
She dreams on him that has forgot her love;
You dote on her that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity love should be so contrary;
And thinking on it makes me cry 'alas'!
Pro. Well, give her that ring and therewithal
This letter. That's her chamber. Tell my lady
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, be home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me, sad and solitary. [Exit.
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him
That with his very heart despiseth me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will;
And now am I, unhappy messenger,
To plead for that which I would not obtain,

Enter Proteus and Julia.
Pro. When shall I see thee? I like thee well
As I would serve thee in some service presently.

Scene III.

I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
To bear me company and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.
Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances;
Which since I know they virtuously are placed,
I give consent to go along with you,
Recking as little what befitted me
As much I wish all good befortune you.
When will you go?
Sil. This evening coming.
Egl. Where shall I meet you?
Sil. At Friar Patrick's cell,
Where I intend holy confession.
Egl. I will not fail your ladyship. Good morrow, gentle lady.
Sil. Good morrow, kind Sir Eglamour.

[Exeunt severally.

Scene IV. The same.

Enter Launce, with his Dog.
Launce. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely, 'thus I would teach a dog.' I was sent to deliver him as a present Mistress Silvia from my master; and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber but he steps me to her treacher and steals her capon's leg: O, 'tis a foul thing when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies! I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hanged for't; sure as I live, he had suffered for't: you shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table; he had not been there—bless the mark!—a pissing while, but all the chamber smelt him. 'Out with the dog!' says one: 'What cur is that?' says another: 'Whimp him out' says the third: 'Hang him up,' says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs; 'Friend,' quoth I, 'you mean to whip the dog?' 'Ay, marry, do I,' quoth he.
'You do him the more wrong,' quoth I; 'twas
I did the thing you wot of.' He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber.
How many masters would do this for his servant?
Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen; otherwise he had been executed; I have stood on the pillory for geese
he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't.
Thou thinkest not of this now.
Nay, I remember the trick you served me when I took my leave of Madam Silvia: did not I bid thee still mark me and do as I do? when didst thou see me heave up my leg and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Jul. It seems you loved not her, to leave her token.
She is dead, belike?
Pro. Not so; I think she lives. 80
Jul. Alas!
Pro. Why dost thou cry 'alas'?
Jul. I cannot choose
But pity her.
Pro. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?
Jul. Because methinks that she loved you
as well
As you do love your lady Silvia:
She dreams on him that has forgot her love;
You dote on her that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity love should be so contrary;
And thinking on it makes me cry 'alas'!
Pro. Well, give her that ring and therewithal
This letter. That's her chamber. Tell my lady
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, be home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me, sad and solitary. [Exit.
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him
That with his very heart despiseth me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.

To plead for that which I would not obtain,
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. [Act v.

To carry that which I would have refused,
To raise his faith which I would have dispraised.
I am my master's true-confirmed love;
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself. 110
Yet will I woo for him, but yet so coldly
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

Enter Silvia, attended.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with Madam Silvia.
Sil. What would you with her, if that I be she?
Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.
Sil. From whom?
Jul. From my master, Sir Proteus, madam.
Sil. O, he sends you for a picture. 120
Jul. Ay, madam.
Sil. Ursula, bring my picture there.
Go give your master this: tell him from me,
One Julia, that his changing thoughts forgot,
Would better fit his chamber than this shadow.
Sil. Madam, please you peruse this letter. —
Pardon me, madam; I have unadvised
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not:
This is the letter to your ladyship.
Sil. I pray thee, let me look on that again.
Jul. It may not be; good madam, pardon me.
Sil. There, hold! I will not look upon your master's lines:
I know the false and true, as my ofiice's proffes
And full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear his paper.
Sil. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.
Jul. The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say a thousand times
His Julia gave it him at his departure. 140
Though his false finger have profaned the ring,
Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong.
Sil. She thanks you.
Jul. What say'st thou?
Sil. I thank you, madam, that you tender her.
Poor gentlewoman! my master wrongs her much.
Jul. Dost thou know her?
Sil. Almost as well as I do know myself:
To think upon her woes I do protest
That I have wept a hundred several times. 150
Sil. Belike she thinks that Proteus hath forsook her.
Jul. I think she doth; and that's her cause of sorrow.
Sil. Is she not passing fair?
Jul. She hath been fairer, madam, than she is:
When she did think my master loved her well,
She, in her judgement, was as fair as you;
But since she did neglect her looking-glass
And threw her hair-expelling mask away,
The air hath starved the roses in her cheeks
And pinch'd the lily-ting'ure of her face, 160
That now she is become as black as I.
Sil. How tall was she?
Jul. About my stature; for at Pentecost,
When all our pageants of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in Madam Julia's gown,
Which served me as fit, by all men's judgements,
As if the garment had been made for me:

Therefore I know she is about my height.
And at that time I made her weep agood, 170
For I did play a lamentable part:
Madam, 'twas Ariadne passioning
For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight;
Which I so lively acted with my tears
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly; and would I might be dead
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow!
Sil. She is beholding to thee, gentle youth.
Alas, poor lady, desolate and left!
I weep myself to think upon thy words. 180
Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lovest her.
Farewell. [Exit Silvia, with attendants.
Jul. And she shall thank you for't, if e'er you know her.
A virtuous gentlewoman, mild and beautiful!
I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love so much.
Alas, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture: let me see; I think,
If I had such a face, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow:
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig,
Her eyes are grey as glass, and so are mine:
Ay, but her foreland's low, and mine's as high.
What should it be that he respects in her?
But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond Love were not a blinded god?
Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form,
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, loved and adored!
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statue in thy stead.
I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake,
That used me so; or else, by Jove I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unseening eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee! [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Milan. An abbey.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky;
And now it is about the very hour
That Silvia, at Friar Patrick's cell, should meet me.
She will not fail, for lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time;
So much they spur their expedition.
See where she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Lady, a happy evening!
Sil. Amen, amen! Go on, good Eglamour,
Out at the postern by the abbey-wall:
I fear I am attended by some spies. 10
Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.]
Scene II. The same. The Duke's palace.

Enter Thurio, Proteus, and Julia.

Thur. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl,
That flies her fortune when it follows her.
I'll after, more to be revenged on Eglamour
Than for the love of reckless Silvia.

[Exit. Pro.

And I will follow, more for Silvia's love
Than hate of Eglamour that goes with her.

[Exit. Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love
Than hate for Silvia that is gone for love.

[Exit.

Scene III. The frontiers of Mantua. The forest.

Enter Outlaws with Silvia.

First Out. Come, come, Be patient; we must bring you to our captain.

Sil. A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

Sec. Out. Come, bring her away.

First Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

Third Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us,
But Moyse and Valerius follow him.

Go thou with her to the west end of the wood;
There is our captain: we'll follow him that's fled;

The thicket is best; he cannot 'scape.

First Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave:
Fear not; he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine, this I endure for thee!

[Exit.

Scene IV. Another part of the forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns:
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses and record my woes.

O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless,
Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall
And leave no memory of what it was!

Repair me with thy presence, Silvia;
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain!
What halloing and what stir is this to-day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.
They love me well; yet I have much to do
To keep them from uncivil outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this comes here?

[Exit. Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you,
Though you respect not aught your servant doth,
To hazard life and rescue you from him
That would have forced your honour and your love;
Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look;
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. [Aside] How like a dream is this I see and hear?
Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile.
Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am!
Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But by my coming I have made you happy. 30
Sil. By thy approach thou makest me most unhappy.
Val. [Aside] And me, when he approacheth to your presence?
Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rathe 'than have false Proteus rescue me.
O, Heaven be judge how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul!
And full as much, for more there cannot be,
I do detest false perjur'd Proteus.
Therefore be gone; solicit me no more. 40
Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look! O,
'tis the curse in love, and still approved,
When the women cannot love where they're beloved!
Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's loved.
Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Deserved into perjury, to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou'dst two:
And that's far worse than none; better have none
Than plural faith which is too much by one:
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend! 61
Pro. In love
Who respects friend?
Sil. All men but Proteus.
Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end,
And love you 'gainst the nature of love,—force ye.
Sil. O heaven!
Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. Russian, let go that rude uncivil touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion! 81
Pro. Valentine! 61
Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love,
For such is a friend now; treacherous man!
Thou hast beguiled my hopes; nought but mine eye
Could have persuad'd me: now I dare not say
I have one friend alive; thou wouldst disprove me.
Who should be trusted, when one's own right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake. 70
The private wound is deepest: O time most accurst,
'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst!
Pro. My shame and guilt confounds me.
Forgive me, Valentine: if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I order 't here; I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.
Val. Then I am paid;
And once again I do receive thee honest.
Who by repentance is not satisfied
Is nor of heaven nor earth, for these are pleased.

By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd: 81
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Val. O me unhappy!
Pro. Look to the boy.
Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now! what's the matter? Look up; speak.
Val. O good sir, my master charged me to deliver a ring to Madam Silvia, which, out of my neglect, was never done. 90
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Val. Here 'tis; this is it.
Pro. How! let me see:
Why, this is the ring I gave to Julia.
Val. O, cry you mercy, sir, I have mistook:
This is the ring you sent to Silvia.
Pro. But how camest thou by this ring? At my depart I gave this unto Julia.
Val. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.
Pro. How! Julia! 100
Val. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And enter'd 'em deeply in her heart.
How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root! O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou ashamed that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment, if shame live
In a disguise of love:
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes than men their minds.
Pro. Than men their minds! 'tis true. O heaven! were man
But constant, he were perfect. That one error
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all the sins:
Inconstancy falls off ere it begins.
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye?
Val. Come, come, a hand from either:
Let me be blest to make this happy close;
Twere pity two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Bear witness, Heaven, I have my wish for ever.
Val. And I mine. 120

Enter Outlaws, with DUKE and THURIO.

Outlaws. A prize, a prize, a prize!
Val. Forbear, forbear, I say! it is my lord the duke.
Your grace is welcome to a man disgraced,
Banished Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine!
Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.
Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death.
Come not within the measure of my wrath;
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Verona shall not hold thee. Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch: 130
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.
Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I:
I hold her but a fool that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.
Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done
And leave her on such slight conditions.
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress’ love:
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrival’d merit,
To which I thus subscribe: Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman and well derived;
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserved her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.
I now beseech you, for your daughter’s sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it, for thine own, whate’er it be.

Val. These banish’d men that I have kept withal
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here
And let them be recall’d from their exile:
They are reformed, civil, full of good

And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevail’d; I pardon them and thee:
Dispose of them as thou know’st their deserts.
Come, let us go: we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth and rare solemnity.

Val. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
What think you of this page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he blushes.

Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying?

Val. Please you, I’ll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortune.
Come, Proteus; ’tis your penance but to hear
The story of your loves discovered:
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt.}

SHALLOW, a country justice.
SLENDER, cousin to Shallow.

SIR HUGH EVANS, a Welsh parson.

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

SHAL. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it: if he were twenty Sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

SLEN. In the county of Gloucester, justice of peace and 'Coram.'

SHAL. Ay, cousin Slender, and 'Custalorum.'

SLEN. 'Ay, and 'Rato-lorum' too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself 'Armigero,' in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, 'Armigero.'

SHAL. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

SLEN. All his successors gone before him hath done it; and all his ancestors that came after him may: they may give the dozen white luces in their coat.

SHAL. It is an old coat.

EVANS. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

SHAL. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

SLEN. I may quarter, coz.

SHAL. You may, by marrying.

EVANS. It is marring indeed, if he quarter it.

SHAL. Not a whit.

EVANS. Yes, py'r lady; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures: but that is all one. If Sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence to make atonements and compromises between you.

SHAL. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

EVANS. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot: the council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizaments in that.

SHAL. Hal! o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

EVANS. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it; and there is also another device in my prain, which peradventure prings goot discrections with it: there is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master Thomas Page, which is pretty virginity.

SLEN. Mistress Anne Page? She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.

EVANS. It is that fairy person for all the old, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of moneys, and gold and silver, is her grandisire upon his death's-bed—Got deliver to a joyful resurrections!—give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a goot motion if we leave our pribbles and prabbles, and desire a marriage between Master Abraham and Mistress Anne Page.

SLEN. Did her grandisire leave her seven hundred pound?

EVANS. Ay, and her father is make her a petter penny.

SLEN. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

EVANS. Seven hundred pounds and possibili- ties is goot gifts.

SHAL. Well, let us see honest Master Page. Is Falstaff there?

EVANS. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar as I do despise one that is false, or as I despise one that is not true. The knight, Sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door for Master Page. [Knock] What, hoa! Got pless your house here!

Page. [Within] Who's there?

Enter Page.

EVANS. Here is Got's plessing, and your friend, and Justice Shallow; and here young Master Slender, that peradventures shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Page. I am glad to see your worship's well.

I thank you, for my venison, Master Shallow. 81

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better; it was ill killed. How doth good Mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la! with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good Master Slender.

Slen. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say he was outrun on Cotsall.

Page. It could not be judged, sir.

Slen. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not. 'Tis your fault, 'tis your fault: 'tis a good dog.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog: can there be more said? he is good and fair. Is Sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Evans. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wronged me, Master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confessed, it is not redressed: is not that so, Master Page? He hath wronged me indeed he hath; at a word, he hath, believe me: Robert Shallow, esquire, saith, he is wronged.

Page. Here comes Sir John. 111

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kissed your keeper's daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answered.

Fal. I will answer it straight: I have done all this.

That is now answered.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if it were known in counsel: you'll be laughed at.

Fal. Good worts! good cabbage. Slender, I broke your head: what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your cony-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Bard. You Banbury cheese!

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus!

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! paucha, paucha: slice! that's my humour.

Slen. Where's Simple, my man? Can you tell, cousin?

Evans. Peace, I pray you. Now let us understand. There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is, Master Page, fidelicet Master Page; and there is myself, fidelicet myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, nine host of the Garter.

Page. We three, to hear it and end it between them.

Evans. Fery good: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards ork upon the cause with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol!

Pist. He hears with ears.

Evans. The devil and his tam! what phrase is this, 'He hears with ear'? why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick Master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else, of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovel-boards, that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yead Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Evans. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner! Sir John and master mine, I combat challenge of this latten billo. Word of denial in thy labras here!

Word of denial: froth and scum, thou liest!

Slen. By these gloves, then, 'twas he.

Nym. Be avised, sir, and pass good humours: I will say 'marry trap' with you, if you run the noothook's humour on me; that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then, he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, Scarlet and John?

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Evans. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is!

Bard. And being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered: and so conclusions passed the careires.

Slen. Ay, you speake in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter: I'll ne'er be drank whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Evans. So Get me judge, me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within.

[Exit Anne Page.

Slen. O heaven! this is Mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, Mistress Ford!

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress. [Kisse her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome. Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Exeunt all except Shal., Slen., and Evans.]
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Enter Simple.

How now, Simple! where have you been? I must warn myself, must I? You have not the Book of Riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Book of Riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon All-hallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?

Shal. Come, coze; come, coze; we stay for you. A word with you, coze; marry, this, coze: there is, as I do tender, a kind of tenderness, made afar off by Sir Hugh here. Do you understand me?

Shal. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I shall do that which is reason.

Shal. Nay, but understand me.

Sh. So I do, sir. 220

Evans. Give ear to his motions, Master Slender: no perdition of the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Shal. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says: I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

Evans. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. Ay, there's the point, sir.

Evans. Master Slender, have you a woman?

Shal. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

Evans. But can you affection the oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold that the lips is parcel of the mouth. Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Shal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Shal. I hope, sir, I will do as it shall become one that would do reason.

Evans. Nay, God's lords and his ladies! you must name a possibleness, if you can carry her your desires towards her.

Shal. That you must. Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?

Shal. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.

Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coze: what do I to pleasure you, coze? Can you love the maid?

Shal. I will marry her, sir, at your request: but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married and have more occasion to know one another; I hope, upon familiarity will grow more consummation: but if you say, 'Marry her,' I will marry her; that I am freely dissolved, and dissolve.

Evans. It is a fery discretion answer; save the fall is in the ort 'dissolutely'; the ort is, according to our meaning, 'resolutely': his meaning is good.

Shal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well.

Shal. Ay, or else I would I might be hanged, la!

Shal. Here comes fair Mistress Anne.

Re-enter Anne Page.

Would I were young for your sake, Mistress Anne!
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE II.]

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Sim. Well, sir.
Evans. Nay, it is pettier yet. Give her this letter; for it is a 'man that altogether's acquaintance with Mistress Anne Page; and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to Mistress Anne Page. I pray you, be gone: I will make an end of my dinner;
here's pippins and cheese to come. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter! Host. What says my bully-rook? speak scolarly and wisely.
Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away
some of my followers.
Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let him wag: trot, trot.
Fal. I sit at ten pounds a week.
Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Caesar, Keiser, and Pheazar. I will entertain Bardolph: he shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?
Fal. Do so, good mine host.
Host. I have spoke; let him follow. [To Bard.
Let me see thee froth and lime: I am at a word;
follow. [Exit. Fal. Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good trade: an old cloak makes a new jerkin;
a withered serving-man a fresh tapster. Go; adieu.
Bard. It is a life that I have desired; I will thrive.
Pist. O base Hungarian wight! wilt thou the spigot wield? [Exit Bardolph.
Nym. He was gotten in drink: is not the humour conceived?
Fal. I am glad I am so acquit of this tinder-box: his thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful singer; he kept not time.
Nym. The good humour is to steal at a minute's rest.
Pist. 'Convey,' the wise it call. 'Steal'! 31
foh! a fico for the phrase!
Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.
Pist. Why, then, let kibes ensue.
Fal. There is no remedy; I must con-catch;
I must shift.
Pist. Young ravens must have food.
Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?
Pist. I ken the wight: he is of good substance.
Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.
Pist. 'Twixt two yards, and more.
Fal. No quips now, Pistol! Indeed, I am in the waist the two yards about: but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her face, her style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be Englished rightly, is, 'I am Sir
John Falstaff's.'
Pist. He hath studied her will, and translated her will, out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humour pass?
Fal. Now, the report goes she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legion of angels.
Pist. As many devils entertain; and 'To her,
boy,' say I.
Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.
Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious quizzles; sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.
Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine. 70
Nym. I thank thee for that humour.
Fal. O, she did so course o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass! Here's another letter to her: she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty. I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go bear thou this letter to Mistress Page;
and thou this to Mistress Ford: we will thrive,
lads, we will thrive.
Pist. Shall I Sir Pandarus of Troy become,
And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!
Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour-letter: I will keep the haviour of reputation.
Pist. [To Robin] Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly:
Sail like my pinnae to these golden shores.
Kogues, hence, avaut! vanish like halststones, go;
Trudge, plod away o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack!
Falstaff will learn the humour of the age,
French thrift, you rogues; myself and skirted page.
[Exeunt Falstaff and Robin.
Pist. - Let vultures gripe thy guts! for gourd and fullam holds,
And high and low beguiles the rich and poor:
Tester I'll have in poor when thou shalt lack,
Base Phrygian Turk!
Nym. I have operations which be humours of revenge.
Pist. Wit thou revenge?
Nym. By welkin and her star!
Pist. With wit or steel?
Nym. With both the humours, I:
I will discuss the humour of this love to Page.
Pist. And I to Ford shall eke unfold
How Falstaff, varlet vile,
His dove will prove, his gold will hold,
And his soft couch defile.
Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incen-esc Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humour.
Pist. Thou art the Mars of malecontents: I second thee; troop on.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. A room in Doctor Caius's house.

Enter Mistress Quickly, Simple, and Rugby.

Quick. What, John Rugby! I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, Master Doctor Caius, coming. If he do, I faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience and the king's English.

Rug. I'll go watch.

Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. [Exit Rugby.] An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal, and, I warrant you, no tell-tale nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish that way: but nobody but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And Master Slender's your master?

Sim. Ay, forsooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a grover's paring-knife? 21

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard, a Cain-coloured beard.

Quick. A softly-spirted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forsooth: but he is as tall a man of his fortunes as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrene.

Quick. How say you? O, I should remember him: does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait? 31

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune. Will Master Parson Evans I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Rug. Re-enter Rugby.

Quick. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. We shall all be shent. Run in here, good young man; go into this closet: he will not stay long. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] What, John Rugby! John! what, John, I say! Go, John, go inquire for my master; I doubt he be not well, that he comes not home. 43 [Singing] And down, down, adown-a, &c.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like des toys. Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet un boiter vert, a box, a green-a box: do intend vat I speak? a green-a box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; I'll fetch it you. [Aside] I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad. 52

Caius. Fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud. Je m'en vais a la cour—la grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir?

Caius. Out; mette je au mon pocket: depeche, quickly. Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, sir!

Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby. Come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to the court. 62

Caius. Out, me sir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my trot, I tarry too long. Od's me! Qu'ai-joiblie! dere is some simples in my closet, dat I will not for the vardi I shall leave behind.
Enter FENTON.

Fent. How now, good woman! how dost thou?

Quick. The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty Mistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way: I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, thinnest thou? shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above: but notwithstanding, Master Fent, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you. Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale: good faith, it is such another Nan; but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread: we had an hour's talk of that wart. I shall never laugh but in that maid's company! But indeed she is given too much to alcholy and musing: but for you—well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me.

Quick. Will I? 't faith, that we will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart the next time we have confidence; and of other woers.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now.

Quick. Farewell to your worship. [Exit Fenton.] Truly, an honest gentleman: but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does. Out upon't! what have I forgot?

[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Before Page's house.

Enter MISTRESS PAGE, with a letter.

Mrs Page. What, have I scapeed love-letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see. [Reads.]

'Ask me no reason why I love you: for though Love use Reason for his physician, he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I; go to then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha, ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, Mistress Page,—at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice,—that I love thee. I will not say, pity me; 'tis not a soldier-like phrase: but I say, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,
By day or night,

Or any kind of light,
With all his might
For thee to fight,

What a Herod of Jewry is this! O wicked, wicked world! One that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked—with the devil's name!—out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company! What should I say to him? I was then frugal of my mirth; Heaven forgive me! Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men. How shall I be revenged on him for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter MISTRESS FORD.

Mrs Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that; I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs Ford. Well, I do then; yet I say I could show you to the contrary. O Mistress Page, give me some counsels. [Reads.]

Mrs Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour!

Mrs Page. Hang the trifle, woman! take the honour. What is it? dispense with trifles; what is it?

Mrs Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs Page. What? thou liest! Sir Alice Ford! These knights will hack; and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs Ford. We burn daylight: here, read; perceive how I might be knighted. I shall make the worse of the men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: and yet he would not swear; praised women's modesty; and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the Hundredth Psalm to the tune of 'Green Sleeves.' What tempest, I trow, threw this whale, with so many tons of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease. Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs Page. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs! To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names,—sure, more,—and these are of the second edition: he will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two. I had rather be a giantess, and lie under Mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles ere one chaste man,
Mrs Page. Nay, I know not; it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some strain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have bored me in this fury.

Mrs Page. Why, look where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause; and that I hope is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs Page. Let's consult together against this greedy knight. Come hither. [They retire.]

Enter Ford with Pistol, and Page with Nym.

Ford. Why, I hope it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs:

Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,

Both young and old, one with another, Ford;

He loves the gallimaufry: Ford, perdure.

Ford. Love my wife!

Pist. With liver burning hot. Prevent, or go thou,

Like Sir Acheon he, with Ringwood at thy heels:

O, odious is the name!

Ford. What name, sir?

Pist. The horn, I say. Farewell.

Take heed, have open eye, for thieves do foot by night:

Take heed, ere summer comes or cuckoo-birds do sing.

Away, Sir Corporal Nym!

Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. [Exit. Ford. [Aside] I will be patient; I will find out this.

Nym. [To Page] And this is true; I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humour-ed letter to her; but I have a sword and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the shaft and the long. My name is Corporal Nym; I speak and I avouch; 'tis true: my name is Nym and Falstaff loves your wife. Adieu. I love not the humour of bread and cheese, and there's the humour of it. Adieu. [Exit. Page.]

Ford. If I do find it: well.

Page. I will not believe such a Catalaunian, though the priest o' the town commended him for a true man. 150

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow: well.

Page. How now, Meg! [Mrs Page and Mrs Ford come forward.

Mrs Page. Whither go you, George? Hark you.

Mrs Ford. How now, sweet Frank! why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy! I am not melancholy.

Get you home, go.

Mrs Ford. Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head. Now, will you go, Mistress Page?

Mrs Page. Have with you. You'll come to dinner, George. [Aside to Mrs Ford] Look what comes yonder; she shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

Mrs Ford. [Aside to Mrs Page] Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Mrs Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good Mistress Anne?

Mrs Page. Go in with us and see: we have an hour's talk with you.

[Execut Mrs Page, Mrs Ford, and Mrs Quickly.]

Page. How now, Master Ford!

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

Page. Yes: and you heard what the other told me?

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, slaves! I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that. Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. 191

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife; but I would be loath to turn them together. A man may be too confident: I would have nothing lie on my head; I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look where my ranting host of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his pate or money in his purse when he looks so merrily.

Enter Host.

Host. How now, mine host!

Enter Shallow.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow. Good even and twenty, good Master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.
Host. Tell him, cavaleiro-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Sal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought between Sir Hugh the Welsh priest and Caius the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host of the Garter, a word with you. [Drawing him aside.

Host. What sayest thou, my bully-rook?

Sal. [To Page] Will you go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and, I think, hath appointed them contrary places; for, believe me, I hear the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be. [They converse apart.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavaleiro?

Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a potful of burnt sack to give me recourse to him and tell him my name is Brook; only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully; thou shalt have egress and regress;—said I well?—and thy name shall be Brook. It is a merry knight. Will you go, An-heires?

Sal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Sal. Tut, sir, I could have told you more. In these times you stand on distance, your passes, stoccadoes, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, Master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, boys, here, here! shall we wag?

Page. Have with you. I had rather hear them scold than fight.

[Exeunt Host, Sal., and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: she was in his company at Page's house; and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into 't: and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed.

Scene II. A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world's mine oyster, Which I with sword will open.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your coach-fellow Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers and tall fellows; and when Mistress Bridget got the handle of her fan, I took 't upon mine honour thou hast it not.

Pist. Didst not thou share? hast thou not fifteen pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: thinkest thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you. Go. A short knife and a throng! To your manor of Pickt-hatch! Go. You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue! you stand upon your honour. Why, this inconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the terms of my honour precise: I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of God on the left hand and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will ensnare your rags, your cat-a-mountain lookks, your red-lattce phrases, and your bold-beating oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you?

Pist. Do I do relent; what would thou more of man?

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Good morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, this may be said?

Quick. I'll be sworn, As my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. Do I believe the swearer. What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman: and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one Mistress Ford, sir:—I pray, come a little nearer this ways:—I myself dwell with Master Doctor Caius,—

Fal. Well, on: Mistress Ford, you say,—

Quick. Your worship says very true: I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways. I warrant thee, nobody hears; mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? God bless them and make them his servants!

Fal. Well, Mistress Ford; what of her?

Quick. Why, sir, she's a good creature. Lord, Lord! your worship's a wanton! Well, heaven forgive you and all of us, I say!

Fal. Mistress Ford; come, Mistress Ford,—

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it; you have brought her into such a canaries as 'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches, I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly, all musk, and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her: I had myself twenty angels given me this morning; but I defy all angels, in any such sort, as they say, but in the way of honesty: and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all; and yet there has been earls, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she-Mercury.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for which she thanks you a thousand times;
and she gives you to notify that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven?
Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot of: Master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: he's a very jealous man; she leads a very frampold life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven. Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.
Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship. Mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too: and let me tell you in your ear, she's as furtuous a civil modest wife, and one, I tell you, that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, whoe'er be the other: and she be me tell your worship that her husband is seldom from home; but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man: surely I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee: setting the attraction of my good parts aside I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for't!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife and Page's wife acquainted each other how they love me?
Quick. That were a jest indeed! they have not so little grace, I hope: they were a trick indeed! But Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves: her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page; and truly Master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does: do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is she will; and truly she desires it; for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.
Quick. Nay, but do so: then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and in any case have a nay-word, that you may know on to his mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well: commend me to them both: there's my purse; I am yet thy debtor. Boy, go along with this woman. [Exit Mistress Quickly and Robin.] This news distresseth me!

Pit. This punk is one of Cupid's carriers: Clap on more sails; pursue; up with your fights: Give fire: she is my prize, or ocean whelm them all! [Exit.]

Fal. Sayest thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee. Let them say 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Sir John, there's one Master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook is his name?
Bard. Ay, sir.
Fal. Call him in. [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah, ha! Mistress Ford and Mistress Page have I encompassed you? go to; via!

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with FORD disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir!
Fal. And you, sir! Would you speak with me?
Ford. I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you.

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good Master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you; for I must let you understand I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me; if you will help to bear it, Sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be well pursued; the easier, sith you yourself know how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town; her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doting observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her; not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many to know what she would have given; briefly, I have pursued her as love pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind or in my means, meed, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a jewel that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this: 'Love is like a shadow flies when substance love pursues: Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.'
Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?
Ford. Never.
Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?
Ford. Never.
Fal. Of what quality was your love, then?
Ford. Like a fair house built on another man’s ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it.
Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?
Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great adimitance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.
Fal. My good sir!
Ford. Believe it, for you know it. There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford’s wife: use your art of wooing: win her to consent to you: if any man may, you may as soon as any.
Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affections, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.
Ford. O, understand my drift. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself; she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves: I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattled against me.
Fal. What say you to’t, Sir John?
Ford. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford’s wife.
Fal. O good sir!
Fal. I say you shall.
Ford. Want no money, Sir John; you shall want none.
Fal. Want no Mistress Ford, Master Brook: you shall want none. I shall be with her, I may tell you, by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant or go-between parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave her husband will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.
Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?
Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous wittily knave hath masses of money; for which the wife seems to me well-favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue’s coffer; and there’s my harvest-home.
Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him if you saw him.
Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will scare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteor o’er the cuckold’s horns. Master Brook, thou shalt know I will predominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife. Come to me soon at night. Ford’s a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, Master Brook, shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Come to me soon at night.
[Exit.
Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this! My heart is ready to crack with impatience. Who says this is improbable jealousy? My wife hath sent to me; the hour is fixed; the match is made. Would any man have thought this? ‘See the hell of having a false woman! My bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawed at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names! Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbason, well; yet they are devils’ additions, the names of fiends: but Cuckold! Witlo!—Cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass: he will trust his wife; he will not be jealous. I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua-vite bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself: then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. God be praised for my jealousy! Eleven o’clock the hour. I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit.

Scene III. 'A field near Windsor,' Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius. Jack Rugby!
Rug. Sir?
Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack?
Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that Sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come; he has pray his Pible well, dat he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.
Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him, if he came.
Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.
Caius. Villany, take your rapier.
Rug. Forbear; here’s company.

Enter Host, Shallow, Slender, and Page.
Host. Bless thee, bully doctor!
Shal. Save you, Master Doctor Caius!
Page. Now, good master doctor! 20
Slen. Give you good morrow, sir.
Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
Host. To see thee fight, to see thee foin, to see thee traverse; to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy puto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francisco? ha, bully! What says my Æsculapius? my Galen? my heart of elder? ha! is he dead, bully stale? is he dead? Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of de world; he is not show his face.
Host. Thou art a Castaion-King-Urinal.
Hector of Greece, my boy!
Caius. I pray you, bear vitness that me have stay six or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.
Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, Master Page?
Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.
Shal. Bodykins, Master Page, though I now be old and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itch to make one. Though we are justices and doctors and churchmen, Master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, Master Page. 51
Page. 'Tis true, Master Shallow.
Shal. It will be found so, Master Page.
Master Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and Sir Hugh hath shewn himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, master doctor.
Host. Pardon, guest-justice. A word, Moun-seur Mockwater. 60
Caius. Mock-water! vat is dat?
Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.
Caius. By gar, den, I have as mush mock-water as de Englishman. Scurvy Jack-dog priest! by gar, me will cut his ears.
Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.
Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?
Host. That is, he will make thee amends. 70
Caius. By gar, me do look he shall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me will have it.
Host. And I will provoke him t'ot, or let him wag.
Caius. Me tank you for dat.
Host. And, moreover, bully,—but first, master guest, and Master Page, and eke Cavaleiro Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore.

[Aside to them.
Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?
Host. He is there: see what humour he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?
Shal. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die: sheathe thy impatience, throw cold water on thy choler; go about the fields with me through Frogmore: I will bring thee where Mistress Anne Page is, at a farmhouse a-feasting; and thou shalt woo her. Cried I ain't? said I well?

Caius. By gar, me dank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.
Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page. Said I well?
Caius. By gar, 'tis good; vell said. 100
Host. Let us wag, then.
Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. A field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Evans. I pray you now, good Master Slener's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for Master Caius, that calls himself doctor of physic?
Simple. Marry, sir, the pittie-ward, the park-ward, every way; old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.
Evans. I most vehemently desire you will also look that way.
Simple. I will, sir. 110
Evans. 'Pless my soul, how full of chollors I am, and trembling of mind! I shall be glad if he have deceived me. How melancholies I am! I will knog his urinals about his knave's costard when I have good opportunities for the orch.
'Sples my soul! To shallow rivers, to whose falls Meleodious birds sing madrigals; There will we make our peds of roses, And a thousand fragrant posies. 120
To shallow—
Mercey on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

[Sings.

Meleodious birds sing madrigals— When as I sat in Pablyon— And a thousand vagram posies. To shallow &c.

Re-enter Simple.

Simple. Yonder he is coming, this way, Sir Hugh. Evans. He's welcome. 130 [Sings.
To shallow rivers, to whose falls— Heaven prosper the right! What weapons is he? Simple. No weapons, sir. There comes my master, Master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frogmore, over the stile, this way. Evans. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slen. 140

Shal. How now, master Parson! Good morrow, good Sir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

[Aside] Ah, sweet Anne Page! 150

Page. 'Save you, good Sir Hugh!
Evans. 'Piss you from his mercy sake, all of you!
Shal. What, the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?
Page. And youthful still! in your doublet and hose this raw rheumatic day!
Evans. There is reasons and causes for it.
Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.
50 Evans. Fery well: what is it?
Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who, belike having received wrong by some perpson, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.
Shal. I have lived fourscore years and upward; I never heard a man of his place, gravity and learning, so wide of his own respect.
Evans. What is he?
Page. I think you know him; Master Doctor
Caius, the renowned French physician.
Evans. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.
Page. Why?
Evans. He has no more knowledge in Hibo-crates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave as you would desires to be acquainted withal.
Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.
71 Slen. [Aside] O sweet Anne Page!
Shal. It appears so by his weapons. Keep them asunder: here comes Doctor Caius.

Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.
Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.
Shal. So do you, good master doctor.
Host. Disarm them, and let them question:
let them keep their limbs whole and hack our English.
80 Caius. I pray you, let a' me speak a word with your ear. Wherefore vill you not meet a me?
Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, use your patience: in good time.
Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John and Tennis.
Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, let us
ot be laughing-stocks to other men's humours:
I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amend. [Aloud] I will knock your urinals about your knave's cogscomb for missing your meetings and appointments.
92 Caius. Diable! Jack Rugby,—mine host de Jarteer,—have I not stay for him to kill him?
have I not, at de place I did appoint?
Evans. As I am a Christians soul now, look you, this is the place appointed: I'll be judgement by mine host of the Garter.
Host. Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul, French and Welsh, soul-curer and body-curer!
100 Caius. Ay, dat is very good: excellent.
Host. Peace, I say! hear mine host of the Garter. Am I politic? am I subtle? am I a Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs. Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so. Give me thy hand, boughted well of modesty from the so seeming Mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Aëtacious; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim. [Clock heard.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search: there I shall find Falstaff; I shall be rather praised for this than mocked: for it is as positive as the earth is firm that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, SLENDER, HOST, SIR HUGH EVANS, CAIUS, and RUGBY.

Shal. Page, &c. Well met, Master Ford.

Ford. Trust me, a good knot: I have good cheer at home; and I pray you all go with me.

Shal. I must excuse myself, Master Ford.

Slender. And so must I, sir: we have appointed to dine with Mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.

Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.

Slender. I hope I have your good will, father Page.

Page. You have, Master Slender; I stand wholly for you: but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Caius. Ay, begar; and de maid is love-a-me: my nurs-a-Quickly tell me so mush.

Host. What say you to young Master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holiday, he smells April and May: he will carry t', he will carry t'; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry t'.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Pains; he is of too high a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply; the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster. Master doctor, you shall go; so shall you, Master Page; and you, Sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well: we shall have the freer woorin at Master Page's.

[Exeunt Shal. and Slender.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

[Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.

[Exit.

Ford. [Aside] I think I shall drink in pipeswine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentles?

All. Have with you to see this monster.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. A room in Ford's house.

Enter MISTRESS FORD and MISTRESS PAGE.

Mrs Ford. What, John! What, Robert!

Mrs Page. Quickly, quickly! Is the buck-basket—

Mrs Ford. I warrant. What, Robin, I say!

Enter Servants with a basket.

Mrs Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs Page. Give your men the charge: we must be brief.

Mrs Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brewhouse; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and without any pause or starving take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whistlers in Datchet-mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs Page. You will do it?

Mrs Ford. I ha' told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called.

[Exeunt Servants.

Mrs Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter ROBIN.

Mrs Ford. How now, my eyas-musket! what news with you?

Rob. My master, Sir John, is come in at your back-door, Mistress Ford, and requests your company.

Mrs Page. You little Jack-a-Lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn. My master knows not of your being here and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty if I tell you of it; for he swears he'll turn me away.

Mrs Page. Thou'rt a good boy: this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. I'll go hide me.

Mrs Ford. Do so. Go tell thy master I am alone. [Exit Robin.] Mistress Page, remember you my cue.

Mrs Page. I warrant thee; if I do not aet it, hang me.

[Exit.

Mrs Ford. Go to, then: we'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery pummion; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition: O this blessed hour!

Mrs Ford. O sweet Sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, Mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead: I'll speak it before the best lord; I would make thee my lady.

Mrs Ford. I your lady, Sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady!

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance. Or Mrs Ford. A plain kerchief, Sir John: my brows become nothing else; nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a traitor to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circular farthingale. I see what thou wert, if Fortune thy foec were not, Nature thy friend. Come, thou canst not hide it.

\[7\]

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that per- suade thee there's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog and say thou art this and that, like a many of these lising hawthornbuds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklersbury in simple time; I cannot: but I love thee; none but thee; and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir. I fear you love Mistress Page.

Fal. Thou mightest as well say I love to walk by the Counter-gate, which is as hateful to me as the neck of a line-kilt.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind.

Fal. [Within] Mistress Ford, Mistress Ford! here's Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowing and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me: I will enconce me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so: she's a very tattling woman. [Falstaff hides himself.]

Re-enter Mistress Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now! Mrs. Page. O Mistress Ford, what have you done? You're shamed, you're overthrown, you're undone for ever!

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good Mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, Mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion! Out upon you! how am I mistook in you!

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas, what's the matter?

Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman that he says is here now in the house by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence; you are undone.

Mrs. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here! but 'tis most certain your husband's coming, with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you. If you know yourself clear, why, I am glad of it; but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do? There is a gentleman my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame so much as his peril: I had rather, than a thousand pound he were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame! never stand 'you had rather' and 'you had rather': your husband's here at hand; bethink you of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him. O, how have you deceived me! Look, here is a basket: if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: or—it is whiting-time—send him by your two men to Datchet-mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there. What shall I do?

Fal. [Coming forward] Let me see't, let me see't, O, let me see't! I'll in, I'll in. Follow your friend's counsel. I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What, Sir John Falstaff! Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee. Help me away. Let me creep in here. I'll never—[Gets into the basket; they cover him with foul linen.]

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy. Call your men, Mistress Ford. You dissembling knight!

Re-enter Servants.

Go take up these clothes here quickly. Where's the cowl-staff? look, how you drumble! Carry them to the laundress in Datchet-mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest; I deserve it. How now! whither bear you this?

Serv. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whith ter they bear it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck! Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exeunt Servants with the basket.]

Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers; search, seek, find out: I'll warrant we'll unkennel the fox. Let me stop this way first. [Locking the door.] So, now uncap.

Page. Good Master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, Master Page. Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon; follow me, gentlemen. [Exeunt.

Evans. This is very fantastical humours and jealousies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no the fashion of France; it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search.

[Exeunt Page, Caius, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or Sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need.
of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.
Mrs Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.
Mrs Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here; for
I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.
Mrs Page. I will lay a plot to try that; and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff; his dissolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.
Mrs Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrion, Mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope,
to betray him to another punishment?
Mrs Page. We will do it: let him be sent for to-morrow, eight o'clock, to have amends. 210

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knife bragged of that he could not compass.
Mrs Page. [Aside to Mrs Ford] Heard you
that?
Mrs Ford. You use me well, Master Ford,
do you?
Ford. Ay, I do so.
Mrs Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!
Ford. Amen! 220
Mrs Page. You do yourself mighty wrong,
Master Ford.
Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.
Evans. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coopers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgement.
Caius. By gar, nor I too; there is no bodies.
Page. Pie, fie, Master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not ha' your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.
Ford. 'Tis my fault, Master Page: I suffer
for it.
Evans. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest a' o'mans as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.
Caius. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.
Ford. Well, I promised you a dinner. Come, come, walk in the Park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you why I have done this. Come, wife; come, Mistress Page.
I pray you, pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.
Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast: after, we'll a-birding together; I have a fine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so?
Ford. Any thing.
Evans. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.
Caius. If dere be one or two, I shall make a the turd.
Ford. Pray you, go, Master Page.
Evans. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine host.
Caius. Dat is good; by gar, with all my heart!
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Scene iv.

Anne. Now, Master Slender,— Slen. Now, good Mistress Anne,—
Anne. What is your will?
Slen. My will! 'od's heartlings, that's a pretty jest indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.
Anne. I mean, Master Slender, what would you have with me?
Slen. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you. Your father and my uncle hath made motions: if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole! They can tell you how things go better than I can: you may ask your father: here he comes.

Enter Page and Mistress Page.

Page. Now, Master Slender! love him, daughter Anne.
Why, how now! what does Master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: I told you, sir, your daughter is disposed of.
Fent. Nay, Master Page, be not impatient.
Mrs Page. Good Master Fenton, come not to my child.
Page. She is no match for you.
Fent. Sir, will you hear me?
Page. No, good Master Fenton.
Come, Master Shallow; come, son Slender, in.
Knowing my mind, you wrong me, Master Fenton. [Exeunt Page, Shal., and Slen.]
Quick. Speak to Mistress Page.
Fent. Good Mistress Page, for that I love your daughter.
In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce, against all checks, rebukes and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love
And not retire: let me have your good will.
Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond fool.
Mrs Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.
Quick. That's my master, master doctor.
Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick i' the earth
And bowl'd to death with turnips!
Mrs Page. Come, trouble not yourself. Good Master Fenton,
I will not be your friend nor enemy:
My daughter will I question how she loves you,
And as I find her, so am I affected.
Till then farewell, sir: she must needs go in;
Her father will be angry.
Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress: farewell, Nan.
[Exeunt Mrs Page and Anne.
Quick. This is my doing, now: 'Nay,' said I,
'will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? Look on Master Fenton!' this is my doing.
Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night
Give my sweet Nan this ring: there's for thy pains.
Quick. Now heaven send thee good fortune! [Exit Fenton.] A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet I would my master had Mistress Anne; or I would Master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would Master Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them all three; for so I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word; but speciously for Master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses: what a beast am I to slack it! [Exit.

Scene V. A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say,—
Bard. Here, sir.
Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't. [Exit Bardolph.] Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new-year's gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind bitch's puppies, fifteen i' the litter; and you may know by my size that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow,—a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph with sack.

Bard. Here's Mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.
Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold as if I had swallowed snowballs for pills to cool the reins.
Call her in.
Bard. Come in, woman!

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. By your leave; I cry you mercy: give your worship good mornor.
Fal. Take away these chalices. Go brew me a pottle of sack finely.
Bard. With eggs, sir?
Fal. Simple of itself: I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. [Exit Bardolph.] How now!
Quick. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from Mistress Ford.
Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough; I was thrown into the ford; I have my belly full of ford.
Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection.
Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.
Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a-birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine: I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amends, I warrant you.
Fal. Well, I will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.
Quick. I will tell her.
Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, sayesthou?
Quick. Eight and nine, sir.
Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.
Quick. Peace be with you, sir. [Exit.
Fal. I marvel I hear not of Master Brook; he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well. O, here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir!
Fal. Now, master Brook, you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife?
Ford. That, indeed, Sir John, is my business.
Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you: I was at her house the hour she appointed me.
Ford. And sped you, sir?
Fal. Very ill-favouredly, Master Brook.
Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?
Fal. No, master Brook; but the peaking Cornuto her husband, Master Brook, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.
Ford. What, while you were there?
Fal. While I was there.
Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?
Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one Mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, in her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.
Ford. A buck-basket!
Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket! rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, greasy napkins; that, Master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell that ever offended nostril.
Ford. And how long lay you there?
Fal. Nay, you shall hear, Master Brook, what I have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knives, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet-lane; they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knife their master in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket: I quaked for fear; lest the lunatic knave have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, Master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths; first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether; next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head; and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease; think of that,—a man of my kidney,—think of that,—that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle to scape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe; think of that,—hissing hot,—think of that, Master Brook.
Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is desperate; you'll undertake her no more?
Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a-birding: I have received from her another embassy of meeting; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, Master Brook.
Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.
Fal. Is it? I will then address myself to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I sped; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her. Adieu. You shall have her, Master Brook; Master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.
Ford. Hum! ha! is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake! awake, Master Ford! there's a hole made in your best coat, Master Ford. This 'tis to be married! this 'tis to have linen and buck-baskets! Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the lecher; he is at my house; he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purse, nor into a pepper-box: but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me: I'll be horn-mad. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene I. A street.

Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Quickly, and William.

MRS. PAGE. Is he at Master Ford's already, think'st thou?
Quick. Sure he is by this, or will be presently; but, truly, he is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.
MRS. PAGE. I'll be with her by and by; I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, Sir Hugh! no school to-day? 20
Evans. No; Master Slender is let the boys leave to play.
Quick. Blessing of his heart!
MRS. PAGE. Sir Hugh, my husband says my son profits nothing in the world at his book. I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.
Evans. Come hither, William; hold up your head; come.
MRS. PAGE. Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; answer your master, be not afraid. 20
Evans. William, how many numbers is in nouns?
Will. Two.
Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, 'Od's nouns.'
Evans. Peace your tattlings! What is 'fair,' William?
Will. Pulcher.
Quick. Polecats! there are fairer things than polecats, sure.
Evans. You are a very simplicity 'oman: I pray you, peace. What is 'lapis,' William?
Will. A stone.
Evans. And what is 'a stone,' William?
Will. A pebble.
Evans. No, it is 'lapis.' I pray you, remember in your prayer.
Will. Lapis.
Evans. That is a good William. What is he, William, that does lead articles?
Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun, and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, sic, haece, hoc.
Evans. Nominativo, hic, hag, hog; pray you, mark: genitivo, hujus. Well, what is your accusative case?
Will. Accusativo, hinc.
Evans. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; accusativo, hung, hang, hog.
Quick. 'Hang-hog' is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.
Evans. Leave your prabbles, 'oman. What is the vocative case, William?
Will. O,—vocatio, O.
Evans. Remember, William; vocative is caret.
Quick. And that's a good root.
Evans. 'Oman, forbear.
Mrs. Page. Peace!
Evans. What is your genitive case plural,
William?
Will. Genitive case!
Evans. Ay.
Will. Genitivo,—horum, harum, horum.
Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! tie on er! never name her, child, if she be a whore.
Evans. For shame, 'oman.
Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words: he teaches him to hick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves, and to call
'horum:' tie upon you!
Evans. 'Oman, art thou lutharies? hast thou no understandings for thy cases and the numbers of the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.
Mrs. Page. Prithie, hold thy peace.
Evans. Show me now, William, some declen-sions of your pronouns.
Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.
Evans. It is qui, quae, quod: if you forget your 'quies,' your 'ques,' and your 'quods,' you must be peeches. Go your ways, and play; go.
Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.
Evans. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, Mistress Page.
Mrs. Page. Adieu, good Sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.]
Get you home, boy. Come, we stay too long.
[Exit.]

SCENE II. A room in Ford's house.

Enter Falstaff and Mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance. I see you are obsequious to a hair's breadth; not only, Mistress Ford, in the simple ofice of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement and ceremony of love. But are you sure of your husband now?
Mrs. Ford. He's a-birding, sweet Sir John.
what, ho!
Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, Sir John.
[Exit Falstaff.

Enter Mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who's at home besides yourself?
Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.
Mrs. Page. Indeed!
Mrs. Ford. No, certainly. [Aside to her]
Speak louder.
Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have obody here.
Mrs. Ford. Why?
Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old tunes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind: so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, 'Peer out, peer out!' that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility and patience, to this his distemper he is in now: I am glad the fat knight is not here.
Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?
Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swears he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket: protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion: but I am glad the knights is not here; now he shall see his own foolery.
Mrs. Ford. How near is he, Mistress Page?
Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end; he will be here anon.
Mrs. Ford. I am undone! The knight is here.
Mrs. Page. Why then you are utterly shamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you!—Away with him, away with him! better shame than murder.
Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. No, I'll come no more i' the basket.
May I not go out ere he come?
Mrs. Page. Alas, three of Master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?
Fal. What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney.
Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces. Creep into the kiln-hole.
Fal. Where is it?
Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word.
Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: there is no hiding you in the house.
Fal. I'll go out then.
Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, Sir John. Unless you go out disguised—
Mrs Ford. How might we disguise him? 70
Mrs Page. Alas the day, I know not! There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler and a kerchief, and so escape.
Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity rather than a miscarriage.
Mrs Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.
Mrs Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thrummed hat and her muffler too. Run up, Sir John.
Mrs Ford. Go, go, sweet Sir John! Mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.
Mrs Page. Quick, quick! we'll come dress you straight: put on the gown the while. 81
[Exit Falstaff.
Mrs Ford. I would my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears she's a witch: forbade her my house and hath threatened to beat her.
Mrs Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel, and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!
Mrs Ford. But is my husband coming?
Mrs Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.
Mrs Ford. We'll try that; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.
Mrs Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently; let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford. I'll first direct my men what they shall do with the basket. Go up; I'll bring linen for him straight. [Exit.
Mrs Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough.
We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act that often jest and laugh: 'Tis old, but true, Still swine eat all the draft. [Exit.
Re-enter Mistress Ford with two Servants.
Mrs Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders; your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him; quickly, dispatch.
First Serv. Come, come, take it up.
Sec. Serv. Pray heaven it be not full of knight again.
First Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.
Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.
Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, Master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again? Set down the basket, villain! Somebody call my wife. Youth in a basket! O you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed.
'M what, wife, I say! Come, come forth! Behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching!
Page. Why, this passes, Master Ford; you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinned.
Evans. Why, this is lunacies! this is mad as a mad dog!
Shal. Indeed, Master Ford, this is not well, indeed.
Ford. So say I too, sir.
Re-enter Mistress Ford.
Come hither, Mistress Ford; Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?
Mrs Ford. Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. 140
Ford. Well said, brazen-face! hold it out. Come forth, sirrah!
[Pulling clothes out of the basket.
Page. This passes!
Mrs Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.
Ford. I shall find you anon.
Evans. 'Tis unreasonable! Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.
Ford. Empty the basket, I say!
Mrs Ford. Why, man, why? 150
Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket; may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable. Pluck me out all the linen.
Mrs Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a lea's death.
Page. Here's no man.
Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, Master Ford; this wrongs you. 161
Evans. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousies.
Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for.
Page. No, nor nowhere else but in your brain.
Ford. Help to search my house this one time. If I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity; let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, 'As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman.' Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.
Mrs Ford. What, ho, Mistress Page! come you and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.
Ford. Old woman! what old woman's that? 170
Mrs Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.
Ford. A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean! Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this, is beyond our element: we know nothing. Come down, you witch, you hag, you; come down, I say!
Mrs Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband! Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman. 190
Re-enter Falstaff in woman's clothes, and Mistress Page.
Mrs Page. Come, Mother Prat; come, give me your hand.
SCENE II.]

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Mrs Page. Are you not ashamed? I think you have killed the poor woman.
Mrs Ford. Nay, he will do it. 'Tis a goodly credit for you. [Exeunt. Ford. Hang her, witch! Evans. By yea and no, I think the 'oman is a witch indeed: I like not when a 'oman has a great peard; I spy a great peard under his nuffer. Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow; see but the issue of my encomy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Page. Let's obey his humour a little further: come, gentlemen. [Exeunt Ford, Page, Shalt, Caines, and Evans.
Mrs Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.
Mrs Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.
Mrs Page. I'll have the cudgel hallowed and hung o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious service.
Mrs Ford. What think you? may we, with the warrant of womanhood and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge? Mrs Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.
Mrs Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?
Mrs Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.
Mrs Ford. I'll warrant they'll have him publicly shamed; and methinks there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly shamed.
Mrs Page. Come, to the forge with it then; shape it: I would not have things cool. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A room in Ford's house.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. 'Tis one of the best discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs Page. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Pardon me, wife. Henceforth do what thou wilt: I rather will suspect the sun with cold Than thee with wantonness: now doth thy honour stand, In him that was of late an heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more: Be not as extreme in submission As in offence.

But let our plot go forward: let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him and disgrace him for it. Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. How? to send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight? Pie, fie! he'll never come.

Evans. You say he has been thrown in the rivers and has been grievously peaten as an old 'oman: methinks there should be terrors in him that he should not come; methinks his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs Ford. Devise how you'll use him when he comes, And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs Page. There is an old tale goes that Herne the hunter, Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest, Doth all the winter-time, at still midnight, Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns; And there he blasts the tree and takes the cattle And makes milch-kine yield blood and shakes a chain In a most hideous and dreadful manner: You have heard of such a spirit, and well you know The superstitious idle-headed old Received and did deliver to our age This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many that do fear In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak: But what of this?

Mrs Ford. Marry, this is our device; That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come:

And in this shape when you have brought him thither, What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus:

Nan Page my daughter and my little son And three or four more of their growth we'll dress Like urchins, ouphes and fairies, green and white, With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.
[Act IV.

And rattles in their hands: upon a sudden,
As Falstaff, she and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once
With some diffused song: upon their sight,
We two in great amazedness will fly;
Then let them all encircle him about
And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
In shape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth, 60
Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound
And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known,
We'll all present ourselves, dis-horn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must
Be practised well to this, or they'll ne'er do't.

Evans. I will teach the children their beha-vours; and I will be like a jack-an-apes also, to burn the knight by my taber.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go and buy them vizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies.

Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That silk will I go buy. [Aside] And in that time
Shall Master Slender steal my Nan away
And marry her at Eton. Go send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again in name of Brook:
He'll tell me all his purpose: sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that. Go get us properties
And tricking for our fairies.

Evans. Let us about it: it is admirable pleasures and fery honest knaveries.

Mrs. Page. Go, Mistress Ford,
Send quickly to Sir John, to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

I'll to the doctor: he hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.
That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot;
And he my husband best of all affacts.
The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court: he, none but he, shall have her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

[Exit.

Scene V. A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thick-skin? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short,
quick, snap.

Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with Sir
John Falstaff from Master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed and truckle-bed: 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new. Go knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropophaginian unto thee: knock,
I say.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber: I'll be so bold as stay,
sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her,
indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed: I'll call. Bully knight! bully Sir John!
speak from thy lungs military: art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [Aside] How now, mine host?

Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar terrifies the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend; my chambers are honourable: fie! privacy? fie!

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was mine host, an old fat woman even now with me; but she's gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it, mussel-shell: what would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, Master Slender, sent in her, seeing her go thorough the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says that the very same man that beguiled Master Slender of his chain cozened him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quickly.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about Mistress Anne Page; to know if it were my master's fortune to have her or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her, or no. Go; say the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir; like who more bold.

Sim. I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, Sir
John; there is a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life; and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage, mere cozenage!

Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set spurs and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say they be fled; Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Evans. Have a care of your entertainments:
there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me
Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine host de Jarteer?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity and outful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat: but it is tell-a dat you make grand preparation for a duke de amany: by my trod, dere is no duke dat the ourt is know to come. I tell you for good vill: I die.

Host. Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, night. I am undone! Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone! [Exit Host and Bard.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozened; or I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court, how I have been transformed and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgelled, they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop and liquor fishermen's roots with me: I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits till I were as crest-fallen as a lied pear. I never prospered since I forswore myself at primero. Well, if my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now, whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party and his dam heother! and so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant: specially one of them; Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tellest thou me of black and blue? Was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford: but that my admirable lexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me, the knave capable and set me i' the stocks, i' the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber: you shall hear how things go; and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exit.

Scene VI. Another room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy: I will give over all.

Fent. Yet hear me speak. Assist me in my purpose, and, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold more than your loss. Host. I will hear you, Master Fenton; and I will at the least keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page; Who mutually hath answer'd my affection, So far forth as herself might be her chooser, Even to my wish: I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at; That neither singly can be manifested, Without the show of both; fat Falstaff Hath a great scene: the image of the jest I'll show you here at large. Hark, good mine host. To-night at Henre's oak, just twixt twelve and one, Must my sweet Nan present the Fairy Queen; The purpose why, is here: in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender and with him to Eton Immediately to marry: she hath consented: Now, sir. Her mother, ever strong against that match And firm for Doctor Caius, hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasking of their minds, And at the deanery, where a priest attends, Straight marry her; to this her mother's plot She seemingly obedient likewise hath Made promise to the duke: now, thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white, And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand and bid her go, She shall go with him; her mother hath intended, The better to denote her to the doctor.

For they must all be mask'd and vizarded, That quaint in green she shall be loose enrobed, With ribands pendent, flaring 'bout her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and, on that token, The maid hath given consent to go with him.

Host. Which means she to deceive, father or mother? Fent. Both, my good host, to go along with me: And here it rests, that you'll procure the vicar To stay for me at church 'twixt twelve and one, And, in the lawful name of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony.

Host. Well, husband your device; I'll to the vicar: Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest. Fent. So shall I evermore be bound to thee; Besides, I'll make a present recom pense. [Exit.

ACT V.

Scene I. A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mistress Quickly.

Fal. Prithee, no more prattling: go, I'll hold. This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Away! go. They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Away! Quick. I'll provide you a chain; and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears: hold up your head, and mince. [Exit Mrs Quickly.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR. [ACT V]

Enter Ford.

How now, Master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne’s oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, Master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, Master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, Master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you: he beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, Master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver’s beam; because I know also life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me: I'll tell you all, Master Brook. Since I plucked geese, played truant and whipped top, I knew not what ‘twas to be beaten till lately. Follow me; I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow. Strange things in hand, Master Brook! Follow.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch i’ the castle-ditch till we see the light of our fairies. Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

Shal. Ay, forsooth: I have spoke with her and we have a nay-word how to know one another: I come to her in white, and cry ‘mum;’ she cries ‘budget;’ and by that we know one another.

Shal. That’s good too: but what needs either your ‘mum’ or her ‘budget?’ the white will decipher her well enough. It hath struck ten o’clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let’s away; follow me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A street leading to the Park.

Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Doctor Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master doctor, my daughter is in green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the Park: we two must go together.

Caius. I know vat I have to do. Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.]

My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff as he will chafe at the doctor’s marrying my daughter: but ’tis no matter; better a little chiding than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now and her troop of fairies, and the Welsh devil Hugh?

Mrs. Page. They are all cased in a pit hard by Herne’s oak, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff’s and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We’ll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such lewdsters and their lechery Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on. To the oak, to the oak!

Enter Sir Hugh Evans disguised, with others as Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-’ords, do as I bid you: come, come; trib, trib. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Another part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff disguised as Herne.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me! Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns. O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan for the love of Leda. O omnipotent Love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose! A fault done first in the form of a beast. O Jove, a beastly fault! And then another fault in the semblance of a fowl; think on’t, Jove; a foul fault! When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, ’t the forest. Send me a cool rut-time, Love, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John! art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Fal. My doe with the black scut! Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves, hall kissing-comfits and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweetheart.

Fal. Divide me like a brie buck, each a haunch; I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman, ha? Speak I like Herne the hunter! Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome! [Noise within.]

Mrs. Page. Alas, what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Fal. What should this be?

Mrs. Ford. Away, away! [They run off.]

Fal. I think the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that’s in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

[ACT V]
Enter Sir Hugh Evans, disguised as before; Pistol, as Hobgoblin; Mistress Quickly, Anne Page, and others, as Fairies, with tapers.

Quick. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, You moonshine revellers, and shades of night, You orphan heirs of fixed destiny, Attend your office and your quality. Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy eyes. Pistol. Elves, list your names; silence, you silly toys. Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap: Where fires thou find'st unranked and heart's unswept, There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry: Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttery. Fal. They are fairies; he that speaks to them shall die:

I'll wink and cough: no man their works must try.

[Lies down upon his face.

Evans. Where's Bede? Go you, and where you find a maid That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said, Raise up the organs of her fancy. Sleep she as sound as careless infancy: But those as sleep and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides and shins.

Quick. About, about, Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out: 60 Strew good luck, ophues, on every sacred room: That it may stand till the perpetual doom, In state as wholesome as in state 'tis fit, Worthy the owner, and the owner it. The several chairs of order look you scour With juice of balm and every precious flower: Each fair instambl, coat, and several crest, With loyal blazon, evermore be blest! And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing, Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring: The expressure that it bears, green let it be, More fertile-fresh than all the field to see; And 'Honi soit qui mal y pense' write In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white; Like phosphorus, pearl and rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Fairies use flowers for their charictery. Away; disperse: but till 'tis one o'cock, Our dance of custom round about the oak Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Evans. Pray you, lock hand in hand; your-selves in order set; And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be, To guide our measure round about the tree. But, stay; I smell a man of middle-earth. Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy, lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

Pistol. Vile worm, thou wast o'erlook'd even In thy birth. Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end: If he be chaste, the flame will back descend And turn him to no pain; but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pistol. A trial, come. Evans. Come, will this wood take fire? Fal. Oh, Oh, Oh! Quick. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!

About him, fairies; sing a scornful rhyme; And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

SONG.

Fie on sinful fantasy! Fie on lust and luxury! Lust is but a bloody fire, Kindled with unchaste desire, Fed in heart, whose flames aspire As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher. Pinch him, fairies, mutually; Pinch him for his villany; Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about, Till candles and starlight and moonshine be out.

During this song they pinch Falstaff. Doctor Caius comes one way, and steals away a boy in green; Slender another way, and takes off a boy in white; and Fenton comes, and steals away Mrs Anne Page. A noise of hunting is heard within. All the Fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck's head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page and Mistress Ford.

Page. Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now; Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn? Mrs Page. I pray you, come, hold up the jest no higher. Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes Become the forest better than the town? Ford. Now, sir, who's a cuckold now? Master Brook, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, Master Brook: and, Master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to Master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, Master Brook.

Mrs Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again; but I will always count you my deer. Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass. Ford. Ay, and an ox too: both the proofs are extant. Fal. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foyperty into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now how wit may be made a Jack-a-Lent, when 'tis upon ill employment!

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English. Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o'erreaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh goat too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.
Evans. Seese is not good to give putter; your belly is all putter.

Fal. 'Seese' and 'putter!' have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English! This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking through the realm.

Mrs Page. Why, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs Page. A puffed man? 160

Page. Old, cold, withered and of intolerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Evans. And given to fornications, and to taverns and sack and wine and methergins, and to drinkings and swearings and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am deflected; I am not able to answer the Welsh flannel; ignorance itself is a plummeter o'er me: use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one Master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander; over and above that you have suffered, I think to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight; thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: tell her Master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs Page. [Aside] Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, Doctor Caius' wife.

Enter Slender.

Slender. Whoa, ho! ho, father Page!

Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you dispatched?

Slender. Dispatched! I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know ou't; would I were hanged, la, else!

Page. Of what, son?

Slender. I came yonder at Eton to marry Mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy. If it had not been i' the church, I would have swung him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I never stir!—and 'tis a postmaster's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong. 201

Slender. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl. If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slender. I went to her in white, and cried 'mum,' and she cried 'budget,' as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a postmaster's boy.

Mrs Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is Mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened: I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paysan, by gar, a boy: it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am cozened. 220

Mrs Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Caius. Ay, by gar, and 'tis a boy: by gar, I'll raise all Windsor.

[Exit. Ford. This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me: here comes Master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Fenton. You do amaze her: hear the truth of it. You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love. The truth is, she and I, long since contracted, Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve us. The offence is holy that she hath committed; And this deceit loses the name of craft, Of disobedience, or unduteous title, Since therein she doth evitate and shun A thousand irreligious cursed hours, Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amazed; here is no remedy: In love the heavens themselves do guide the state; Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy!

Fal. What cannot be eschew'd must be embraced.

Ford. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased.

Mrs Page. Well, I will muse no further. Master Fenton,

Page. Heaven give you many, many merry days! Good husband, let us every one go home, And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire; Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be so. Sir John, To Master Brook you yet shall hold your word; For he to-night shall lie with Mistress Ford. [Exeunt.]
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd
But to fine issues, nor Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise;
Hold therefore, Angelo:
In our remove be thou at full oneself;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart: old Escalus,
Though first in question, is thy secondary.
Take thy commission.
Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.
Duke. No more evasion:
We have with a leaven'd and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition
That it prefers itself and leaves unquestion'd
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As time and our concernings shall importune,
How it goes with us, and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.
Ang. Yet give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.
Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
With any scruple; your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand:
I'll privily away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause and Ayes vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE. [ACT I.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

Escal. Lead forth and bring you back in happiness!

Duke. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit. Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave.

To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

Escal. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exit.

SCENE II. A street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke with the other dukes come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

First Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's!

Sec. Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou conclavest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

Sec. Gent. 'Thou shalt not steal'?

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

First Gent. Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, do relish the petition well that prays for peace.

Sec. Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for I think thou never wast where grace was said.

Sec. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

First Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion or in any language.

First Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy; as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

First Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet. Thou art the list.

First Gent. And thou the velvet; thou art good velvet; thou 'rt a three-piled piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersey as be piled, as thou art piled, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

First Gent. I think I have done myself wrong, have I not?

Sec. Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchased as many diseases under her roof as come to—

Sec. Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge.

Sec. Gent. To three thousand dolours a year.

First Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

First Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Mistress Overdone.

First Gent. How now! which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Mrs Ov. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you all.

Sec. Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Mrs Ov. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

First Gent. Claudio to prison? 'tis not so.

Mrs Ov. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested, saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Mrs Ov. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

Sec. Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to do such a purpose.

First Gent. But, most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away! let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Mrs Ov. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gullows and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter Pompey.

How now! what's the news with you?

Pom. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Mrs Ov. Well; what has he done?

Pom. A woman.

Mrs Ov. But what's his offence?

Pom. Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.

Mrs Ov. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Pom. No, but there's a woman with maid by him. You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Mrs Ov. What proclamation, man?

Pom. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be plucked down.

Mrs Ov. And what shall become of those in the city?

Pom. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

Mrs Ov. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pulled down?

Pom. To the ground, mistress.

Mrs Ov. Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Pom. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients; though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage! there will be pity taken
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties
Which have, like unscour’d armour, hung by the wall
So long that nineteen zodiacs have gone round
And none of them been worn; and, for a name, Now puts the drowsy and neglected act Freshly on me: "tis surely for a name.

Lucio. I warrant it is; and thy head stands so tinkle on thy shoulders that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he’s not to be found.

I priethee, Lucio, do me this kind service: This day my sister should the cloister enter And there receive her approbation: Acquaint her with the danger of my state: Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him; I have great hope in that: for in her youth There is a prone and speechless dialect, Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art When she will play with reason and discourse, And well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack. I’ll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours.

Claud. Come, officer, away!

SCENE III. A monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought; Believe not that the dribbling dart of love Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends Of burning youth.

Fri. T. May your grace speak of it:

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you How I have ever loved the life removed And held in idle price to haunt assemblies Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps, I have deliver’d to Lord Angelo,

A man of stricte and firm abstinence, My absolute power and place here in Vienna, And he supposes me travell’d to Poland; For so I have strew’d it in the common ear, And so it is received. Now, pious sir, You will demand of me why I do this?

Fri. T. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes and most bitting laws,
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds, Which for this nineteen years we have let slip; Even like an o’ergrown lion in a cave, That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers, Having bound up the threatening twigs of birch, Only to stick it in their children’s sight For terror, not to use, in time the rod Becomes more mock’d than fear’d; so our decrees, Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead; And liberty plucks justice by the nose:
The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

Per. T. It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleased:
And it in you more dreadful would have seem’d
Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful:
Sith ’twas my fault to give the people scope,
Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them.
For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass.
And not the punishment. Therefore indeed,
My father,
I have on Angelo imposed the office;
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home, I
And yet my nature never in the fight
Do in slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as ’twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I prittle,
Supply me with the habit and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action
At our more leisure shall I render you;
One day more: Lord Angelo, I protest;
Stands at a guard with envy: scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to breed than stone: hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. A nunnerie.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no farther privileges?

Franc. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more:
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.

Lucio. [Within] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who’s that which calls?

Franc. It is a man’s voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn.
When you have vow’d, you must not speak with men.

But in the presence of the prioress:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face,
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.
He calls again; I pray you, answer him. [Exit.]

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is’t that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be, as those check-

Isab. Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stand me
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab. Why, ’tis my unhappy brother! let me ask,
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you:
Not to be weary with you, he’s in prison.

Isab. Would one for what?

Lucio. For that which, if myself might be his judge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks:

He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your story.

Lucio. ’Tis true.

I would not—though ’tis my familiar sin.
With maids to seem the lapwing and to jest,
Tongue far from heart—play with all virgins so:
I hold you as a thing ensky’d and sainted,
By your renunciation an immortal spirit,
And to be talk’d with in sincerity,
As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth,
’Tis thus:

Your brother and his lover have embraced:
As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings.
To teeming foison, even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tillth and husbandry.

Isab. Some one with child by him? My cousin Juliet?

Lucio. Is she your cousin?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their names
By vane, though apt affection.

Lucio. She it is.

Isab. O, let him marry her.

Lucio. This is the point.

The duke is very strangely gone from hence:
Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand and hope of action: but we do learn
By them that know the very nerves of state,
His giving-out were of an infinite distance
From his true-meant design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority,
Governs Lord Angelo; a man whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He— to give fear to use and liberty,
Which have for long run by the hideous law,
As mice by lions—hath pick’d out an act,
Under whose heavy sense your brother’s life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it;
And doth so use the rigour of the statute,
To make him an example. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo: and that’s my pith of business
’Twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Doth he seek his life?

Lucio. Has censured him already: and, as I hear,
The provost hath a warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what poor ability’s in me
To do him good?

Lucio. Assay the power you have.

Isab. My power? Alas, I doubt—

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors
And make us lose the good we oft might win
By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them,

Isab. I’ll see what I can do.

Lucio. But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight;
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
Command me to my brother; soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.
Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Good sir, adieu. 90

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A hall in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, and a Justice, Provost,
Officers, and other Attendants, behind.

Ang. We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Their perch and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death. Alas, this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father!

Let but your honour know,
What I believe to be most strait in virtue,
That, in the working of your own affections, 10
Had time cohorted with place or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose.
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Err'd in this point which now you censure him,
And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing to fall. I know not deny,
The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two 20
Guiltier than him they try. What's open made justice.

'That justice seizes: what know the laws
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant,
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take't Because we see it; but what we do not see
We read upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extenuate his offence
For I have had such faults; but rather tell me,
When I, that censure him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgement pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio
Be executed by nine to-morrow morning:
Bring him his confessor, let him be prepared;
For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit Provost.]

Escal. [Aside] Well, heaven forgive him! and forgive us all!

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall:
Some run from brakes of ice, and answer none:
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, and Officers with Froth and Pompey.

Elb. Come, bring them away; if these be good people in a commonweal that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law:
bring them away.

Ang. How now, sir! What's your name?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow: I do leam upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors? Well: what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profanation in the world that good Christians ought to have.

Escal. This comes off well; here's a wise officer.

Ang. Go to; what quality are they of? Elbow is your name? why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Pom. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow. 6r

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir! a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was,
as they say, plucked down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before hea-en and your honour.—

Escal. How? thy wife?

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman,—

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanliness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone's means:
but as she spit in his face, so she denied him.

Pom. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man: prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces?

Pom. Sir, she came in great with child; and longing, saving your honour's reverence, for stewed prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were,
in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honours have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes,—

Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish, sir.

Pom. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten
the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, Master Froth,
I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Pom. Very well; you being then, if you be remembered, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes,—
Froth. Ay, so I did indeed.

Pom. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remembered, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you,—

Froth. All this is true.

Pom. Why, very well, then,—

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose. What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Pom. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Pom. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas: was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Froth. All-hail, and eve.

Pom. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir; 'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where indeed you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room and good for winter.

Pom. Why, very well, then; I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave, and leave you to the hearing of the cause; Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Pom. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, there was nothing done to her once.

Pom. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, there was nothing done to her once.

Pom. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Pom. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir; what did this gentleman to her?

Pom. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Pom. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Pom. Doth your honour see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Pom. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Pom. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Escal. He's, thouliest, thou liest, wicked varlet! the time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Pom. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice or Iniquity. Is this true?

Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine aotion of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him that thou wouldst discover if thou could'st, let him continue in his courses till thou knowest what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked varlet, now, what's come upon thee: thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an't please you, sir.

Escal. So. What trade are you of, sir?

Pom. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Pom. Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Pom. Nine, sir; Overdone by the last.

Escal. Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me bear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well, no more of it, Master Froth: farewell. [Exit Froth.] Come you hither to me, Master tapster. What's your name, Master tapster?

Pom. Pompey.

Escal. What else?

Pom. Bum, sir.

Escal. Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that in the beastliest sense you are Pompey the Great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a tapster, are you not? come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

Pom. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

Pom. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Pom. Does your worship mean to geld and splay all the youth of the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Pom. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't then. If your worship will take order or the drabs and the knaves, you need not to ear the bawds.

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I am tell you: it is but heading and hanging. 250
Pom. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be lad to give out a commission for more heads: if his law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the airiest house in it after three-pence a bay: if you ive to see this come to pass, say Pompey told so.

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey; and, in re-quital of your prophecy, hark you: I advise you, et me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you do: if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your ent, and prove a shrewd Caesar to you; in plain leaning, Pompey, I shall have you whip: so, for his time, Pompey, fare you well.

Pom. I thank your worship for your good counsel: [Aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.

Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade:
The valiant heart is not whipt out of his trade.

[Exit. 270

Escal. Come hither to me, Master Elbow; some hither, Master constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?

Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought, by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together?

Elb. And a half, sir.

Escal. Alas, it hath been great pains to you.
They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't: are here not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters:
as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me or them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house. Fare you well.

What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio;
but there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful:
Merry is not itself, that oft looks so;
Pardon is still the nurse of second woe:
But yet,—poor Claudio! There is no remedy.

Come, sir.

[Exeunt. 290

SCENE II. Another room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come straight:
I'll tell him of you.

Prov. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.]
I'll know
His pleasure; may be he will relent. Alas,
He hath but as offended in a dream!

All sects, all ages smack of this vice; and he
To die for 't!

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost?
Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die tomorrow?

Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? hadst thou not order?

Why dost thou ask again?
Prov. Lest I might be too rash:
Under your good correction, I have seen, 10
When, after execution, judgement hath Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine:
Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spared.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon.
What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?
She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?
Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid, 20
And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted.

[Exit Servant.

See you the fornicatrix be removed:
Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;
There shall be order for 't.

Enter Isabella and Lucio.

Prov. God save your honour!

Ang. Stay a little while. [To Isab.] You're welcome: what's your will?

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour,
Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well: what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice;
For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war 'twixt will and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I do beseech you, let it be his fault,
And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside] Heaven give thee moving graces!

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor
of it?

Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done:
Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To fine the faults whose fine stands in record, 40
And let go by the actor.

Isab. [Aside] O just but severe law!
I had a brother, then. Heaven keep your honour!

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Give't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him;
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown:
You are too cold; if you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.
To him, I say!

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. [Aside to Isab.] Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him, and neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy.

Ang. I will not do't.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong, if so your heart were touch'd with that remorse as mine is to him?

Ang. He's sentenced; 'tis too late.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] You are too cold.

Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word, may call it back again. Well, believe this, no course that to great ones 'longs, not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword, so the marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe, become them with one half so good a grace as mercy does. If he had been as you and you as he, you would have slipt like him; but he, like you, would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, be gone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, and you were Isab! should it then be thus? No: I would tell what 'twere to be a judge, and what a prisoner.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Ay, touch him; there's the venom.

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, and you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas, alas! why, all the souls that were forfeit once; and he that might the vantage best have took found out the remedy. How would you be, if he, which is the top of judgment, should but judge you as you are? O, think on that; and mercy then will breathe within your lips, like man new made.

Ang. Be you content, fair maid; it is the law, not I condemn your brother: So were he my kinsman, brother, or my son, it should be thus with him; he must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him! He's not prepared for death. Even for our kitchens we kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven with less respect than we do minister to our gross selves? Good, good my lord, be think you; who is it that hath died for this offence? There's many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Ay, well said.

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:

Lucio. Those many had not dared to do that evil, if the first that did the edict infringe had answer'd for his deed: now 'tis awake, takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet, looks in a glass, that shows what future evils, either new, or by remissness new-conceived, and so in progress to be hatch'd and born, are now to have no successive degrees, re sun-rise, prayers from preserved souls, rom fastings maids whose minds are dedicate
o nothing temporal.

Ang. Well; come to me to-morrow. Lulio. [Aside to Isab.] Go to; 'tis well: away! Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

Ang. [Aside] Amen: or I am that way going to temptation, where prayers cross. Isab. At what hour to-morrow shall I attend your lordship? Ang. At any time 'fore noon. Isab. 'Save your honour!'

Ang. From thee, even from thy virtue! 'Tis this, what's this? Is this her fault or mine? He tempter or the tempted, who sins most? a yet she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I hat, lying by the violet in the sun, o as the carrion does, not as the flower, oerrupt with virtuous season. Can it be hat modesty may more betray our sense han woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough, hall we desire to raze the sanctuary nd pitch our evils there? O, fie, fie, fie! hat dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo? ost thou desire her fouly for those things hat make her good? O, let her brother live: thieves for their robbery have authority hen judges steal themselves. What, do I love her, hat I desire to hear her speak again, nd feast upon her eyes? What's is't I dream on? cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint, ith saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous that temptation that doth goad us on o sin in loving virtue: never could the strumpet, ith all her double vigour, art and nature, nce stir my temper; but this virtuous maid ibdes me quite. Ever till now, hen men were fond, I smiled and wonder'd how. [Exit.}

SCENE III. A room in a prison.

Enter, severally, DUKE disguised as a friar, and PROVOST.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so I think you are. Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar? Duke. Bound by my charity and my blusterder, come to visit the affected spirits ere in the prison. Do me the common right o let me see them and to make me know he nature of their crimes, that I may minister o them accordingly. Prov. I would do more than that, if more were needful. Enter JULIET. ook, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine, ho, falling in the flaws of her own youth, ath blister'd her report: she is with child; nd he that got it, sentenced: a young man fore fit to do another such offence han die for this.

Duke. When must he die? Prov. As I do think, to-morrow.
I have provided for you: stay awhile, [To JULIET. And you shall be conducted. Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry? Jul. I do; and bear the shame most patiently. 20 Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience, And try your penitence, if it be sound, Or hollowly put on. Jul. I'll gladly learn. Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you? Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him. Duke. So then it seems your most offensive act Was mutually committed? Jul. Mutually. Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his. Jul. I do confess it, and repent it, father. Duke. "Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent, 30 As that the sin hath brought you to this shame, Which sorrow is always towards ourselves, not heaven, Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it, But as we stand in fear,— Jul. I do repent me, as it is an evil, And take the shame with joy. Duke. There rest. Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow, And I am going with instruction to him. Grace go with you, Benedicite! [Exit. Jul. Must die to-morrow! O injurious love, 40 That resipates me a life, whose very comfort Is still a dying horror! Prov. "Tis pity of him. [Exit.

SCENE IV. A room in ANGELO's house.

Enter ANGELO. Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray To several subjects. Heaven hath my empty words; Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue, Anchors on Isabel: Heaven in my mouth, As if I did but only chew his name; And in my heart the strong and swelling evil Of my conception. The state, whercon I studied, Is like a good thing, being often read, Grown fear'd and tedious: yes, my gravity, Wherein—let no man hear me—I take pride, 10 Could I with boot change for an idle plume, Of the air beats for vain. O place, O form, How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit, Wrench awe from fools and tie the wiser souls To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood: Let's write good angel on the devil's horn; Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter a Servant. How now! who's there? Serv. One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.
Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.] O heavens!
Why does my blood thus muster to my heart, so
Making both it unable for itself,
And dispossessing all my other parts
Of necessary fitness?
So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love
Must needs appear offense.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid? 50
Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.
Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me
Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.
Isab. Even so. Heaven keep your honour!
Ang. Yet may he live awhile; and, it may be,
As long as you or I: yet he must die.
Isab. Under your sentence?
Ang. Yea.
Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his re-prieve,
Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted
That his soul sicken not.
Ang. Ha! fie, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their saucy sweetness that do coin heavens image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made
As to put metal in restrained means
To make a false one.
Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth... 50
Ang. Say you so? then I shall pose you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
As she that he hath stain'd?
Isab. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul.
Ang. I talk not of your soul: our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than for accompt.
Isab. How say you?
Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak
Against the thing I say. Answer to this: 60
I, now the voice of the recorded law,
 Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:
Might there not be a charity in sin
To save this brother's life?
Isab. Please you to do't,
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is no sin at all, but charity.
Ang. Please you to do't at peril of your soul,
Were equal poise of sin and charity.
Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
Heaven let me bear it! you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer 71
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but hear me.
Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or seem so craftily; and that's not good.
Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.
Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
When it doth tax itself; as these black masks
Proclaim an enshiled beauty ten times louder &
Than beauty could, display'd. But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.
Isab. So.
Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears.
Accountant to the law upon that pain.
Isab. True.
Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,—
As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,—that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desired of such a person, 91
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of all the building law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer;
What would you do?
Isab. As much for my poor brother as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death, 100
The impression of keen whipps I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.
Ang. Then must your brother die.
Isab. And 'twere the cheaper way:
Better it were a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have slander'd so? 110
Isab. Ignomy in ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses: lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.
Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather proved the sliding of your brother
A morriment than a vice.
Isab. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we mean:
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love. 120
Ang. We are all frail.
Isab. Else let my brother die,
If not a feodary, but only he
Owe and succeed thy weakness.
Ang. Nay, women are frail too.
Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves;
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women! Help Heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail.
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well: 130
And from this testimony of your own sex,—
Scene IV.

Measure for Measure.

Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger than faults may shake our frames,—let me be bold;
do arrest your words. Be that you are,
that is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
you be one, as you are well express'd by all external warrants, show it now, by putting on the destined livery.
Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
let me entreat you speak the former language.
Ang. Plainly conceive, I love you.
Isab. My brother did love Juliet, and you tell me that he shall die for it.
Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.
Isab. And know your virtue hath a license in't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
I'll pluck on others.
Ang. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.
Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believed,
And most pernicious purpose! Seeming, seeming!
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't:
Sign me a present pardon for my brother, or with an outstretched throat I'll tell the world aloud
What man thou art.
Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel? My unsold'd name, the austereness of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place I'the state,
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report
And smell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my sensual race the reign:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
Let by the affection that now guides me most,
I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,
Say what you can, my false o'erweighes your true.

[Exit.]

Isab. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this,
Who would believe me? O perious mouths,
That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
Either of condemnation or approb'res;
Bidding the law make court'sy to their will;
Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite,
To follow as it draws! I'll to my brother:
Though he hath fall'n by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That, had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up,
Before his sister should her body stoop
To such abhor'd pollution.
Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
More than our brother is our chastity.
I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest.

[Exit.]

Act III.

Scene I. A room in the prison.

Enter Duke disguised as before, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?
Claud. The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope:
I've hope to live, and am prepared to die.
Duke. Be absolute for death; either death
Or life
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep: a breath
Thou art,
Servile to all the skyey influences,
That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict: merely, thou art death's fool;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun
And yet runnest toward him still. Thou art not noble:
For all the accommodations that thou bear'st
Are nursed by baseness. Thou'rt by no means valiant:
For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft provok'st: yet grossly fear'st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself:
For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not;
For what thou hast not, still thou strivest to get,
And what thou hast, forget'st. Thou art not certain:
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon. If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee. Friend hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth
nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both; for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of pyedied eld; and when thou art old and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant.
What's yet in this
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid more thousand deaths: yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all even.
Claud. I humbly thank you.
To sue to live, I find I seek to die;
And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.

[Isab. Within] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company!

Prov. Who's there? come in: the wish deserves a welcome.

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.
Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.
Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior, here's your sister.
Duke. Provost, a word with you. 50
Prov. As many as you please.
Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be concealed. [Exeunt Duke and Provost.
Claud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?
Isab. Why, as all comforts are; most good, most good indeed.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven, intends you for his swift ambassador, where you shall be an everlasting leger:
Therefore your best appointment make with speed;
To-morrow you set on.
Claud. Is there no remedy?
Isab. None, but such remedy as, to save a head,
To cleave a heart in twain.
Claud. But is there any?
Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll implore it, that will free your life,
But better you till death.
Claud. Perpetual durance?
Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance, a restraint,
Though all the world's vastidity you had,
To a determined scope.
Claud. But in what nature?
Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to't,
Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.
Claud. Let me know the point.
Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Darest thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension;
And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal suffering finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.
Claud. Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowery tenderness? If I must die,
I'd encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.
Isab. There speak my brother; there my father's grave
Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die:
Thou art too noble to conserve a life
In base applications. This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth i' the head and follies doth emmew
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;
His filth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.
Claud. The prenzio Angelo!
Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned'at body to invest and cover
In prenzio guards! Dost thou think, Claudio?
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou mightst be freed.
Claud. O heavens! it cannot be.
Isab. Yes, he would give'the thee, from this rank offence,
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.
Claud. Thou shalt not do't.
Isab. O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As simply as a pin.
Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.
Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to morrow.
Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him,
That thus may make him bite the law by the nose.
When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin; 110
Of the deadly seven it is the least.
Isab. Which is the least?
Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fined? O Isabel!
Isab. What says my brother?
Claud. Death is a fearful thing.
Isab. And shamed life a hateful.
Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In swelling region of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and uncertain thought
Imagine howling: 'tis too horrible!
The weariest and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury and imprisonment
Can lay on nature is a paradise
To what we fear of death.
Isab. Alas, alas!
Claud. Sweet sister, let me live:
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far
That it becomes a virtue.
O you beast!
Isab. Faithless coward! O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield my mother play'd my father fair!
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne'er issued from his blood. Take my defiance!
Die, perish! Might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed:
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.
Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.
Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!
Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd: 150
'Tis best that thou diest quickly.
Claud. O hear me, Isabella!
Re-enter Duke.
Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.
Isab. What is your will?
Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure,
I would by and by have some speech with you:
the satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.
Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay

just be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you awhile. [Walks apart.
Duke. Son, I have overheard what hath passed between you and your sister. Angelo had never a purpose to corrupt her; only be hath made an assay of her virtue to practise his judgement with the disposition of natures; she, having the ruth of honour in her, hath made him that gruous denial which he is most glad to receive. I confess to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death: do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are falsible: to-morrow you must die; go to your knees and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am out of love with life that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there: farewell. [Exit Isadell.] Provost, a word with you.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be one. Leave me awhile with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

[Exit Provost. Isabella comes forward.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good: the goodness that is cheap a beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath conveyed my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him: I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: yet, as the matter doth stands, he will avoid your accusation: he was made trial of you only. Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most righteously do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the anger of fortune, and, by that grace, do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak farther. I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. She should this Angelo have married? who proceeds to her by oath, and the nuptial appointment: between which time of the contract and limitation of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and siew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her comrade husband, this well-seeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour: in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world? What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live! But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal: and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This foresaid Angelo hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage: that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course,—and now follows all,—we shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will I frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Hast you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entertain you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke's: there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE II. The street before the prison.

Enter, on one side, Duke disguised asbefore; on the other, Elbow, and Officers with Pompey.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O heavens! what stuff is here? Pom. 'Twas never merry world since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worser allowed by order of law a furred gown to keep him warm; and furred with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing. 21

Elb. Come your way, sir. 'Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law:
and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange picklock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah! a bawd, a wicked bawd!
The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Do thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw or clothe a back
From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,
From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Pom. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir;
but yet, sir, I would prove— 30

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer:
Correction and instruction must both work
Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning; the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, 40
† From our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Elb. His neck will come to your waist,—a cord, sir.

Pom. I spy comfort; I cry bail. Here's a gentleman and a friend of mine.

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar? art thou led in triumph?
What, is there none of Pyramion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutched? What reply, ha? What sayest thou to this tune, matter and method? Is't not drowned i' the last rain, ha? What sayest thou, Troit? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus; still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistres,
Procures she still, ha?

Pom. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all herbess, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it; it must be so: ever your fresh whore and your powerd bawd: an unshunnèd consequence; it must be so. Art going to prison, Pompey?

Pom. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss, Pompey. Farewell: go, say I sent thee thither. For debt, Pom-ey? or how?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then, imprison him: if imprisonment be the sign of a bawd, why, 'tis his right:
bawd is he doubtless, and of antiquity too; bawdborn. Farewell, good Pompey. Commend me to the prison, Pompey: you will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Pom. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my host.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey.

'Bless you, friar. 81

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey, ha?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Pom. You will not bail me, then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey, nor now. What news abroad, friar? what news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.
Measure for Measure.

Duke. What, I prithee, might be the cause?
Lucio. No, pardon; 'tis a secret must be loosed within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand, the greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.
Duke. Wise! why, no question but he was,
Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.
Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life and the business he hath helmed must upon a warranted need give him a better proclamion. Let him be but testified in his own bringings-forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskilfully; or if your knowledge be more it is much darkened in your malice.
Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.
Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.
Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.
Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know and what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?
Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke.
Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.
Lucio. I fear you not.
Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But indeed I can do you little harm; you'll forswear this again.
Lucio. I'll be hanged first; thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to-morrow or no?
Duke. Why should he die, sir?
Lucio. Why? For filling a bottle with a tumbler, I would the duke we talk of were returned again: this agenrented agent will unpeole the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light: would he were returned! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrussing. Farewell, good friar: I prithee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's not past it yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic: say that I said so. Farewell. [Exit.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can censure 'scape; back-bounding calamity The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here?
Enter Escalus, Provost, and Officers with Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Go; away with her to prison!
Mrs. Ov. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man; good my lord.
Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind! This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawl of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour.

Mrs. Ov. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keepdown was with child by him in the duke's time; he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob; I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me!

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much license: let him be called before us. Away with her to prison! Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Officers with Mistress Ov.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be altered; Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.
Duke. Bliss and goodness on you!
Escal. Of whence are you?
Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now To use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious order, late come from the See In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad 't the world?
Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accurst: much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which professed to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice: yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I by my good leisure have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have laboured for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty: but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him he is indeed Justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the strictness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself.

Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you well.
Duke. Peace be with you!

[Exeunt Escalus and Provost.

He who the sword of heaven will bear
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
† Grace to stand, and virtue go;
More nor less to others paying
Than by self-offences weighing.
Shame to him whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
 Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To weed my vice and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
† How may likeness made in crimes,
Making practice on the times,
To draw with idle spiders' strings
Most ponderous and substantial things!
Craft against vice I must apply:
With Angelo to-night shall lie
His old betrothed but desip’d;
† So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting.
[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The moated grange at St Luke’s.

Enter Mariana and a Boy.

Boy sings.
Take, O, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn;
But my kisses bring again, bring again;
Seals of love, but sealed in vain, sealed in vain.
Mariana. Break off thy song, and haste thee
quick away:
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still’d my brawling discontent.
[Exit Boy.

Enter Duke disguised as before.
I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
Mymirth it much displeased, but pleased my woe.
Duke. ’Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.
Mariana. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Enter Isabella.

Duke. I do constantly believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbear-ce a little: may be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.
Mariana. I am always bound to you.
[Exit.
Duke. Very well met, and well come.
What is the news from this good deputy?
Isabella. He hath a garden circummured with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard back’d;
And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That takes his opening with this bigger key:
This other doth command a little door
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;
There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him.
Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find
This way?
Isabella. I have ta’en a due and wary note upon’t:
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o’er.
Duke. Are there no other tokens
Between you and concerning her observance?
Isabella. No, none, but only a repair I the dark;
And that I have possess’d him my most stay
Can be but brief; for I have made him know
I have a servant comes with me along,
That stays upon me, whose persuasion is
I come about my brother.
Duke. ’Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this. What, ho! within! come forth!

Re-enter Mariana.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid;
She comes to do you good.
Isabella. I do desire the like.
Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?
Mariana. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.
Duke. Take, then, this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.
Mariana. Will you please you walk aside?
[Exeunt Mariana and Isabella.
Duke. O place and greatness! millions of false
Beaues
Are stuck upon thee: volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious guests
Upon thy doings; thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreams
And rack thee in their fancies.

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

Welcome, how agreed?
Isabella. She’ll take the enterprise upon her,
father,
If you advise it.
Duke. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.
Isabella. Little have you to say
When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
‘Remember now my brother.’
Mariana. Fear me not.
Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.
He is your husband on a pre-contract:
To bring you thus together, ’tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit.
Come, let us go:
Our corn’s to reap, for yet our tithe’s to sow.
[Exeunt.
Scene II. A room in the prison.

Enter Provost and Pompey.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Pom. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gryves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisongment and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping, for you have been a notorious bawd.

Pom. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What, ho! Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? fie upon him! he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale.

[Exit.]

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour,—for surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Pom. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hanged, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Pom. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief; if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

[Re-enter Provost.]

Prov. Are you agreed?

Pom. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth often ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. Come, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

Prov. Do desire to learn, sir: and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare; for truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio: [Exit Pompey and Abhorson.]

The one has my pitty; not a jot the other, Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones: 70
He will not wake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?

Well, go, prepare yourself. [Knocking within.] But, hark, what noise?

Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio.] By and by.

I hope it is some pardon or reprieve
For the most gentle Claudio.

Enter Duke disguised as before.

Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good Provost! Who call'd here of late?

Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel?

Prov. No.

Duke. They will, then, ere't be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy. Even with the stroke and line of his great justice:
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he meal'd with that Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous:
But this being so, he's just. [Knocking within.]

Now are they come. [Exit Provost.]

This is a gentle provost: seldom when
The steeld gaoler is the friend of men.

How now! what noise? That spirit's possessed
With haste.

That wounds the unsisting postern with these strokes.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. There he must stay until the officer
Arise to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?

Prov. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

Prov. Happily
You something know; yet I believe there comes
No countermand; no such example have we: 90
Besides, upon the very siege of justice
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

6—2
MEASURE FOR MEASURE. [Act iv.

Enter a Messenger.

This is his lordship's man.

Duke. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Mess. [Giving a paper.] My lord hath sent you this note; and by me this further charge, that you sware not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O, death's a great disquieter; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death: you know the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the paint from whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integrity, nor persuasion can with ease attempt you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke: you shall answer over-read it at your pleasure, as you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receives letters of strange tenour; perishance of the duke's death; perishance entering into some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shrift and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed; but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

[Exit.

Scene III. Another room in the same.

Enter Pompey.

Pomp. I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession; one would think it were Mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Master Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Caper, at the suit of Master Three-ple, the mercer, for some four suits of peach-coloured satin, which now peaches him a beggar. 'Then have we here young Dizzy, and young Master Deep-vow, and Master Copper-spur, and Master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger man, and young Drop-ear that killed lusty Pudding, and Master Forthlight the tilter, and brave Master Shooty the great traveller, and with Half-Can that stabbed Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now 'for the Lord's sake.'

\textit{Enter Abhorson.}

\textit{Abhor.} Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

\textit{Pom.} Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hanged, Master Barnardine!

\textit{Abhor.} What, ho, Barnardine!

\textit{Bar.} [\textit{Within}] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

\textit{Pom.} Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

\textit{Bar.} [\textit{Within}] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

\textit{Abhor.} Tell him he must awake, and that too quickly.

\textit{Pom.} Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

\textit{Abhor.} Go in to him, and fetch him out.

\textit{Pom.} He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

\textit{Abhor.} Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

\textit{Pom.} Very ready, sir.

\textit{Enter Barnardine.}

\textit{Bar.} How now, Abhorson? what's the news with you?

\textit{Abhor.} Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

\textit{Bar.} You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for 't.

\textit{Pom.} O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

\textit{Abhor.} Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father: do we jost now, think you?

\textit{Enter Duke disguised as before.}

\textit{Duke.} Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you and pray with you.

\textit{Bar.} Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

\textit{Duke.} O, sir, you must: and therefore I beseech you

Look forward on the journey you shall go.

\textit{Bar.} I swear I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

\textit{Duke.} But hear you.

\textit{Bar.} Not a word: if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

\textit{Duke.} Unfit to live or die: O gravel heart!

After him, fellows: bring him to the block.

\textit{[Exeunt Abhorson and Pompey. Re-enter Provost.}

\textit{Prov.} Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

\textit{Duke.} A creature unprepared, unmeet for death;

And to transport him in the mind he is

Were damnable.

\textit{Prov.} Here in the prison, father,

There died this morning of a cruel fever

One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,

A man of Claudio's years; his beard and head

Just of his colour. What if we do omit

This reprobate till he were well inclined;

And satisfy the deputy with the visage

Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

\textit{Duke.} O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides!

Dispatch it presently; the hour draws on

Prex'd by Angelo: see this be done,

And sent according to command; whiles I

Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

\textit{Prov.} This shall be done, good father, present.

But Barnardine must die this afternoon:

And how shall we continue Claudio,

To save me from the danger that might come

If he were known alive?

\textit{Duke.} Let this be done. Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio:

Here twice the sun hath made his journal greeting

To the under generation, you shall find

Your safety manifested.

\textit{Prov.} I am your free dependant.

\textit{Duke.} Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo.

\textit{[Exit Provost.}

Now will I write letters to Angelo,—

The provost, he shall bear them,—whose contents Shall witness to him I am near at home,

And that, by great inducements, I am bound To enter publicly: him I'll desire

To meet me at the consecratedount

A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanced form,

We shall proceed with Angelo.

\textit{Re-enter Provost.}

\textit{Prov.} Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

\textit{Duke.} Convenient is it. Make a swift return;

For I would commune with you of such things

That want no ear but yours.

\textit{Prov.} I'll make all speed. \textit{[Exit.}

\textit{Isab.} [\textit{Within}] Peace, ho, be here! \textit{[Exit}

\textit{Duke.} The tongue of Isabella. She's come to know

If yet her brother's pardon be come hither:

But I will keep her ignorant of her good,

To make her heavenly comforts of despair,

When it is least expected.

\textit{Enter Isabella.}

\textit{Isab.} Ho, by your leave!

\textit{Duke.} Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

\textit{Isab.} The better, given me by so holy a man. \textit{[Exit.}
Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

Duke. He hath released him, Isabel, from the world:

His head is off and sent to Angelo. 120

Isab. Nay, but it is not so. Duke. It is no other: show your wisdom, daughter,

In your close patience. Isab. O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes! Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight. Isab. Unhappy Claudio! wretched Isabel! Injurious world! most damned Angelo! Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;

Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.

Mark what I say, which you shall find By every syllable a faithful verity: The duke comes home to-morrow; nay, dry your eyes;

One of our covent, and his confessor, Gives me this instance: already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo, Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your bosom on this wretch, Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart, 140 And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you. Duke. This letter, then, to Friar Peter give; 'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return: Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause and yours. I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. For my poor self, I am combined by a sacred vow

And shall be absent. Wendi you with this letter: Command these fretting waters from your eyes With a light heart; trust not my holy order, If I pervert your course. Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even. Friar, where's the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't. But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports: but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry: I'll go along with thee: I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child. 160 Duke. Did you such a thing? Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: if bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick. [Exeunt. 190

Scene IV. A room in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouched other.

Ang. In most uneven and distraught manner. His actions show much like to madness; pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and redeliver our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a dispatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed betimes! the morrow; I'll call you at your house: give notice to such men of sort and suit as are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir. Fare you well.

Ang. Good night. [Exit Escalus. This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant And dullest to all proceedings. A deflower'd maid! And by an eminent body that enforced The law against it! But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her no;

For my authority bears of a credent bulk, That no particular scandal once can touch 30 But it confounds the breather. He should have lived, Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge, By so receiving a dishonour'd life With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had lived! Alack, when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not. [Exit Scene V. Fields without the town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me: [Giving letters. The provost knows our purpose and our plot. The matter being afoot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift;
though sometimes you do blench from this to that,
As cause doth minister. Go call at Flavius’ house,
And tell him where I stay: give the like notice
To Valentinus, Rowland, and to Crassus,
And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate;
But send me Flavius first.

Fri. P. It shall be speeded well. [Exit. 10

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius: thou hast made good haste:
Come, we will walk. There’s other of our friends
Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius.
[Exeunt.

Scene VI. Street near the city gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly I am loath:
I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part; yet I am advised to do it;
He says, to veil full purpose.

Mari. Be ruled by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me that, if peradventure
He speak against me on the adverse side,
I should not think it strange; for ‘tis a physic
That’s bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would Friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come.

Enter Friar Peter.

Fri. P. Come, I have found you out a stand most fit, 10
Where you may have such vantage on the duke,
He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded;
The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering: therefore, hence, away!
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

Scene I. The city gate.

Mariana went, Isabella, and Friar Peter,
at their stand. Enter Duke, Varrius,
Lords, Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost,
Officers, and Citizens, at several doors.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met!
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.
Ang. Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both.
We have made inquiry of you; and we hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
Forerunning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it,
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves, with characters of brass,
A forted residence ‘gainst the tooth of time,
And razeure of oblivion. Give me your hand,
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within. Come, Escalus,
You must walk by us on our other hand;
And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward.
Fri. P. Now is your time: speak loud and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard

Upon a wrong’d, I would fain have said, a maid!
O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object
Till you have heard me in my true complaint
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs; in what? by whom? be brief.

Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil;
Hear me myself; for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believed, 31
Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O hear me, here!

Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother
Cut off by course of justice.

Isab. By course of justice!

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak:
That Angelo’s forsworn; is it not strange?
That Angelo’s a murderer; ’s it not strange? 40
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her! Poor soul,
She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion 50
That I am touch’d with madness! Make not impossible
That which but seems unlike: ’tis not impossible
But one, the wicked’st caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute
As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, charactris, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain; believe it, royal prince:
If he be less, he’s nothing; but he’s more,
Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
If she be mad,—as I believe no other,— 60
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e’er I heard in madness.

Isab. O gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
And hide the false seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad
Have, sure, more lack of reason. What would you say?
Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemned upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemned by Angelo:
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the messenger,—
Lucio. That's I, an't like your grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and desired her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.
Isab. That's he indeed.
Duke. You were not bid to speak.
Lucio. No, my good lord;
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.
Duke. I wish you now, then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven you then
Be perfect.
Lucio. I warrant your honour.
Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed
'to't.
Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale,—
Lucio. Right,
Duke. It may be right; but you are i'the wrong
To speak before your time. Proceed.
Isab. To this pernicious caitiff deputy,— Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.
Isab. Pardon it:
The phrase is to the matter.
Duke. Mended again. The matter; proceed.
Isab. In brief, to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refell'd me, and how I replied,—
For this was of much length,—the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter:
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and, after much debate-
ment,
My heart's remorse confutes mine honour, 90
And I did yield to him: but the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.
Duke. This is most likely!
Isab. O, that it were as like as it is true!
Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. First, his integrity Stands without blemish. Next, it imports no reason
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you on:
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou camest here to complain.
Isab. And is this all?
Then, O you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time
Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up
In countenance! Heaven shield your grace from woe,

As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!
Duke. I know you'll fain be gone. An officer!
To prison with her! Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent and coming hither?
Isab. One that I would were here, Friar Lodowick.
Duke. A ghostly father, belike. Who knows that Lodowick?
Lucio. My lord, I know him;'tis a meddling friar;
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace
In your retirement, I had swinged him soundly.
Duke. Words against me! this is a good friar, belike!
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.
Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar,
I saw him at the prison: a saucy friar,
A very scurril fellow,
Fri. P. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abused. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accused your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her
As she from one ungot.
Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that Friar Lodowick that she speaks of?
Fri. P. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurril, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
Lucio. My lord, most villainously; believe it.
Fri. P. Well, he in time may come to clear himself;
But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true and false; and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full clear,
Whensover he's converted. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accused,
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.
Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.
[Isabella is carried off guarded; and Mariana comes forward.
Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats. Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause. Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face, and after speak.
Mari. Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face.
Until my husband bid me.
Duke. What, are you married?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. Are you a maid?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. A widow, then?
Mari. Neither, my lord.
Duke. Why, you are nothing then: neither aid, widow, nor wife.
Lucio. My lord, she may be a pun: for any of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.
Duke. Silence that fellow: I would he had some cause 181
o prattle for himself.
Lucio. Well, my lord.
Mari. My lord, I do confess I never was married; and I confess besides I am no maid: have known my husband; yet my husband nows not that ever he knew me.
Lucio. He was drunk then my lord: it can no better.
Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou say too? 191
Lucio. Well, my lord.
Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.
Mari. Now I come to't, my lord: that he accuses him of fornication, is self-same manner doth accuse my husband, and charges him, my lord, with such a time he'll depose I had him in mine arms 'th all the effect of love.
Ang. Charges she more than me?
Mari. Not that I know. 200
Duke. No? you say your husband.
Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo, he thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body, it knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's.
Ang. This is a strange abuse. Let's see thy face.
Mari. My husband bids me; now I will unmask. [Unveiling.
is is that face, thou cruel Angelo, hich once thou sworest was worth the looking on; is is the hand which, with a vow'd contract, as fast belock'd in thine; this is the body 210 that took away the match from Isabel, and did supply thee at thy garden-house: her imagined person.
Lucio. Know you this woman?
Lucio. Carnally, she says.
Duke. Sirrah, no more!
Lucio. Enough, my lord.
Ang. My lord, I must confess I know this woman:
Ad five years since there was some speech of marriage swist myself and her; which was broke off, 220 utly for that her promised proportions were short of composition, but in chief or that her reputation was disvalued levity: since which time of five years ever spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her, on my faith and honour.
Mari. Noble prince; there comes light from heaven and words from breath, there is sense in truth and truth in virtue, im affianced this man's wife as strongly words could make up vows: and, my good lord, it Tuesday night last gone in's garden-house e knew me as a wife. As this is true, 230 t me in safety raise me from my knees;

Or else for ever be confixed here,
A marble monument!
Ang. I did but smile till now:
Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice;
My patience here is touch'd. I do perceive
These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member
That sets them on: let me have way, my lord,
To find this practice out.
Duke. Ay, with my heart;
And punish them to your height of pleasure. 240
Thou foolish friar, and thou pernicious woman,
Compact with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths,
Though they would swear down each particular saint,
Were testimonies against his worth and credit
That's seal'd in approbation? You, Lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
To find out this abuse, whence 'tis derived.
There is another friar that set them on;
Let him be sent for.
Fri. P. Would he were here, my lord! for he indeed 250
Hath set the women on to this complaint:
Your provost knows the place where he abides
And he may fetch him.
And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best,
In any chastisement: I for a while will leave you; 260
But stir not you till you have well determined
Upon these slanderers.
Escal. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly. [Exit Duke.
Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?
Lucio. 'Cucullus non facit monachum;' honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.
Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.
Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word.
Escal. Call that same Isabel here once again:
I would speak with her. [Exit an Attendant.
Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.
Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.
Escal. Say you?
Lucio. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly, she'll be ashamed.
Escal. I will go darkly to work with her.
Lucio. That's the way; for women are light at midnight. 272

Re-enter Officers with Isabella; and Pro-Vost with the Duke in his friar's habit.
Escal. Come on, mistress: here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.
Lucio. My lord, here comes the rasical I spoke of; here with the provost.
Escal. In very good time: speak not you to him till we call upon you.
Lucio. Mun.
Escal. Come, sir: did you see these women on to slander Lord Angelo? they have confessed you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.

Escal. How! know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the devil

Be sometime honour'd for his burning throne!
Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me
speak.

Escal. The duke's in us; and we will hear you speak:

Look you speak justly.

Duke. Boldly, at least. But, O, poor souls,
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox? 300
Good night to your redress! Is the duke gone?
Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth
Which here you come to accuse.

Lucio. This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.

Escal. Why, thou unreverend and unhallowed friend!

Is't not enough thou hast suborn'd these women
To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth
And in the witness of his proper ear, 310
To call him villain? and then to glance from him
To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice;
Take him hence; to the rack with him! We'll Douse you
Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose.

What, 'unjust'!

Duke. Be not so hot; the duke
Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he Dare rack his own: his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial. My business in this state
Made me a looker on here in Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it o'er-run the stew; laws for all faults, 321
But faults so countenanced, that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.

Escal. Stander to the state! Away with him to jail!

Ang. What can you vouch against him, Sig-nior Lucio?

Is this the man that you did tell us of?

Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither, goodman baldpate: do you know me?

Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably, sir.

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then recounted him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse. 341

Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest I love the duke as I love myself.

Ang. Hark, how the villain would close now, after his unreasonable abuses!

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talked withal,
Away with him to prison! Where is the provost?

Away with him to prison! lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more. Away with those giglots too, and with the other confederate companion!

Duke. [To Provost] Stay, sir; stay awhile.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; fool, sir! Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal, you must be hooched, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face,
and be hanged an hour! Will't not off? 36c

[Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke.

Duke. Thou art the first knave that e'er madest a duke.

First, provost, let me ball these gentle three.

[To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and
you

Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him.

Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. [To Escalus] What you have spoke I will not
Do to you:

We'll 'lodge place him. [To Angelo] Sir, by your leave.

Hast thou word, or wit, or impudence.

That yet can do thee office? If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard,

And hold no longer out.

Ang. O my dread lord,
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I can be indiscernible,
When I perceive your grace, like power divine,
Hath look'd upon my passes. Then, good prince,
No longer session hold upon my shame,
But let my trial be mine own confession:

Immediate sentence then and sequel death
Is all the grace I beg.

Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman? 38c

Ang. I was, my lord.

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.

Do you the office, friar; which consummate,
Return him here again. Go with him, provost.

[Exent Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter and Provost.

Escal. My lord, I am more amazed at his dishonour
Than at the strangeness of it.

Your friar is now your prince: as I was then
Advertising and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.

Isab. O, give me pardon, 39

That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon'd, Isabel
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us,
Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;
And you may marvel why I obscured myself,
Labouring to save his life, and would not rather
Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power
Than let him so be lost. O most kind maid,
It was the swift celerity of his death,
Which I did think with slower foot came on, 40c That brain'd my purpose. But, peace be with him!

That life is better life, past fearing death, an that which lives to fear; make it your comfort,
happy is your brother.

Duke. For this new-married man approaching
here,

iose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd ur well defended honour, you must pardon r Mariana's sake; but as he judged your brother,—
ing criminal, in double violation sacred chastity and of promise-breach 410 ereon dependent, for your brother's life,— e very mercy of the law cries out st audible, even from his proper tongue,
a Angelo for Claudio, death for death!
iste still pays haste, and leisure answers
leisure:
ce doth quit like, and measure still for measure.
en, Angelo, thy faults thus manifested;
ich, though you wouldst deny, denies thee vantage.

do condemn thee to the very block here Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste.

ray with him!

Mari. O my most gracious lord, hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband.

resenting to the safeguard of your honour,
ought your marriage fit; else imputation,
that he knew you, might reproach your life choke your good day to come: for his possessions,
though by confiscation they are ours,
do instate and widow you withal,
buy you a better husband.

Mari. O my dear lord, 430

rave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Never cease, we are defensive.

Mari. Gentle my leg— [Kneeling,—

Duke. You do but lose your labour.

vay with him to death! [To Lucia] Now, sir,
to you.

Mari. O my good lord! Sweet Isabel, take my part;
nd your knees, and all my life to come lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke. Against all sense you do importune
her;
ould she kneel down in mercy of this fact,
brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
take her hence in horror.

Mari. Isabel, do yet but kneel by me;
old up your hands, say nothing; 'I'll speak all.
ey say, best men are moulded out of faults;
for the most, become much more the better
being a little bad: so may my husband.
Isabel, will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

Mari. Most bounteous sir, [Kneeling,— ok, if it please you, on this man condemn'd, if my brother lived: I partly think

A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me: since it is so,
Let him not die. My brother had but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died:

For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent
That perish'd by the way; thoughts are no subjects;

Intents but merely thoughts.

Mari. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit's unprofitable; stand up,
I say.

I have betheought me of another fault.
Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded
At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed?

Prov. No, my good lord; it was by private message.

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office:

Give up your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord:

I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;
Yet did repent me, after more advice:
For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
That should by private order else have died,
I have reserved alive.

Duke. What's he?

Prov. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou hadst done so by Claudio.
Go fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost.

Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise,
As you, Lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgement afterward.

Ang. I am sorry that such sorrow I procure:

And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart

That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provost, with Barnardine, Claudio muffled, and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prov. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a friar told me of this man.
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squarest thy life according. Thou'rt condemn'd:

But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;
And pray thee take this mercy to provide;
For better times to come. Friar, advise him:—
I leave him to your hand. What muffled fellow's that?

Prov. This is another prisoner that I saved,
Who should have died when Claudio lost his head;
As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Unmuffles Claudio.

Duke. [To Isabella] If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardon'd; and, for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: but fitter time for that. By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe; Methinks I see a quickening in his eye. Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well: Look that you love your wife; her worth worth yours. I find an apt remission in myself; And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.

[To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a coward, One all of luxury, an ass, a madman; Wherein have I so deserved of you, That you extol me thus?

Lucio. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you I might be whipt.

Duke. Whipt first, sir, and hanged after. Proclaim it, provost, round about the city, Is any woman wrong'd by this lewd fellow, As I have heard him swear himself there's one Whom he begot with child, let her appear, And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd, Let him be whipt and hang'd.

Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore. Your highness said even now, I made you a duke: good my lord, do not repent me in making me a cuckold.

Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry h
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Take him to prison And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is press to death, whipping, and hanging.

Duke. Slandering a prince deserves it.

[Exeunt Officers with Luc. She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you resto Joy to you, Mariana! Love her, Angelo: I have confess'd her and I know her virtue. Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much go ness:

There's more behind that is more grateul. Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy: We shall employ thee in a worthier place. Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home The head of Ragozine for Claudio's: The offence pardons itself. Dear Isabel, I have a motion much imports your good; Where to you'll a willing ear incline, What's mine is yours and what is yours is mine So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show What's yet behind, that's meet you all shou know. SCENE: Ephesus.

With her I lived in joy; our wealth increased
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnum; till my father's death
And the great care of goods at random left
Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old
Before herself, almost at fainting under
The pleasing punishment that women bear,
Had made provision for her following me
And soon and safe arrived where I was.
There had she not been long but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange the one so like the other
As could not be distinguish'd but by names.
That very hour and in the self-same inn
A meaner woman was delivered
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:

Unwilling I agreed; alas! too soon
We came aboard.
A league from Epidamnum had we sail'd,
Before the always wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance of our harm:
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscured light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which though myself would gladly have embraced,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,

Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forced me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was, for other means was none:
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us:
My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms;
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other:
The children thus disposed, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd,
Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;
And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
Was carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispersed those vapours that offended us;
And, by the benefit of his wished light,
The seas wax'd calm, and we discovered
Two ships from far making amain to us,
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this:
But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.

Duke. Nay, forward, old man; do not break off so;
For we may pity, though not pardon thee.

Æge. O, had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily term'd them merciless to us! For ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter'd by a mighty rock;
Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst;
So that, in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delight in, what to sorrow for;
Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind; 110
And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length, another ship had seized on us;
And, knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave healthful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;
And would have reft the fishers of their prey,
Had not their bark been very slow of sail;
And therefore homeward did they bend their course.
Thus have you heard me sever'd from my bliss,
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,
To tell sad stories of my own mishaps.

Duke. And, for the sake of them thou sorrow'st for,
Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall'n of them and thee till now.

Æge. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother: and importuned me
That his attendant—so his case was like,
Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name—
Might bear him company in the quest of him:
Whom whilst I laboured of a love to see, 131
I hazard'd the loss of whom I loved.
Five summers have I spent in furthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia,
And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus;
Hopeless to find, yet loath to leave unsought
Or that or any place that harbours men.
But here must end the story of my life;
And happy were I in my timely death.
Could all my travels warrant me they live. 140

Duke. Helpless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear the extremity of dire mishap!
Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
Against my crown, my oath, my dignity,
Which princes, would they, may not disannul,
My soul should sue as advocate for thee.
But, though thou art adjudged to the death
And passed sentence may not be recall'd
But to our honour's great disparagement,
Yet I will favour thee in what I can.
Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day
To seek thy life by beneficial help;
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
And live; if no, then thou art doom'd to die.
Gaoler, take him to thy custody.

Gaol. I will, my lord.

Æge. Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The Mart.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, Dromio of Syracuse, and First Merchant.

First Mer. Therefore give out you are Epidamnum,
Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate.
This very day a Syracuseus merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And not being able to buy out his life
According to the statute of the town
Dies ere the weary sun set in the west.
There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee. 1
Within this hour it will be dinner-time:
Till that, I'll view the manners of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return and sleep within mine inn,
For with long travel I am stiff and weary.
Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word,
And go indeed, having so good a mean.  [Exi

Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir, that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn and dine with me?

First Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain meants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon at five o'clock,
Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart
And afterward consort you till bed-time:
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose my self 3
And wander up and down to view the city.

First Mer. Sir, I commend you to your ow content.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine ow content
Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I to the world am like a drop of water
That in the ocean seeks another drop,
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself:
So I, to find a mother and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanac of my true date.
What now? how chance thou art return'd so soon
Dro. E. Return'd so soon I rather approach to late:
ACT II.

SCENE I. The house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master!
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps some merchant hath invited him
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine and never fret:
A man is master of his liberty:
Time is their master, and when they see time
They'll go or come: if so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o' door.
Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O, know he is the bridle of your will.
Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe.
There's nothing situate under heaven's eye
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes and the winged fowls
Are their males' subjects and at their controls:
Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Lords of the wide world and wild watery seas,
Induced with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwed.
Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed.
Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some sway.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.
Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home again, I would for-bear.

Adr. Patience unmoved! no marvel though she pause;
They can be meek that have no other cause.
A wretched soul, bruised with adversity,
We bid be quiet when we hear it cry;
But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,
As much or more we should ourselves complain:
So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee,
With urging helpless patience wouldst relieve me;
But, if thou live to see like right bereft,
This fool-begg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try
Here comes your man; now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Dro. E. Nay, he’s at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know’st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear:
Beshrew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubtfully that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I prithee, is he coming home?

It seems he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Adr. Horn-mad, thou villain!

I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure, he is stark mad.

When I desired him to come home to dinner, he asked me for a thousand marks in gold:

‘Tis dinner-time,’ quoth I; ‘My gold!’ quoth he:

‘Your meat doth burn,’ quoth I; ‘My gold!’ quoth he,

‘Will you come home?’ quoth I; ‘My gold!’ quoth he,

‘Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain?’

‘The pig,’ quoth I, ‘is burn’d;’ ‘My gold!’ quoth he.

‘My mistress, sir,’ quoth I; ‘Hang up thy mistress!’

I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress!’

Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

‘I know, quoth he, ‘no house, no wife, no mistress.’

So that my errand, due unto my tongue,

I thank him, I bare home upon my shoulders;

For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.

Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home?

For God’s sake, send some other messenger.

Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other beating:

Between you I shall have a holy head.

Adr. Hence, prating peasant! fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round with you as you with me,

That like a football you do spurn me thus?

You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me hither:

If I last in this service, you must case me in leather. [Exit.

Luc. Fie, how impatience loueth in your face!

Adr. His company must do his minions grace,

Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.

Hath homely age the alluring beauty took

From my poor cheek? then he hath wasted it: 50

Are my discourses dull? barren my wit?

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr’d,

Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard:

Do their gay vestments his affections bait?

That’s not my fault: he’s master of my state:

What ruins are in me that can be found,

By him not ruin’d? then is he the ground

Of my features. My decayed fair

A sunny look of his would soon repair:

But, too unruly deer, he breaks the pale

And feeds from home; poor I am but his state.

Luc. Self-harming jealousy! fie, beat it hence

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrong dispense.

I know his eye doth homage otherwhere;

Or else what lets it but he would be here?

Sister, you know he promised me a chain;

Would that alone, alone he would detain,

So he would keep fair quarter with his bed!

I see the jewel best enamelled

Will lose his beauty; yet the gold bides still,

That others touch, and often touching will

Wear gold: and no man that hath a name,

By falsehood and corruption doth it shame.

Since that my beauty cannot please his eye,

I’ll weep what’s left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid up safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave

Is wander’d forth, in care to seek me out

By observation and mine host’s report.

I could not speak with Dromio since at first

I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir! is your merry humour alter’d?

As you love strokes, so jest with me again.

You know no Centaur? you received no gold?

Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner"

My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad

That thus so madly thou didst answer me?

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,

Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me?

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold’s receipt

And told’st me of a mistress and a dinner;

For which, I hope, thou felt’st I was displeased.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merr

What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jeer and flout me in the teeth?

Thinkst thou I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that.

[Beating him.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God’s sake! now you jest is earnest:

Upon what bargain do you give it me?

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometime

Do use you for my fool and chat with you,

Your soconcess will jest upon my love.

And make a common of my serious hours.

When the sun shines let foolish gnats make sport,

But creep in crannies when he hides his beams,
Sc. II.]

The Comedy of Errors.

If you will jest with me, know my aspect
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your scorne.

Dro. S. Scone call you it? so you would leave Battering, I had rather have it a head: an you Use these blows long, I must get a scone for my Head and insconce it too; or else I shall seek my Wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I Beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir, but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for they say
Why every hath a wherefore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flouting me; and then, wherefore,—

For urging it the second time to me.

When in the why and the wherefore is neither Rhyme nor reason?

Well, sir, I thank you.

Dro. S. Thank me, sir! for what?

Ant. S. Marry, sir, for this something that
You gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, to give You nothing for something. But say, sir, is it Dinner-time?

Dro. S. No, sir: I think the meat wants that I have.

Ant. S. In good time, sir; what's that?

Dro. S. Basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.

Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you, eat none of it.

Ant. S. Your reason?

Dro. S. Lest it make you cholerick and purchase the other dry basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time:
There's a time for all things.

Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you
Were so cholerick.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the Place bale of father Time himself.

Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover
His hair that grows bald by nature.

Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?

Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig and Recover the lost hair of another man.

Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair,
Being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestow
On beasts; and what he hath scanted men in hair he hath given them in wit.

Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath
More hair than wit.

Dro. S. Not a man of those but he hath the Wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men
Plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost:
Yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.

Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.

Dro. S. Sure ones then.

Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.

Dro. S. Certain ones then.

Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he Spends in trimming; the other, that at dinner
They should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have proved
There is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.

Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial,
Why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is Bald and therefore to the world's end will have Bald followers.

Ant. S. I knew 'twould be a bald conclusion:
But, soft! who waits us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and Frown:

Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects;
I am not Adriana nor thy wife.

The time was once when thou unurgedest wouldst
Vow
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand,
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I speak, or look'd, or touch'd, or carved to thee.

How comes it now, my husband, O, how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me,
That, indivisible, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me?
For know, my love, as easy mayst thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulf
And take unmingled thence that drop again,
Without addition or diminishing,
As take from me thyself and not me too.

How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,
Shouldst thou but see me I were licentious
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By ruffian lust should be contaminat'd!
Wouldst thou not spit at me and spurn at me
And hurl the name of husband in my face
And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot-brow
And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring
And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know thou canst; and therefore see thou do it.

I am possess'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For if we two be one and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion.
Keep then fair league and true with thy true bed;
I live unstate'd, thou undishonoured.

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you
In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
As strange unto your town as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd,
Want wit in all one word to understand.

Luc. Fie, brother! how the world is changed
With you!

When were you wont to use my sister thus?
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.

Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from him,
That he did buffet thee and in his blows Denied my house for his, me for his wife.
Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?
What is the course and drift of your compact?
Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.
Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words
Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.
Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.
Ant. S. How can she thus then call us by our names,
Unless it be by inspiration.
Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave, Abetting him to thwart me in my mood!
Be it my wrong you are from me exempt, But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine:
Thou art an elm, my husband, I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state
Makes me with thy strength to communicate:
If aught possess thee from me, it is dross,
Usurping ivy, brier, or idle moss;
Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion
Infect thy sap and live on thy confusion.
Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her theme:
What was as married to her in my dream?
Or sleep I now and think I hear all this?
What error drives our eyes and ears amiss?
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the offer'd fallacy.
Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.
Dro. S. O, for my beads! I cross me for a sinner.
This is the fairy land: O spite of spites!
We talk with goblins, owls and sprites:
If we obey them not, this will ensue,
They'll suck our breath or pinch us black and blue.
Luc. Why protest thou to thyself and answer'st not?
Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!
Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am I not?
Ant. S. I think thou art in mind, and so am I.
Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape.
Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.
Dro. S. No, I am an ape.
Luc. If thou art changed to aught, 'tis to an ass.
Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me and I long for grass.
'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be
But I should know her as well as she knows me.
Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool,
To put the finger in the eye and weep,
Whilst man and master laugh my woes to scorn.
Come, sir, to dinner. Dromio, keep the gate.
Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day
And shrive you of a thousand idle pranks.
Sirrah, if any ask you for your master, Say he dines forth and let no creature enter.
Come, sister. Dromio, play the porter well.

Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking? mad or well-advised?
Known unto these, and to myself disguised!
I'll say as they say and persever so
And in this mist at all adventures go.
Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?
Adr. Ay; and let none enter, lest I break your pate.
Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.

ACT III.

SCENE I. Before the house of ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, DROMIO of Ephesus, ANGELO, and BALTHAZAR.

Ant. E. Good Signior Angelo, you must excuse us all;
My wife is shrivish when I keep not hours:
Say no, I finger'd with you at your shop
To see the making of her carcanet
And that to-morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villain that would face me down
He met me on the mart and that I beat him
And charged him with a thousand marks in gold
And that I did deny my wife and house.
Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thou mean by this?
Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know;
That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show:
If the skin were parchment and the blows you gave were ink,
Your own handwriting would tell you what I think.
Ant. E. I think thou art an ass.
Dro. E. Marry, so it doth appear
By the wrongs I suffer and the blows I bear.
I should kick, being kick'd; and, being at that pass,
You would keep from my heels and beware of an ass.
Ant. E. You're sad, Signior Balthazar: pray God our cheer
May answer my good will and your good welcome here.
Bal. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.
Ant. E. O, Signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish,
A table full of welcome makes scarce one dainty dish.
Bal. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.
Ant. E. And welcome more common; for that's nothing but words.
Bal. Small cheer and great welcome makes a merry feast.
Ant. E. Ay to a niggardly host and more sparing guest:
But though my cates be mean, take them in good heart.
Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart.
But, soft! my door is lock'd. Go bid them let us in.
Scene 1.

Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Gin!

Dro. S. [Within] Mome, malt-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!

Either get thee from the door or sit down at the hatch.

Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou call'st for such store,

When one is one too many? Go get thee from the door.

Dro. E. What patch is made our porter? My master stays in the street.

Dro. S. [Within] Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on's feet.

Ant. E. Who talks within there? Who, open the door!

Dro. S. [Within] Right, sir; I'll tell you what, an you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant. E. Wherefore? for my dinner: I have not dined to-day.

Dro. S. [Within] Nor to-day here you must not; come again when you may.

Ant. E. What art thou that keepest me out from the house I owe?

Dro. S. [Within] The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio.

Dro. E. O villain! thou hast stolen both mine office and my name.

The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame. If thou hadst been Dromio to-day in my place, Thou wouldst have changed thy face for a name or thy name for an ass.

Luc. [Within] What a coil is there, Dromio? who are those at the gate?

Dro. E. Let my master in, Lucie.

Luc. [Within] Faith, no; he comes too late; And so tell your master.

Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh! I have you with a proverb—Shall I set in my staff?

Luc. [Within] Have at you with another; that's—When? can you tell?

Dro. S. [Within] If thy name be call'd Lucie,—Lucie, thou hast answer'd him well.

Ant. E. Do you hear, you minion? you'll let us in, I hope?

Luc. [Within] I thought to have ask'd you.

Dro. S. [Within] And you said no.

Dro. E. So, come, help: well struck! there was blow for blow.

Ant. E. Thou baggage, let me in.

Luc. [Within] Can you tell for whose sake?

Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.

Luc. [Within] Let him knock till it ache.

Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.

Luc. [Within] What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town? 40

Adr. [Within] Who is that at the door that keeps all this noise?

Dro. S. [Within] By my troth, your town is troubled with unruly boys.

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before.

Adr. [Within] Your wife, sir knave! go get you from the door.

Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this 'knave' would go sore.

Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome: we would fain have either.

Bat. In debating which was best, we shall part with neither.

Dro. E. They stand at the door, master; bid them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in.

Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake there is warm within; you stand here in the cold:

It would make a man mad as a buck, to be so bought and sold.

Ant. E. Go fetch me something: I'll break ope the gate.

Dro. S. [Within] Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knave's pate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir, and words are but wind, Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not behind.

Dro. S. [Within] It seems thou want'st breaking: out upon thee, blind!

Dro. E. Here's too much 'out upon thee!' I pray thee, let me in.

Dro. S. [Within] Ay, when fowls have no feathers and fish have no fin.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in: go borrow me a crow.

Dro. E. A crow without feather? Master, mean you so?

For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather:

If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

Ant. E. Go get thee gone; fetch me an iron crow.

Bat. Have patience, sir; O, let it not be so! Herein you war against your reputation

And draw within the compass of suspicion The unviolated honour of your wife.

Once this,—your long experience of her wisdom, Her sober virtue, years and modesty, Plead on her part some cause to you unknown; And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse Why at this time the doors are made against you. Be ruled by me: depart in patience,

And let us to the Tiger all to dinner, And about evening come yourself alone.

To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in

Now in the stirring passage of the day,

A vulgar comment will be made of it,

And that supposed by the common rout

Against your yet ungalled estimation

That may with foul intrusion enter in

And dwell upon your grave when you are dead; For slander lives upon succession,

For ever housed where it gets possession.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in quiet,

And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,

Pretty and witty, wild and yet, too, gentle: 110

There will we dine. This woman that I mean, My wife—but, I protest, without desert— Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal:

To her will we to dinner. [To Ang.] Get you home

And fetch the chain; by this I know 'tis made:
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.  [Act II.

Scene II. The same.

Enter Luciana and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? shall, Antipholus,
Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so ruinous?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then for her wealth's sake use her with more kindness;
Or if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness:
Let not my sister read it in your eye;
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator; 10
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;
Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger;
Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;
Be secret-false: what need she be acquainted?
What simple thief brags of his own attain't?
'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed
And let her read it in thy looks at board:
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;
Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word. 20
Alas, poor women! make us but believe,
Being compact of credit, that you love us;
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve;
We in your motion turn and you may move us.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again;
Comfort my sister, cheer her heart; call her wife:
'Tis holy sport to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress,—what your name is else, I know not,
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,— 30
Less in your knowledge and your grace you show not
Than our earth's wonder, more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthy-gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth why labour you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am I, then well I know
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more to you do I decline.
O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears:
Sing, siren, for thyself and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take them and there lie,
And in that glorious supposition think 50
He gains by death that hath such means to die:
Let Love, being light, be drowned if she sink.

Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reasonso?

Ant. S. Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know.

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.

Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.

Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.

Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.

Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.

Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.

Luc. That's my sister.

Ant. S. No; 60
It is thyself, mine own self's better part,
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart,
My food, my fortune and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven and my heaven's claim.
Is there this? this is my sister, or else should be.
Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee.
Thee will I love and with thee lead my life:
Thou hast no husband yet nor I no wife.
Give me thy hand.

Luc. O, soft, sir! hold you still:
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will. [Exit. 70

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio! where runn'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio?
am I your man? am I myself?

Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man and besides myself.

Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverent body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of without he say 'Sir-reverence.' I have but lean luck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.

Ant. S. How dost thou mean a fat marriage? 80

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen wench and all grever; and I know not what use to put her to but to make a lamp of her and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags and the tallow in them will burn a Poland winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.
Ant. S. What complexion is she of?

Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why, she sweats;
a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.

Ant. S. What's her name? 170

Dro. S. Nell, sir; but her name and three quarters, that's an ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?

Dro. S. No longer from head to foot than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of her body stands
Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bogs. 121

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard in the palm of the hand.

Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; armed and reverted, making war against her heir.

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I looked for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them; but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breast.

Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. S. Oh, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadoes of caracks to be ballast at her nose. 141

Ant. S. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. Oh, sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; called me Dromio; swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me, as, the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I amazed ran from her as a witch:

And, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith and my heart of steel, 150
She had transform'd me to a curtail dog and made me turn 't the wheel.

Ant. S. Go hire thee presently, post to the road:
An if the wind blow any way from shore,
I will not harbour in this town to-night:
If any bark put forth, come to the mart,
Where I will walk till thou return to me.
If every one knows us and we know none,
'Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and be gone.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life,
So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.

Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit
here; 161
And therefore 'tis high time that I were hence.
She that doth call me husband, even my soul
Doth for a wife abhor. But her fair sister,
Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace,
Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me traitor to myself:
But, lest myself be guilty to self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter ANGELO with the chain.

Ang. Master Antipholus,—

Ant. S. I know it well, sir: lo, here is the chain.

Ang. What is your will that I shall do with this?

Ant. S. What please yourself, sir: I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespoke it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have,
Go home with it and please your wife withal;
And soon at supper-time I'll visit you
And then receive my money for the chain. 180

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you ne'er see chain nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir: fare you well. 181

[Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell;
But this I think, there's no man is so vain
That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain.
I see a man here needs not live by shifts,
When in the streets he meets such golden gifts.
I'll to the mart and there for Dromio stay:
If any ship put out, then straight away. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene I. A public place.

Enter Second Merchant, ANGELO, and an Officer.

Sec. Mer. You know since Pentecost the sum is due,
And since I have not much importuned you;
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Persia and want guilders for my voyage:
Therefore make present satisfaction,
Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum that I do owe to you
Is growing to me by Antipholus,
And in the instant that I met with you
He had of me a chain: at five o'clock
10
I shall receive the money for the same.
Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house,
I will discharge my bond and thank you too.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus and DROMIO of Ephesus, from the courtezans.

Off. That labour may you save: see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou
And buy a rope's end: that will I bestow
Among my wife and her confederates,
For locking me out of my doors by day.
But, soft! I see the goldsmith. Get thee gone;
Buy thou a rope and bring it home to me. 20

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year; I buy a rope. [Exit.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to myself;
I promised your presence and the chain;
But neither chain nor goldsmith came to me.
Belike you thought our love would last too long,
If it were chain'd together, and therefore came not.
Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note.
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat,
The fineness of the gold and chargeable fashion,
Which doth amount to three odd ducats more
Than I stand debted to this gentleman:
I pray you, see him presently discharged,
For he is bound to sea and stays but for it.
Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present
money;
Besides, I have some business in the town.
Good signior, take the stranger to my house
And with you take the chain and bid my wife
Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof:
Perchance I will be there as soon as you.
Ang. Then you will bring the chain to her yourself?
Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.
Ang. Well, sir, I will. Have you the chain about you?
Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you
Or else you may return without your money.
Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give 'me
the chain:
Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman,
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.
Ant. E. Good Lord! you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise to the Porpentine.
I should have chid you for not bringing it,
But, like a shrew, 'you first begin to brawl.
Sec. Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you,
sir, dispatch.
Ang. You hear how he importunes me;—the chain!
Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife and fetch your money.
Ang. Come, come, you know I gave it you even now.
Either send the chain or send me by some token.
Ant. E. Fie, now you run this humour out of breath,
Come, where's the chain? I pray you, let me see it.
Sec. Mer. My business cannot brook this dalliance.
Good sir, say whether you'll answer me or no:
If not, I'll give him to the officer.
Ant. E. I answer you! what should I answer
you?
Ang. The money that you owe me for the
chain.
Ant. E. I owe you none till I receive the
chain.
Ang. You know I gave it you half an hour since.
Ant. E. You gave me none: you wrong me much to say so.
Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:
Consider how it stands upon my credit.
Sec. Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.
Off. I do: and charge you in the duke's name to obey me.
Ang. This touches me in reputation.

Either consent to pay this sum for me
Or I attach you by this officer.
Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had!
Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou darest.
Ang. Here is thy fee; arrest him, officer.
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.
Off. I do arrest you, sir: you hear the suit.
Ant. E. I do obey thee till I give thee bail.
But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear
As all the metal in your shop will answer.
Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame; I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, from the bay.
Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnum
That stays but till her owner comes aboard
And then, sir, she bears away. Our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd aboard and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum and aqua-vitæ.
The ship is in her trim; the merry wind
Blows fair from land: they stay for nought at all
But for their owner, master, and yourself.
Ant. E. How now! a madman! Why, thou piveish sheep,
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?
Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.
Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope
And told thee to what purpose and what end.
Dro. S. You sent me for a rope's end as soon:
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.
Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more
leisure
And teach your ears to list me with more heed.
To Adriana, villain, lie thee straight:
Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry
There is a purse of ducats; let her send it:
Tell her I am arrested in the street
And that shall bail me: 'tis she, slave, be gone!
On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Exeunt Sec. Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.
Dro. S. To Adriana! that is where we dined,
Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters' minds fulfil.

Scene II. The house of Anthophylus
Ephesus.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.
Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plead in earnest? yea or no?
Look'd he or red or pale, or sad or merry?
What observation madest thou in this case
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?
Luc. First he denied you had in him no right.
Adr. He meant he did me none; the more my spite.
Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger
here.
A Dr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn
he were.
Luc. Then pleaded I for you.
A Dr. "And what said he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you he begg'd of me.
A Dr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words that in an honest suit might move.

first he did praise my beauty, then my speech.
A Dr. Didst speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
A Dr. I cannot, nor I will not, hold me still;
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old and sere,
Ull-faced, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere; so
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind,
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?
No evil lost is wall'd when it is gone.
A Dr. Ah, but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others' eyes be worse.
Far from her nest the lapwing cries away:
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.
Dro. S. Here! go! the desk, the purse!
sweet, now, make haste.
Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?
Dro. S. By running fast.
A Dr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he
well?
Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him;
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel;
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough:
A wolf; nay, worse, a fellow all in buff;
A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermands
The passages of alleys, creeks and narrow lands;
A hound that runs counter and yet draws dry-foot
well;
One that before the judgement carries poor souls
to hell.
A Dr. Why, man, what is the matter?
Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is 'trested on the case.
A Dr. What, is he arrested? Tell me at whose suit.
Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested well;
But he's in a suit of buff which 'rested him, that can I tell.
Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in his desk?
A Dr. Go fetch it, sister. [Exit Luciana.]

This I wonder at,
That he, unknown to me, should be in debt.
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing:
A chain, a chain! Do you not hear it ring?
A Dr. What, the chain?
Dro. S. No, no, the bell: 'tis time that I were gone.

It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.
A Dr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.
Dro. S. O, yes; if any hour meet a sergeant,
a' turns back for very fear.
A Dr. As if Time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason!
Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt and owes more than he's worth to season.
Nay, he's a thief too: have you not heard men say,
That Time comes stealing on by night and day? Go If Time be in debt and theft, and a sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana with a purse.
A Dr. Go, Dromio; there's the money, bear it
straight,
And bring thy master home immediately.
Come, sister: I am press'd down with conceit—
Conceit, my comfort and my injury. [Exeunt.

Scene III. A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.
Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but doth salute me
As if I were their well-acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me; some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop
And show'd me silks that he had bought for me
And therewithal took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.
Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for. What, have you got the picture of old Adam new-apparelled?
Ant. S. What gold is this? what Adam dost thou mean?
Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's skin that was killed for the Prodigal; he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.
Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went, like a bass-viol, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a sob and 'rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more expoits with his mace than a morris-pike.
Ant. S. What, thou meanest an officer?
Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed and says 'God give you good rest!'
Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery.
Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be gone?
Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then were you hindered by the sargeant, to tarry for the hoy Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distrai't, and so am I; And here we wander in illusions: Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtzean.

Covr. Well met, well met, Master Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now: Is that the chain you promised me to-day?

Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not.

Dro. S. Master, is this Mistress Satan?

Ant. S. It is the devil. 50

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam; and here she comes in the habit of a light wench; and thereof comes that the wenches say 'God damn me,' that's as much to say 'God make me a light wench.' It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn. Come not near her.

Covr. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir. Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner here.

Dro. S. Master, if you do, expect spoon-meat; or bespeak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that can eat with the devil.

Ant. S. Avoid then, lend I what tell'st thou me of supping?

Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress: I conjure thee to leave me and be gone.

Covr. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or, for my diamond, the chain you promised, 70 And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you. Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of one's nail, A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin, A nut, a cherry-stone; But she, more covetous, would have a chain. Master, be wise, if you give it her. The devil will shake her chain and fright us with it.

Covr. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain: I hope you do not mean to cheat me so.

Ant. S. Avant, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go. 80

Dro. S. 'Fly pride,' says the peacock: mistress, that you know.

[Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro. S.]

Covr. Now, out of doubt Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demean himself. A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promised me a chain: Both one and other he denies me now. The reason that I gather he is mad, Besides this present instance of his rage, Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner, Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike his wife, acquainted with his fits, 91 On purpose shut the doors against his way. My way is now to lise home to his house, And tell his wife that, being lunatic, He rush'd into my house and took perforce My ring away. This course I fittest choose: For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.

Scene IV. A street.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus and the Officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away: I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money, To warrant thee, as I am restor'd for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day, And will not lightly trust the messenger. That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus with a rope's-end. Here comes my man; I think he brings the money, How now, sir! have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home?

Dro. E. To a rope's-end, sir; and to that end am I returned.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you. [Beating him.

Off. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Off. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain! Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel thy blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed; you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service but blows. When I am cold, he heats me with beating: When I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am waked with it when I sleep; raised with it when I sit; driven out of doors with it when I go from home; welcomed home with it when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar wont her brat; and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtzean, and Pinch.

Dro. E. Mistress, 'respite finem,' respect your end; or rather, † the prophecy like the parrot, 'beware the rope's-end.'

COUR. How say you now? is not your husband mad?
ADR. His incivility confirms no less.

[To Doctor Pinch, who is conjuring; the scene changes.

COUR. Mark how he trembles in his ecstasy!
PINCH. Give me your hand and let me feel your pulse.

ANT. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear. [Striking him.

PINCH. I charge thee, Satan, housed within this man, to yield possession to my holy prayers and to thy state of darkness hee thee straight: conjure thee by all the saints in heaven!]

ANT. E. Peace, dotting wizard, peace! I am not mad.

ADR. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul!

ANT. E. You minion, you, are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face and feet fasten it at my house to-day, whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut and I denied to enter in my house?

ADR. O husband, God doth know you dined at home: where would you have remain'd until this time, were from these slanders and this open shame!

ANT. E. Dined at home! Thou villain, what sayest thou?

DRO. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

ANT. E. Were not my doors lock'd up and I shut out?

DRO. E. Perdie, your doors were lock'd and you shut out.

ANT. E. And did not she herself revile me then?

DRO. E. Sans fable, she herself reviled you there.

ANT. E. Did not her kitchen-maid raill, taunt and scorn me?

DRO. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scold'd you.

ANT. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

DRO. E. In verity you did; my bones bear witness, hat since have felt the vigour of his rage.

ADR. Is't good to soothe him in these contrivances?

PINCH. It is no shame: the fellow finds his vein yielding to him humour's well his frenzy.

ANT. E. Thou hast suborn'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

ADR. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you, y' Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

DRO. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you might; but surely, master, not a rag of money.

ANT. E. Went'st not thou to her for a purse of ducats?

ADR. He came to me and I deliver'd it.

LUCE. And I am witness with her that she did.

DRO. E. God and the rope-maker bear witness.
Cour. When as your husband all in rage to-day
Came to my house and took away my ring—
| 141 |
The ring I saw upon his finger now—
Straight after did I meet him with a chain.
| 150 |
Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it.
Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is:
I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.
Adr. And come with naked swords.
Let's call more help to have them bound again.
Off. Away! they'll kill us.

[Exeunt all but Ant. S. and Dro. S.]

Ant. S. I see these witches are afraid of swords.
Dro. S. She that would be your wife now ran from you.

Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence:
I long that we were safe and sound aboard.
Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night; they will surely do us no harm: you saw they speak us fair, give us gold; methinks they are such a gentle nation that, but for the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. A street before a Priory.

Enter Second Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;
But, I protest, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.
Sec. Mer. How is the man esteemed here in the city?
Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir,
Of credit infinite, highly beloved.
Second to none that lives here in the city:
His word might bear my wealth at any time.
Sec. Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck.
Which he forswore most monstrously to have.
Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him.
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And, not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oaths so to deny
This chain which now you wear so openly:
Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend,
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail and put to sea to-day:
This chain you had of me; can you deny it?

Ant. S. I think I had; I never did deny it.
Sec. Mer. Yes, that you did, sir, and forswore it too.

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it or forswear it?
Sec. Mer. These ears of mine, thou know'st;
did hear thee.
Fie on thee; wretch! 'tis pity that thou livest
To walk where any honest men resort.

Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus;
I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou darest stand.

Sec. Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain.

[They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake! he is mad.

Some get within him, take his sword away:
Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.
Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a house!

This is some priory. In, or we are spoil'd!

[Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro. S. to the Priory.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng ye hereby?
Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.

Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew he was not in his perfect wits.
Sec. Mer. I am sorry now that I did draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possession held th' man?
Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad,
And much different from the man he was;
But till this afternoon his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.
Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of sea?
Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
Adr. To none of these, except it be the last.
Namely, some love that drew him oft from home.
Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.
Adr. Why, so I did.
Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.
Adr. As roughly as my modesty would let me.
Abb. Harpy, in private.
Adr. And in assemblies too.
Abb. Ay, but not enough.
Adr. It was the copy of our conference:
In bed he slept not for my urging it;
At board he fed not for my urging it;
Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company I often glanced it;
Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.
Abb. And thereof came it that the man was mad:
The venom cloures of a jealous woman
Poisons more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.
It seems his wits were hinder'd by thy railing,
And thereof comes it that his head is light.
The sauce of his meat was sauced with thy unbridings:
Unquiet meals make ill digestions;
of the raging fire of fever bred;
what's a fever but a fit of madness?

You say'st his sports were hinder'd by thy brows;
Yet recreation bard'd, what doth ensue from sport, and life-preserving rest,
'Be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast;

A consequence is then thy jealous fits,ve
Idly and without any answer not?
She did betray me to my own reproof.

No, not a creature enters in my house.
Then let your servants bring my husband forth.

Neither: he took this place for sanctuary, shall privilege him from your hands.
I have brought him to his wits again,
lose my labour in assaying it.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
it is his sickness, for it is my office.
d will have no attorney but myself;

I therefore let me have him home with me.
Be patient: for I will not let him stir,
I have used the approved means I have,
th wholesome syrups, drugs and holy prays,
make of him a formal man again;

A branch and parcel of mine oath,
Charitable duty of my order.

I will not hence and leave my husband here:
ill it doth be seem your holiness
Separate the husband and the wife.

Be quiet and depart: thou shalt not have Exeunt. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Come, go: I will fall prostrate at his feet
d never rise until my tears and prayers
We won his grace to come in person hither
d take perforce my husband from the abbess.

By this, I think, the dial points at five

I am sure, the duke himself in person
Mes this way to the melancholy vale,

A place of death and sorry execution,
Hind the ditches of the abbey here.

Upon what cause?

To see a reverend Syrian merchant,
Up unmixed into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Headed publicly for his offence.

See where they come: we will behold

Kneel to the duke before he pass the abbey.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly,
Any friend will pay the sun for him,
Shall not die; so much we tender him.

Adr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady:

May it please your grace, Antipholus my husband,
Whom I made lord of me and all I had,
At your important letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him;
That desparately he hurried through the street.—
With him his bondman, all as mad as he,—

Doing displeasure to the citizens.
By rushing in their houses, bearing hence
Kings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound and sent him home,
Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went
That here and there his fury had committed.
Anon, I wot not by what strong escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him:

And with his mad attendants and himself,
Each one with ousel passion, with drawn swords,
Met us again and madly bent on us
Chased us away, till raising of more aid
We came again to bind them. Then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them:
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth that we may bear him hence.
Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command
Let him be brought forth and borne hence for help.

Long since thy husband served me in My wars,
And to thee engaged a prince's word,
When thou didst make him master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could.

Go, some of you, knock at the abbey-gate
And bid the lady abbess come to me.
I will determine this before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself!

My master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the maids-a-row and bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have singed off with brands of fire;
And ever, as it blazed, they threw on him
Great pails of pulped mire to quench the hair:
My master preaches patience to him and the while
His man with scissors nicks him like a fool,
And sure, unless you send some present help,
Between them they will kill the conjurer.

Peace, fool! thy master and his man are here,

And that is false thou dost report to us.

Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true: I have not breathed almost since I did see it.
He cries for you and vows, if he can take you,
To scorch your face and to disfigure you.

Hark, hark! I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone!

Come, stand by me; fear nothing.
Guard with halberds!

Ay me, it is my husband! Witness you,
That he is borne about invisible:
Even now we housed him in the abbey here;
And now he's there, past thought of human reason.
Enter Antipholus of Ephesus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke, O, grant me justice!

Even for the service that long since I did thee,
When I besprinkled thee in the wars and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood
That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Æge. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote,
I see my son Antipholus and Dromio.

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there!
She whom thou gavest to me to be my wife,
That hath abused and dishonour'd me
Even in the strength and height of injury!

Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath shamelessly thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me,
While she with harlots feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault! Say, woman, didst thou so?

Adv. No, my good lord: myself, he and my sister
To-day did dine together. So befall my soul
As this is false he burdens me withal!

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night,
But she tells to your highness simple truth!

Ang. O perjured woman! They are both forsworn:
In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say,
Neither disturbed with the effect of wine,
Nor heady-rash, provoked with raging ire,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner:
That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witness it, for he was with me then;

Who parted with me to go fetch a chain,
Promising to bring it to the Porpentine,
Where Balkazar and I did dine together.

Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seek him: in the street I met him
And in his company that gentleman.

There did this perjured goldsmith swear me down
That I this day of him received the chain,
Which, God he knows, I saw not: for which
He did arrest me with an officer.

Æge. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus?
And is not that your bondman, Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman,

But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords:
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunds
I gain'd my freedom and immediately
Ran hither to your grace; whom I beseech
To give me ample satisfaction
For these deep shames and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him,
That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee or no?

Ang. He had, my lord: and when he ran here,
These people saw the chain about his neck.

Sec. Mer. Besides, I will be sworn these casks

Heard you confess you had the chain of him?
After you first foresaw it on the mart:
And thereupon I drew my sword on you;
And then you fled into this abbey here,
From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls,
Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me:
I never saw the chain, so help me Heaven!
And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intricate impleach this!
I think you all have drunk of Circe's cup.

If here you housed him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:
You say he dined at home; the goldsmith here
Denies that saying. Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there, at the Porpentine.

COUR. He did, and from my finger snatch'd that ring.

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my liege; this ring I have of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbe here?

COUR. As sure, my liege, as I do see you grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange. Go call the abbess hither.

I think you are all mated or stark mad.

[Exit one to the Abbess.

Æge. Most mighty duke, vouchesafe me speech a word:

Haply I see a friend will save my life
And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Æge. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus?
And is not that your bondman, Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman.

But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords:
And in a dark and dankish vault at home

Now am I Dromio and his man unbound.

Æge. I am sure you both of you remember me?

Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, b you:
For lately we were bound, as you are now.

You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir?
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Ege. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Int. E. I never saw you in my life till now.

Ege. O, grief hath changed me since you saw me last.

d carefull hours with time's deformed hand
ve written strange defeatures in my face:

tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Int. E. Neither.

Ege. Dromio, nor thou?

Pro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

Ege. I am sure thou dost.

Pro. E. Ay, sir, but I am sure I do not; and atsoever a man denies, you are now bound to love him.

Ege. Not know my voice! 0 time's extremity, st thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue seven short years, that here my only son owes not my feeble key of unturned cares?

ough now this grained face of mine be hit sapping winter's drizzled snow
d all the conduits of my blood froze up,

d hath all night of life some memory,
dull deaf ears a little use to hear:

these old witnesses—I cannot err—

me thou art my Antipholus.

Int. E. I never saw my father in my life.

Ege. But seven years since, in Syracuse,

ou knowst we parted: but perhaps, my son,

to shamest to acknowledge me in misery.

Int. E. The duke and all that know me in the city a witness with me that it is not so:

er saw Syracuse in my life.

Int. E. I tell thee, Syracusan, twenty years

ve I been patron to Antipholus, ring which time he ne'er saw Syracuse:

thy age and dangers make thee dote.

—enter Abbess, with ANTIPOHULS of Syracuse and DROMIO of Syracuse.

168. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong'd. [All gather to see them. 330

Adv. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is Genius to the other:

d so of these. Which is the natural man,
d which the spirit? who decipher them?

Pro. S. I, sir, am Dromio: command him away.

Pro. E. I, sir, am Dromio: pray, let me stay.

Int. S. Ageon art thou not? or else his ghost?

Pro. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him here?

166. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds

d gain a husband by his liberty.

340

ant. E. If I dream not, thou art Emilia:

If thou art she, tell me where is that son

That floated with thee on the fatal raft?

Abb. By men of Epidamnum he and I

And the twin Dromio all were taken up;

But by and by rude fishermen of Corinth

By force took Dromio and my son from them

And me they left with those of Epidamnum.

What then became of them I cannot tell; I to this fortune that you see me in.

Duke. Why, here begins his morning story right:

These two Antipholuses, these two so like,

And these two Dromios, one in semblance,—

Besides her urging of her want at sea,—

These are the parents to these children,

Which accidentally are met together.

Antipholus, thou camest from Corinth first?

Ant. S. No, sir, not I; I came from Syracuse.

Duke. Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which.

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.—

Dro. E. And with him, I.

Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adv. Which of you two did dine with me today?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adv. And are not you my husband?

Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.

Ant. S. And so do I; yet did she call me so:

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here,

Did call me brother. [To Luc.] What I told you then,

I hope I shall have leisure to make good;

If this be not a dream I see and hear.

Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

Ant. S. I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Ang. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

Adv. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail,

By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I received from you

And Dromio my man did bring them me.

I see we still did meet each other's man,

And I was ta'en for him, and he for me,

And thereupon these errors are arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father

here.

Duke. It shall not need; thy father hath his life.

Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from

you.

Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains

To go with us into the abbey here

And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes :

And all that are assembled in this place,

That by this sympathized one day's error

Have suffer'd wrong, go keep us company,

And we shall make full satisfaction.
Thirty-three years have I but gone in travail
Of you, my sons; and till this present hour
My heavy burthen ne'er delivered.
The duke, my husband and my children both,
And you the calendars of their nativity,
Go to a gossips' feast, and go with me;
After so long grief, such festivity!

Duke. With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard?

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embark'd?

Dro. S. Your goods that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to me. I am your master, Dromio:

Come, go with us; we'll look to that anon:

Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him.

[Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house,
That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner:
She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks you are my glass, and my brother:
I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.
Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We'll draw cuts for the senior; then lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then, thus:
We came into the world like brother and brother:
And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another.

[Exeunt.}
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Don Pedro, prince of Arragon.
Don John, his bastard brother.
Claudio, a young lord of Florence.
Benedick, a young lord of Padua.
Leonato, governor of Messina.
Antonio, his brother.
Balthasar, attendant on Don Pedro.
Conrade, followers of Don John.
Borachio, Francis.
Dogberry, a constable.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Before Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, Hero, and Beatrice, with a Messenger.

Leon. I learn in this letter that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. He is very near by this: he was not rece leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine called Claudio.

Mess. Much deserved on his part and equally numbered by Don Pedro: he hath borne him, beyond the promise of his age, doing, in the sure of a lamb, the feats of a lion; he hath indeed bettered bettered expectation than you must expect from me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will very much glad of it.

Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much that joy could not show itself modest enough, thou a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness: there are faces truer than those that are so washed. ow much better is it to weep at joy than to joy weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is Signior Montanto removed from the war or no?

Mess. I know none of that name, lady: there is none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means Signior Benedict of Dubia.

Mess. O, he's returned; and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina and allenged Cupid at the flight; and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt. I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? For indeed I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax Signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man; he hath an excellent stomach.

Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady: but what is he to a lord?

Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing, well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece. There is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Mess. Is't possible?

Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block.

Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.

Beat. No; an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord, he will hang upon him like a Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Claudio, Benedick, and Balthasar.

D. Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace: for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but when you depart from me, sorrow abides and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself. Be happy, lady; for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If Signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Beat. I wonder that you will still be talking, Signior Benedick: nobody marks you.

Bene. What, my dear Lady Disdain! are you yet living?

Beat. Is it possible disdain should die while she hath such food to meet it as Signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

Bene. Then is courtesy a turncoat. But it is certain I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted: and I would to God I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women: they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratched face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer. But keep your way, 'tis God's name; I have done.

Beat. You always end with a jade's trick: I know you of old.

D. Pedro. That is the sum of all, Leonato. Signior Claudio and Signior Benedick, my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer.

I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn. [To Don John] Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together.

[Exeunt all except Benedick and Claudio]

Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgement; or would you have me speak after my custom, being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No; I pray thee speak in sober judge manner.

Bene. Why, faith, methinks she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her, that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

Claud. Thou think'st me too in sport: I pray thee, give me truly how thou likest her.

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquir after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow? or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good harem finder and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, if what key shall a man take you, to go in the song...

Claud. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles and see no such matter: there's her cousin, an she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her in much in beauty as the first of May doth the las of December. But I hope you have no intention to turn husband, have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Bene. Is 't come to this? In faith, hath no the world one man but he will wear his cap without suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three score again? Go to, I faith; an thou wilt need thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look; Don Pedro I returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here that you followed not to Leonato's?

Bene. I would your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bene. You hear, Count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man; I would have you think so; but, on my allegiance, mark you this, on my allegiance. He is in love. With who? now that is your grace's part. Mark how short his answer is:—With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: 'tis not so nor twas not so, but, indeed, God forbid it
Could be so! 220

Clau'd. If my passion change not shortly, or forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the day is very well worthy.

Clau'd. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Clau'd. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

Bene. And, by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Clau'd. That I love her, I feel. 230

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Bene. That I neither feel how she should be ved nor know how she should be worthy, is the union that fire cannot melt out of me: I will be in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic as the despise of beauty.

Clau'd. And never could maintain his part but the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her: that she brought me up, I likewise give her her humble thanks: but that I will have a repect winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle an invisible baldric, all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to distrust any, I will do myself the right to trust one; and the fine is, for which I may go the world, I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look ale with love. 250

Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with anger, my lord, not with love: prove that ever lose more blood with love than I will get again with drinking; pick out mine eyes with a balladaker's pen and hang me up at the door of a coach-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from its faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat in the head, and make Adam 262

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:
In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke.

Bene. The savage bull may; but if ever the able Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's nose and set them in my forehead: and let me be a little painted, and in such great letters as they write 'here is good horse to hire,' let them sig under my sign 'Here you may see Benedick em a married man.'

Clau'd. If this should ever happen, thou oulst be horn-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his arrow in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I look for an earthquake too, then.

D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the
ous. In the meantime, good Signor Benedick, pair to Leonato's; commend to him and if him I will not fail him at supper; for indeed hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for the Passion; and so I commit you—

Clau'd. To the tuition of God: From my ese, if I had it,—

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving end, Benedick.
ACT II.

SCENE I. A hall in LEONATO’S house.

Enter LEONATO, ANTONIO, HERO, BEATRICE, and others.

Leon. Was not Count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tardy that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Her. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He was an excellent man that were made just in the midway between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image and says nothing, and the other too like my lady’s eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then half Signior Benedick’s tongue in Count John’s mouth, and half Count John’s melancholy in Signior Benedick’s face,—

Beat. With a good leg and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world, if he could get her good-will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she’s too curst.

Beat. Too curst is more than curst: I shall lessen God’s sending that way; for it is said, ‘God sends a curst cow short horns;’ but to a cow too curst he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curst, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool that betroths himself to unquietness?

Bora. Marry, it is your brother’s right hand.

D. John. Who? the most exquisite Claudio?

Bora. Even he.

D. John. A proper square! And who, and who? which way looks he?

Bora. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

D. John. A very forward March-chick! How came you to this?

Bora. Being entertained for a perfumer, as I was smoking a dusty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whip me behind the arras; and there heard it agreed upon that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to Count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither: this may prove God to my displeasure. That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow: if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper; their clause is the greater that I am subdued. Would the cock were of my mind! Shall we go prove what’s to be done?

Bora. We’ll wait upon your lordship.

[Exeunt.]
be which blessing I am at him upon my knees very morning and evening. Lord, I could not adore a husband with a beard on his face: I am rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light on a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel and make him my waiting-gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man; and he that is more than a youth is not for me, and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bearward, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well, then, go you into hell?

Beat. No, but to the gate; and there will he devil meet me, like an old courtkold, with ones on his head, and say 'Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maids.' So deliver I up my apes, and away o' Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. [To Hero.] Well, niece, I trust you will be ruled by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make curtsy and say 'Father, as it please you.' But yet for all that, cousin, let him be a seasonable fellow, or else make another curtsy and say 'Father, as it please me.'

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day married with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be overmastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clod of wayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and, truly, I hold it a sin to catch in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you; if the prince do solicit you in that kind, ou know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not wooded in good time: if the prince is too important, tell him there is measure in every thing and so dance out the answer. For, ear me, Hero: wooing, wedding, and repenting, as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly wasted, as a measure, full of state and antiquity; and then comes repentance and, with his bad legs, till he sink into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a lurch by daylight.

Leon. The revellers are entering, brother: take good room. [All put on their masks.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasar, Don John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and others, masked.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friends?

Hero. So you walk sojily and look sweetly and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and specially when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philémon's roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then, your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love. [Drawing her aside.

Balth. Well, I would you did like me.

Marg. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Balth. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Balth. I love you the better: the ears may cry, Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Balth. Amen.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done! Answer, clerk.

Balth. No more words: the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough: you are Signor Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the waggling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man. Here's his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come, do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he: graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the 'Hundred Merry Tales':—well, this was Signor Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible slanderers: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany; for he both pleases men and angers them, and then they laugh at him and beat him. I am sure he is in the fleet: I would he had boarded me.

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure not marked or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Draw. Then exit all except Don John, Borachio, and Claudio.
D. John. Sure my brother is amorous on Hero and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her and but one visor remains.

Bona. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

D. John. Are not you Signior Benedick?

Claud. You know me well; I am he.

D. John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero; I pray you, dissuade him from her: she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves her?

D. John. I heard him swear his affection.

Bona. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

D. John. Come, let us to the banquet.

Exeunt Don John and Bonachio.

Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick, but hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio. 'Tis certain so; the prince woos for himself. If friendship is constant in all other things, save in the office and affairs of love! Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues: let every eye negotiate for itself and trust no agent; for beauty is a witch against whose charms faith melteth into blood. This is an accident of hourly proof, which I mistrusted not. Farewell, therefore, Hero!

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudio?

Claud. Yea, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claud. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, county. What fashion will you wear the garland of? about your neck, like an usurer's chain? or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. But did you think the prince would have served you thus?

Claud. I pray you, leave me.

Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exit.

Bene. Alas, poor hurt fowl! now will he creep into sedges. But that my Lady Beatrice should know me and not know me! The prince's fool! Ha? It may be I go under that title because I am merry. Yea, but so I am apt to do myself wrong; I am not so reputed: it is the base, though bitter, disposition of Beatrice that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the count? did you see him?

Bene. Troth, my lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren: I told him, and I think I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow-tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a roset, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro. To be whipped! What's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. Pedro. Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet, though he had not been amiss the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself, and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his birds' nest.

D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you: the gentleman that danced with her told her she is much wronged by you.

Bene. O, she misused me past the endurance of a block! I an oak but with one green leaf on it would have answered her: my visor began to assume life and scold with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester, that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest with such impossible conveyance upon me that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me. She aims poniards and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her: you shall find her the infernal Ate in good apparel. I would to God some scholar would conjure her; for certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so, indeed, all disquiet, horror and perturbation followed.

D. Pedro. Look, here she comes.

Enter Claudio, Beatrice, Hero, and Leonato.

Bene. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes that you can devise to send me on: I will fetch you a tooth-pick now from the furthest inch of Asia, bring you the length of Prester John's foot, fetch you a hair off the great Cham's beard, do you any embassy to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words' conference with this happy. You have no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not: I cannot endure my Lady Tongue. [Exit.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of Signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before he won it of me.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Scene I.

much for... 350
D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady, you have put him down.
D. Pedro. Why, how now, count! wherefore are you sad?
Claud. Not sad, my lord.
D. Pedro. How then? sick?
Claud. Neither, my lord.
D. Pedro. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well: but civil count, civil as an orange, and something of that Jealous complexion.
D. Pedro. 'Faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and fair Hero is won: I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained: name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!
Claud. Count, take of me your daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it.
D. Pedro. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.
Claud. Silence is the perfect herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much. Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you and dote upon the exchange.
D. Pedro. Speak, cousin: or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let not him speak neither.
D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.
D. Pedro. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care. My cousin tells him in his ear that he is in her heart.
D. Pedro. And so she doth, cousin.
D. Pedro. Good Lord, for alliance! Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sunburnt; I may sit in a corner and cry heigh-ho for a husband! I, for a husband! D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.
D. Pedro. I would rather have one of your father's getting. Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.
D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?
D. Pedro. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days: your grace is too costly to wear every day. But, I beseech your grace, pardon me: I was born to speak all mirth and no matter.
D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.
D. Pedro. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born. Cousins, God give you joy!
D. Leon. Niece, will you look to those things I told you of?
D. Pedro. I cry you mercy, uncle. By your grace's pardon.
D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.
D. Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her, my lord: she is never sad but when she sleeps, and not ever sad then: for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamed of unhappiness and waked herself with laughing.
D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.
D. Leon. O by no means: she mocks all her wooers out of suit.
D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.
D. Leon. O Lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.
D. Pedro. County Claudio, when mean you to go to church?
D. Leon. To-morrow, my lord: time goes on crutches till love have all his rites.
D. Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night: and at a time too brief, too, to have all things answer my mind.
D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing? but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. I will in the interim undertake one of Hercules' labours; which is, to bring Signior Benedick and the Lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection the one with the other. I would fain have it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.
D. Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watchings.
D. Leon. And I, my lord.
D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?
D. Leon. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.
D. Leon. Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know. Thus far can I praise him; he is of a noble strain, of approved valour and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick; and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer: his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift.

[Exeunt.]

Scene II. The same.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

D. John. It is so; the Count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.
Borachio. Yeas, my lord; but I can cross it.
D. John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicinal to me: I am sick in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?
Borachio. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.
D. John. Show me briefly how.
Borachio. I think I told your lordship a year since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting gentlewoman to Hero.
Borachio. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window.
D. John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage? 20
Bona. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince your brother; spare not to tell him that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio—whose estimation do you mightily hold up—to a contaminated stale, such a one as Hero.
D. John. What proof shall I make of that? Bona. Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?
D. John. Only to despite them, I will endeavour any thing I can.
Bona. Go, then; find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the Count Claudio alone: tell them that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, as, in love of your brother's honour, who hath made this match, and his friend's reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a maid,—should you have discovered this. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber-window, hear me tell Margaret Hero, hear Margaret term me Claudio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding,—for in the meantime I will so fashion the matter that Hero shall be absent,—and there shall appear such seeming truth of Hero's disloyalty that jealousy shall be called assurance and all the preparation overthrown.
D. John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.
Bona. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.
D. John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Leonato's orchard.

Enter Benedick.

Bene. Boy! Enter Boy.

Boy. Signior?

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book: bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that; but I would have thee hence, and here again. [Exit Boy.] I do much wonder that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn by falling in love; and such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known when he would have walked ten mile a-foot to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, curving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain and to the purpose, like an honest man and a soldier; and now is he turned orthography; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be sworn but love may transform me to an os- ter; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well; another is wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cherish her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and Monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour.

[Wild drawes.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?
Claud. Yea, my good lord. How still the evening is,
As hush'd on purpose to grace harmony! 40
D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?
Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended,
We'll fit the kid-box with a pennyworth.

Enter Balthasar with music.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthasar, we'll hear that song again.
Balth. O, good my lord, tax not so bad a avocoe To slander music any more than once.
D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency To put a strange face on his own perfection. I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more. 50
Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing; Since many a wooer doth commence his suit To her he thinks not worthy, yet he woos, Yet will he swear he loves.
D. Pedro. Now, pray thee, come; Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.
Balth. Note this before my notes:
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.
D. Pedro. Why, these are very crotchets that he speaks;
Note, notes, forsooth, and nothing. [Air.
Bene. Now, divine air! now is his soul ravished! Is it not strange that sheep's' gods should hate souls out of men's bodies? Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

The Song.

Balth. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever, 70
Men, foot in sea and one on shore,
To one thing constant never:
Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe Into Hey nonny, nonny.
Sing no more ditties, sing no moe,
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since been, that's certain leafy;
Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song.
[Scene III.]

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.
D. Pedro. Ha, no, no, faith; thou singest well enough for a shift. 80

Benedick. An he had been a dog that should have bit, thus, they would have hanged him: and pray God his bad voice bode no mischief. I had a lie have heard the night-raven, come a thousand such claque could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry, dost thou hear, Balthasar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music; or to-morrow night we would have it at the Lady Hero's chamber-window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exit Balthasar.]

Come hither, Leonato. What was it you told me of to-day, that your niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedick?

Claud. O, say: stand on, stand on; the fowl its. I did never think that lady would have oved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful that she should so dote on Signior Benedick, whom he hath in all outward behaviours seemed even a abhor.

Bene. Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what I think of it but that she loves him with an engag'd affection: it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. O, no; Balthasar. O God, counterfeit! There was never counterfeit of passion so near the life of passion as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows he?

Claud. Baits the hook well; this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit out, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I have would sworn it had, my lord; specially against Benedick. I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, I will himself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath ta'en the infection; hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No; and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed: so your daughter says: 'Shall I,' says she, 'that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?'

Leon. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times night, and there will she sit in her smock till she have writ a sheet of paper; my daughter tells is all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O, when she had writ it and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheet?

Claud. That.

Leon. O, she tore the letter into a thousand halfpence; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her; 'I measure him,' says she, 'by my own spirit: for I should flout him, if he write to me; yea, though I love him, I should.'

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sob, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses: 'O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!'

Leon. She doth indeed; my daughter says so: and the ecstasy hath so much overcome her that my daughter is sometime afeard she will do a desperate outrage to herself: it is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would make but a sport of it and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In every thing but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O, my lord, wisdom and blood combat in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would she had bestowed this doage on me: I would have daffed all other respects and made her half my own. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what a' will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely she will die; for she says she will die, if he love her not, and she will die, ere she make her love known, and she will die, if he woo her, rather than she will bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible spirit.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath indeed a good outward happiness.

Claud. Before God! and, in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth indeed show some sparks that are like wit.

Claud. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you: and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, a' must necessarily keep peace: if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never: 'twill him, my lord: let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. We will hear further of it by her daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well; and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.
Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.
Claud. If he do not dine on her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.
D. Pedro. Let there be the same net spread for her; and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter; that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb-show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.
[Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.
Bene. [Coming forward] This can be no trick; the conference was sadly borne. They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must be requited.
I hear how I am censured: they say I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her; they say too that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. I did never think to marry: I must not seem proud: happy are they that hear their detractions and can put them to mending. They say the lady is fair; 'tis a truth,
I can bear them witness; and virtuous; 'tis so,
I cannot reprove it; and wise, but for loving me:
by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against her marriage: but doth not the appetite alter? a man loves the meat in his youth that he cannot endure in his age. Shall quirps and sentences and these paper bullets of the brain awe a man from the career of his honour?
No, the world must be peopled. When I said
I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married. Here comes Beatrice.
By this day! she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.
Beat. Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.
Bene. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.
Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks than you take pains to thank me: if it had been painful, I would not have come.
Bene. You take pleasure then in the message?
Beat. Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point and chafe a daw withal.
You have no stomach, signior; fare you well.
[Exit.
Bene. Ha! Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner; there's a double meaning in that. I took no more pains for those thanks than you took pains to thank me; that's as much as to say, Any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks. If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain; if I do not love her, I am a Jew.
I will go get her picture.
[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. LEONATO'S GARDEN.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.
Hero. Good Margaret, run thee to the parlour;
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice
Proposing with the prince and Claudio:
Whisper her ear and tell her, I and Ursula
Walk in the orchard and our whole discourse
Is all of her; say that thou overheard'st us;
And bid her steal into the pleaded bower,
Where honeysuckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter, like favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it: there will shu
To listen our purpose. This is thy office;
Bear thee well in it and leave us alone.
Marg. I'll make her come, I warrant you presently.
[Exit.
Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come
As we do trace this alley up and down,
Our talk must only be of Benedick.
When I do name him, let it be thy part
To praise him more than ever man did merit:
My talk to thee must be how Benedick
Is sick in love with Beatrice. Of this matter is little Cupid's crafty arrow made,
That only wounds by hearsay.

Enter Beatrice, behind.
Now begin:
For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs
Close by the ground, to hear our conference.
Urs. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden ears the silver stream,
And then to say they devour the treacherous bait.
So angle we for Beatrice; who even now
Is couched in the woodbine coverture.
Fear you not part of the dialogue.
Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear los nothing
Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.
[Approaching the bower.
No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild
As haggards of the rock.
Urs. But are you sure
That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely?
Hero. So says the prince and my new-trothed
lord.
Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it
madam?
Hero. They did entreat me to acquaint her of it
But I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick. 4
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it.
Urs. Why did you so? Doth not the gentle
Deserve as full as fortunate a bed
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?
Hero. O god of love! I know he doth deserve
As much as may be yielded to a man:
But Nature never framed a woman's heart
Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice: 5
Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Misprizing what they look on, and her wit
Values itself so highly that to her
All matter else seems weak: she cannot love,
Nor take no shape nor project of affection,
She is so self-endear'd.
Urs. Sure, I think so;
And therefore certainly it were not good
She knew his love, lest she make sport at it.
Hero. Why, you speak truth. I never ye saw man.
Scene II. A room in Leonato’s house.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

Don Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claud. I’ll bring you thither, my lord, if you’ll vouchsafe me.

Don Pedro. Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage as to show a child his new coat and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid’s bow-string and the little hangman dare not shoot at him; he hath a heart as sound as a bell and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinks his tongue speaks.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have been.

Leon. So say I; methinks you are sadder.

Claud. I hope he be in love.

Don Pedro. Hang him, truant! there’s no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touched with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the toothache.

Don Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it!

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

Don Pedro. What! sigh for the toothache?

Leon. Where is but a humour or a worm.

Bene. Well, every one can master a grief but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

Don Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as, to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-morrow, or in the shape of two countries at once, as, a German from the waist downward, all slops, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a’ brushes his hat o’ mornings; what should that bode?

Don Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber’s?

Claud. No, but the barber’s man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

Don Pedro. Nay, a’ rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That’s as much as to say, the sweet youth’s in love.

Don Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he wont to wash his face?

Don Pedro. Yea, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit; which is now crept into a lute-string and now governed by stops.

Don Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him: conclude, conclude he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.
Enter Don John.

Don. My lord and brother, God save you!
Ped. Good den, brother.
Don. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

Enter Benedick and Leonato.

Bened. Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice; and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter Don John.

Don. My lord and brother, God save you!
Ped. Good den, brother.
John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.
Ped. In private?
John. If it please you: yet Count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of concerns him.
Ped. What's the matter?
John. [To Claudio] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?
Ped. You know he does.
John. I know not that, when he knows what I know.
Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.
John. You may think I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath holp to effect your ensuing marriage;—surely suit ill spent and labour ill bestowed.
Ped. Why, what's the matter?
John. I came neither to tell you; and, circumstanced shortened, for she has been too long a talking of, the lady is disloyal.
Claud. Who, Hero?
John. Even she; Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Disloyal?

John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness; I could say she were worse: think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered, even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.
Claud. May this be so?

Ped. I will not think it.

Don. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know: if you will follow me, I will show you enough: and when you have seen more and heard more, proceed accordingly.
Claud. If I see any thing to-night why I should not marry her to-morrow, in the congregation, where I should wed, there will I shame her.

Ped. And, as I woeed for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

Don. I will disparage her no farther till you are my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

Ped. O day untowardly turned!
Claud. O mischief strangely thwarting!
John. O plague right well prevented! I will you say when you have seen the sequel.

Scene III. A street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges with the Watcher.

Dog. Are you good men and true?
Verg. Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dog. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance to them, being chosen for the prince's watch.
Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbor Dogberry.

Dog. First, who think you the most desarted man to be constable?

Enter Watcher. Hugh Otecake, sir, or George Seacoal; for they can write and read.

Dog. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal. Go hath blessed you with a good name: to be well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

Sec. Watch. Both which, the master constable,—

Dog. You have: I knew it would be you answer. Well, for your favour, sir, why, giv God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear whe there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for th constable of the watch; therefore bear you th lartern. This is your charge: you shall comp hend all vagrom men; you are to bid any in stand, in the prince's name.

Sec. Watch. How if a' will not stand?
Dog. Why, then, take no note of him, but le him go; and presently call the rest of the wat together; and thank God you are rid of a knave.

If he will not stand when he is bidden he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dog. True, and they are to meddle with non but the prince's subjects. You shall also mak no noise in the streets; for for the watch to babbl and to talk is most tolerable and not to be en dared.

Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dog. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleep ing should offend: only, have a care that you bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the i-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

Watch. How if they will not?

Dog. Why, then, let them alone till they are sober: if you make you not then the better answer, you may say they are not the men you took them for.

Watch. Well, sir.

Dog. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle o make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?
Dog. Truly, by your office, you may; but I thay they touch pitch will be defiled: the

at peaceable way for you, if you do take a of, is to let him show himself what he is and al out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful

n, partner.

Dog. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my l, much more a man who hath any honesty in Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, must call to the nurse and bid her still it. 70

Watch. How if the nurse be asleep and will hear us?

Dog. Why, then, depart in peace, and let the ld wake her with crying; for the eeu that will hear her lamb when it baes will never answer half when he beats.

Verg. 'Tis very true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge—you, stable, are to present the prince's own person:

you meet the prince in the night, you may

him.

Verg. Nay, by'r lady, that I think a'

not.

Dog. Five shillings to one out, with any man knows the statues, he may stay him; marry,

without the prince be willing; for, indeed, watch ought to offend no man; and it is an horse to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By 'r lady, I think it be so.

Dog. Ha, ah, ha! Well, masters, good night:

there be any matter of weight chances, call me: keep your fellows' counsels and your n; and good night. Come, neighbour.

Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge:

us go sit here upon the church-bench till two,

then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honest neighbours. I y, you watch about Signior Leonato's door; the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a at coi-to-night. Adieu: be vigilant, I beseech

u. [Exeunt Dogberry and Verges. 101

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What, Conrade! 105

Watch. [Aside] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Hon. Here, man; I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itch'd; I thought re would a scab follow.

Hon. I will owe thee an answer for that: and eard with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this pent-use, for it drivelles rain; and I will, like a true

ikard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside] Some treason, masters: yet close.

Hon. Therefore know I have earned of Don a thousand ducats.

Hon. Is it possible that any villany should

dear?

Hon. Thou shouldst rather ask if it were sible any villany should be so rich; for when illains have need of poor ones, poor ones

ake what price they will.

Hon. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed. Thou nowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yet, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say the fool's the fool. But seest thou not what a deformed thief

this fashion is?

Watch. [Aside] I know that Deformed: a'

has been a vile thief this seven year; a' goes up and down like a gentleman: I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear anybody?

Con. No; 'twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily a' turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five-andory? sometimes fashioning them like Pharaoh's olds in the rocky painting, sometime like god

el's priests in the old church-window, sometime

ike the shaven Hercules in the smirched wormaten tapestry, where his codpiece seems as asy as his club?

Con. All this I see; and I see that the fashion ears out more apparel than the man. But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither: but know that I have to-night woood Margaret, the Lady Hero's gen-tlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leaves the ist at her mistress' chamber-window, bids me a ousand times good night,—I tell this tale vilely;

— I should first tell thee how the prince, Claudio and my master, planted and placed and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter. 162

Con. And thought they Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and ia Claudio; but the devil my master knew she

Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first essed them, partly by the dark night, which

d, deceived them, but chiefly by my villany, ich did confirm any slander that Don John id, away Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at emple, and there, before the whole congregation, ame her with what he saw o'er night and send om her home again without a husband.

First Watch. We charge you, in the prince's ame, stand!

Sec. Watch. Call up the right master constable. We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in commonwealth. 181

First Watch. And one Deformed is one of om: I know him; a' wears a lock.

Con. Masters, masters,—

Sec. Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters,—

First Watch. Never speak: we charge you let us obey you to go with us.

Bora. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills. 191

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant

you. Come, we'll obey you. [Exeunt.
SCENE IV. Hero's apartment.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well. [Exit.

Marg. Troth, I think your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, 's not so good; and I warrant your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another; I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new one within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion, i' faith. I saw the Duchess of Milan's gown that they praise so.

Hero. O, that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth, 's but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o' gold, and cuts, and faced with silver, set with pearls, down sleeves, side-sleeves, and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten 't.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it! for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fe upon thee! art not ashamed?

Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think you would have me say, 'saving your reverence, a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend nobody: is there any harm in 'the heavier for a husband'? None, I think, it an be the right husband and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy: ask my Lady Beatrice else; here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good morrow, coz.

Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero. 40

Hero. Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg. Clap's into 'Light o' love'; that goes without a burden: do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

Beat. Ye light o' love, with your heels! then, if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.

Marg. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill: heigh-ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.

Marg. Well, an you be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.

Beat. What means the fool, trow?

Marg. Nothing! I; but God send every one their heart's desire!

Hero. These gloves the count sent me; they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stuffed, cousin; I cannot smell.

Marg. A maid, and stuff'd! there's good catching of cold.

Beat. O, God help me! God help me! he long have you professed apprehension?

Marg. Even since you left it. Doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not seen enough, you should weep in your cap. By my troth, I am sick.

Marg. Get you some of this distilled Cordus Benedictus, and lay to it your heart: it is the only thing for a qualm.

Hero. There thou prickest her with a thist!

Marg. Moral! no, by my troth, I have a moral meaning: I meant, plain holy-thistle. Y. may think perchance that I think you are love: nay, by'l lady, I am not such a fool think what I list, nor I list not to think what can, nor indeed I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love: that you will be in love on what you can be love. Yet Benedick was such another, and no is he become a man: he swore he would never marry, and yet now, in despite of his heart, eats his meat without grudging: and how y. may be converted I know not, but methinks y. look with your eyes as other women do.

Marg. What pace is this that thy tongue keep?

Marg. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, withdraw: the prince, the com Signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallad of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

Hero. Help to dress me, good coz, good Madam good Ursula. [Exit.

SCENE V. Another room in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, with Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbour?

Dog. Marry, sir, I would have some con dence with you that decreas you nearly.

Leon. Brief, I pray you; for you see it is busy time with me.

Dog. Marry, this it is, sir.

Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends?

Dog. Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little the matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are so blunt as, God help, I would desire they were, but, in faith, honest as the skin between two brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God I am as honest any man living that is an old man and no nester than I.

Dog. Comparisons are odorous: palabr neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dog. It please your worship to say so, I we are the poor duke's officers; but truly, mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king could find it in my heart to bestow it all of yo worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me, ah!

Dog. Yea, an 'twere a thousand pound in than 'dis; for I hear as good exclamation on y

ACT IV.

Scene I. A church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar Francis, Claudio, Benedick, Hero, Beatrice, and attendants.

Leon. Come, Friar Francis, be brief; only to e plain form of marriage, and you shall recount your particular duties afterwards.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry is lady.

Claud. No.

Leon. To be married to her: friar, you come marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married this count.

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoined, I large you, on your souls, to utter it.

Friar. Know you any, count?

Leon. I dare make his answer, none.

Claud. O, what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do, not knowing what they do!

Bene. How now! interjections? Why, then, some be of laughing, as, ah, ha, he!

Claud. Stand thee by, friar. Father, by your leave:

Will you with free and unconstrained soul
Give me this maid, your daughter?

Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claud. And what have I to give you back, whose worth
May counterfeit this rich and precious gift?

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claud. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.

There, Leonato, take her back again:
Give not this rotten orange to your friend;
She's but the sign and semblance of her honour.
Behold how like a maid she blushes here! O, what authority and show of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal!

Comes not that blood as modest evidence
To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shows? But she is none:
She knows the heat of a luxurious bed;
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Leon. What do you mean, my lord?

Claud. Not to be married,
Not to knit my soul to an approved wanton.
Leon. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof,
Have vanquish'd the resistance of her youth,
And made defeat of her virginity,—

Claud. I know what you would say: if I have known her,
You will say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin:

No, Leonato,
I never tempted her with word too large;
But, as a brother to his sister, show'd
Bashful sincerity and comely love.

Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?

Claud. Out on thee! Seeming! I will write against it:

You seem to me as Dian in her orb,
As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown;
But you are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pumper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality.

Hero. Is my lord well, that he doth speak so wide?

Leon. Sweet prince, why speak not you?

D. Pedro. What should I speak?

I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale.
Leon. Are these things spoken, or do I but dream?

D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Bene. This looks not like a nuptial.

Hero. True! O God!

Claud. Leonato, stand I here?

Is this the prince? is this the prince's brother?
Is this face Hero's? are our eyes our own?
Leon. All this is so; but what of this, my lord?
Claud. Let me but move one question to your daughter;
And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.
Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.
Hero. O, God defend me! how am I beset!
What kind of catechising call you this?
Claud. To make you answer truly to your name.
---
Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?
Claud. Marry, that can Hero;
Hero herself can blot out Hero's virtue.
What man was he talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window betwixt twelve and one?
Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.
Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.
D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden.
Leonato, I am sorry you must hear: upon mine honour,
Myself, my brother and this grieved count
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window;
Who hath indeed, most like a liberal villain,
Confess'd the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.
D. John. Fie, fie! they are not to be named,
my lord,
Not to be spoken of:
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them. Thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.
Claud. O Hero, what a Hero hadst thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been placed
About thy thoughts and counsels of thy heart!
But fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
Thou pure impiety and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eyelids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And shall fill it more be gracious
Than that I was, and that I am, and that I was
To burn the errors that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool;
Trust not my reading nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal doth warrant
The tenour of my book; trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, or divinity;
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some beting error.
Leon. How now, cousin Hero!
Friar. O Fate! take not away thy heavy hand.
Death is the fairest cover for her shame
That may be wish'd for.
Beaut. How now, cousin Hero!
Friar. Have comfort, lady.
Leon. Dost thou look up?
Friar. Yea, wherefor should she not?
Leon. Wherewith! Why, doth not every earthly Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
The story that is printed in her blood?
Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes:
For, did I think thou wouldest not quickly die,
Friar. There is some strange misprision in the princes.

Bene. Two of them have the very bent of honour;
If if their wisdoms be misled in this,
As practice of it lives in John the bastard, 190
Hose spirits toil in frame of villanies.

Leon. I know not. If they speak but truth
These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her honour,
I proudest of them shall well hear of it.
Me hath not yet so dreed this blood of mine,
or age so eat up my invention,
or fortune made such havoc of my means,
or my bad life left me so much of friends,
At they shall find, awaked in such a kind,
Strength in limb and policy of mind, 200
Bility in means and choice of friends,
Out of me they handful throughly.

Friar. Pause awhile, and let my counsel sway you in this case.
Our daughter here the princes left for dead:
At her ahile she secretly in,
Publish it that she is dead indeed;
Maintain a mourning ostentation
And on your family's old monument
Ang mournful epitaphs and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

Leon. What shall become of this? What will this do?

Friar. Marry, this well carried shall on her behalf
Hange slander to remorse; that is some good:
Ut not for that dream I on this strange course,
Ut on this travell look for greater birth.
Dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Pon the instant that she was accused,
All be lamented, pitied and excused
Every hearer: for it so falls out
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
Hiles we enjoy it, but being lack'd and lost,
By then we rack the value, then we find
He virtue that possession would not show us Hiles it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio: he Shall he not hear she died upon his words,
He idea of her life shall sweetly creep to his study of imagination:
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Ore moving-delicate and full of life,
To the eye and prospect of his soul,
An when she lived indeed; then shall he mourn,
Love ever had interest in his liver,
And wish he had not so accused her,
o, though he thought his accusation true:
If this be so, and doubt not but success
Ill fashion the event in better shape
Can I lay it down in likelihood.
It if all aim but this be levell'd false,
He supposition of the lady's death
Ill quench the wonder of her infamy:
If it sort not well, you may conceal her,
She best befits her wounded reputation,
Some reclusive and religious life,
Ut of all eyes, tongues, minds and injuries.

Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
Ut though you know my inwardness and love
Very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this
As secretly and justly as your soul
Should with your body.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar. 'Tis well consented: presently away;
For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.

Come, lady, die to live: this wedding-day
Perhaps is but prolong'd: have patience and endure.

[Exeunt all but Benedick and Beatrice.]

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?

Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.

Bene. I will not desire that.

Beat. You have no reason; I do it freely.

Bene. Surely I do believe your fair cousin is Wronged.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve
Of me that would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?

Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.

Bene. May a man do it?

Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours.

Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well
As you: is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not. It
Were as possible for me to say I loved nothing so well
As you: but believe me not; and yet I lie not:
I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing.
I am sorry for my cousin.

Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest me.

Beat. Do not swear, and eat it.

Bene. I will swear by it that you love me; and I will make him eat it that says I love not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it.

I protest I love thee.

Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!

Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I
Was about to protest I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart.

Beat. I love you with so much of my heart
That none is left to protest.

Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. Ha! not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.

Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.

Beat. I am gone, though I am here: there is No love in you: say, I pray you, let me go.

Bene. Beatrice.

Beat. In faith, I will go.

Bene. We'll be friends first.

Beat. You dare easier be friends with me than Fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?

Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain,
That hath slandered, scorned, dishonoured my Kinswoman? O that I were a man! What, bear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then, with public sores, uncovered slander,
Unmitigated rancour,—O God, that I were a man!
I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Hear me, Beatrice,

Beat. Talk with a man out at a window! A Proper saying!
Scene II. A prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrad and Borachio.

Dog. Is our whole assembly appeared?
Verg. O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton.
Sex. Which be the malefactors?
Dog. Marry, that am I and my partner.
Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.
Sex. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.
Dog. Yea, marry, let them come before me.

What is your name, friend?

Borachio. Borachio.

Dog. Pray, write down, Borachio. Yours, sirrah?

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrad.

Dog. Write down, master gentleman Conrad.

Masters, do you serve God?

Con. Yea, sir, we hope.

Dog. Write down, that they hope they serve God: and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains! Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves; and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

Con. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

Dog. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him. Come you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear: sir, I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Borachio. Sir, I say to you we are none.

Dog. Well, stand aside. Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?

Sex. Master constable, you go not the way to examine: you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Dog. Yea, marry, that's the eftest way: let the watch come forth. Masters, I charge you in the prince's name, accuse these men.

First Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

Dog. Write down Prince John a villain. Why this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

Borachio. Master constable,—

Sex. What heard you him say else?

Sec. Watch. Marry, that he had received thousand ducats of Don John for accusing the Lady Hero wrongfully.

Dog. Flat burglary as ever was committed.

Verg. Yea, by mass, that it is.

Sex. What else, fellow?

First Watch. And that Count Claudio dismean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Dog. O villain! thou wilt be condemned in everlasting redemption for this.

Sex. What else?

Watch. This is all.

Sex. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secret; stolen away; Hero was in this manner accused; in this manner refused, and upon the grie of this suddenly died. Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's I will go before and show him their examination.

[Exeunt.]

Scene I. Before Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself And 'tis not wisdom thus to second grief Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel, Which falls into mine ears as profitless As water in a sieve: give not me counsel;

. Here comes the prince and Claudio

Enter DON PEDRO AND CLAUDIO.

[To Pedro.] Good den, good den.

[To Leon.] Good day to both of you.

. Hear you, my lords,—
[To Pedro.] We have some haste, Leonato.

. Some haste, my lord! well, fare you well, my lord:
you so hasty now? well, all is one.

[To Pedro.] Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.

. If he could right himself with quarrelling, us would lie low.

Who wrongs him?

. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou dis-sembler, thou:—
, never lay thy hand upon thy sword;
, thee not.

. Marry, beshrew my hand, should give your age such cause of fear:
sith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

. Tush, tush, man: never fleer and jest at me:

I speak not like a dotard nor a fool,
As under privilege of age to brag
What I have done being young, or what would do
Were I not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wrong'd mine innocent child and me
That I am forced to lay my reverence by
And, with grey hairs and bruise of many days,
Do challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say thou hast belied mine innocent child;
Thy slander hath gone through and through her
heart,
And she lies buried with her ancestors;
O, in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of hers, framed by thy villany!

Claud. My villany?

. Thine, Claudio; thine, I say.

. You say not right, old man.

. My lord, my lord,

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth and bloom of lusthhood.

. Away! I will not have to do with you.

. Canst thou so daff me? Thou hast kill'd my child:
If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:
But that's no matter; let him kill one first;
Win me and wear me; let him answer me.
Come, follow me, boy; come, sir boy, come, follow me:
Sir boy, I'll whip you from your foining fence
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

. Brother,—

. Content yourself. God knows I loved my niece;
And she is dead, slander'd to death by villains,
That dare as well answer a man indeed
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue:
Boys, apes, braggarts, Jacks, milk-sops!

. Brother Antony,—

. Hold you content. What, man! I know them, yea,
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scrupule,—
Scambling, out-facing, fashion-monging boys,
That lie and cog and flout, deprave and slander,
Go anticy, show outward hideousness,
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst;
And this is all.

. But, brother Antony,—

. Come, 'tis no matter: Do not you meddle; let me deal in this.

. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.
My heart is sorry for your daughter's death:
But, on my honour, she was charged with nothing
But what was true and very full of proof.

. My lord, my lord,—

. I will not hear you.

. No? Come, brother; away! I will be heard.

. And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

[Exeunt Leonato and Antonio.

. See, see; here comes the man we went to seek.

Enter BENEDICK.

Claud. Now, signior, what news?
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

[Act v]

Bene. Good day, my lord.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior; you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What thinkst thou? Had we fought, I doubt we should have been too young for them.

Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valour, I came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy and would fain have it beaten away. Will thou use thy wit?

Bene. It is in my scabbard; shall I draw it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit. I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw, to pleasure us.

Bene. As I am an honest man, he looks pale. Art thou sick, or angry?

Claud. What, courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me. I pray you choose another subject.

Claud. Nay, then, give him another staff: this last was broke cross.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more: I think he be angry indeed.

Claud. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.

Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Claud. God bless me from a challenge! Bene. [Aside to Claudio] You are a villain; I jest not: I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare. Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast, a feast?

Claud. I' faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's head and a capon; the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught. Shall I not find a woodcock too?

Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day. I said, thou hadst a fine wit: 'True,' said she, 'a fine little one.' 'No,' said I, 'a great wit.' 'Right,' says she, 'a great gross one.' 'Nay,' said I, 'a good wit.' 'Just,' said she, 'it hurts nobody.' 'Nay,' said I, 'the gentleman is wise.' 'Certain,' said she, 'a wise gentleman.' 'Nay,' said I, 'he hath the tongues.' 'That I believe,' said she, 'for he wore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues.' Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape the particular virtues: yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.

Claud. For the which she wept heartily and said she cared not.

D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would have him dearly: the old man's daughter told us all.
upon record: which I had rather seal with my leath than repeat over to my shame. The lady's dead upon mine and my master's false accusation: and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.

D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?

Claud. I have drunk poison whilsts he utter'd it.

D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this?

Bora. Yea, and paid me richly for the practice of it.

D. Pedro. He is composed and framed of treachery:
and fled he is upon this villain.

Claud. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear in the rare semblance that I loved it first: 260

Dog. Come, bring away the plaintiffs: by this time our sexton hath reform'd Signior Le-onio the matter: and, masters, do not forget to pecify, when time and place shall serve, that an am ass.

Verg. Here, here comes master Signior Leoatio, and the sexton too.

Re-enter LEONATO and ANTONIO, with the Sexton.

Leon. Which is the villain? let me see his eyes, that, when I note another man like him, may avoid him: which of these is he?

Bora. If you would know your wronger, look on me.

Leon. Art thou that slave that with thy breath hast kill'd fine innocent child?

Bora. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so, villain; thou beliést thyself:
here stand a pair of honourable men; a third is fled, that had a hand in it.

Claud. I know not how to pray thy patience;
et I must speak. Choose thy revenge yourself;
impose me to what penance thy invention can lay upon my sin: yet sin'd I not but in mistaking.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I: and yet, to satisfy this good old man, would bend under any heavy weight that he'Il enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live;
hat were impossible: but, I pray you both,
'ossess the people in Messina here
how innocent she died; and if your love
'ain labour ought in sad invention, hang her an epitaph upon her tomb and sing it to her bones, sing it to-night:
'to-morrow morning come you to my house,
and since you could not be my son-in-law,
le yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter,
most the copy of my child that's dead,
and she alone is heir to both of us:
live her the right you should have given her confin, and doth my revenge.

Claud. O noble sir,

Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me!
I do embrace your offer; and dispose
For henceforth of poor Claudio.

Leon. To-morrow then I will expect your coming:

To-night I take my leave. This naughty man
Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who I believe was pack'd in all this wrong,
Hired to it by your brother.

Bora. No, by my soul, she was not,
Nor knew not what she did when she spoke to me,
But always hath been just and virtuous.

In any thing that I do know by her.

Dog. Moreover, sir, which indeed is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remember'd in his punishment. And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say he wears a key in his ear and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God's name, the which he hath used so long and never paid that now men grow hard-hearted and will lend nothing for God's sake: pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dog. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth: and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dog. God save the foundation!

Leon. Go, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.

Dog. I leave an arrant knave with your worship; which I beseech your worship to correct yourself, for the example of others. God keep your worship! I wish your worship well; God restore you to health! I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it! Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant. Farewell, my lords: we look for you to-morrow.

D. Pedro. We will not fail.

Leon. [To the Watch] Bring you these fel-owns on. We'll talk with Margaret.

Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero.

How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow.

[Exeunt, severally.

SCENE II. LEONATO'S GARDEN.

Enter BENEDICK and MARGARET, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet Mistress Margaret,
I desire well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Marg. To have no man come over me! why, shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth; it catches.

Marg. And yours as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman: and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the bucklers.

Marg. Give us the swords; we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

Marg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who think hath legs.

Bene. And therefore will come. [Exit Margaret.

[Sings] The god of love,
That sits above;
And knows me, and knows me,
How pitiful I deserve,—

I mean in singing; but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Tullus the first employer of pardons, and a whole bookful of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over as my poor self in love.

Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried: I can find out no rhyme to 'lady' but 'baby,' an innocent rhyme; for 'scorn,' 'horn,' a hard rhyme; for school, 'fool,' a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings; no, I was not born under a ryming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.

Enter Beatrice.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O, stay but till then.

Beat. 'Then' is spoken; fare you well now: and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came; which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkindly.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge; and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epitaph! I do suffer love indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think; alas, poor heart! If you spite it for my sake, I will spite it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession: there's not one wise man among twenty who will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours. If a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument than the bell rings and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question: why, an hour in clamour and a quarter in rueful: therefore is it most expedient for the wise, if Don W orm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary, to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praising myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy: and now tell me, how doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder's old coil at home: it is proved my Lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap and be buried in thy eyes; and moreover I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. A church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and three or four with tapes.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Adam. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reading out of a scroll]

Done to death by slanderous tongues Was the Hero that here lies!

Death, in guerdon of her wrongs, Gives her name which never dies.

So the life that died with shame Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tomb, Praising her when I am dumb.

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

Song.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight; For which, with songs of woe, Round about her tomb they go. Midnight, assist our morn; Help us to sigh and groan, Heavily, heavily; Graves, yawn and yield your dead, Till death be uttered, Heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night! Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters; put your torches out:
The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day,
Before the wheels of Pharus, round about Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey. Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters: each his several way.
SCENE III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other weeds:
And then to Leonato's we will go.
Leon. And Hymen now with luckier issue speed's
Than this for whom we render'd up this woe.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. A room in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Margaret, Ursula, Friar Francis, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent? Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who accused her Upon the error that you heard debated:
but Margaret was in some fault for this,
although against her will, as it appears in the true course of all the question.
Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforced
To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves, and when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

[Exeunt Ladies.

The prince and Claudio promised by this hour
'to visit me. You know your office, brother:
you must be father to your brother's daughter,
and give her to young Claudio.
Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

Friar. To do what, signior? Bene. To bind me, or undo me; one of them.
Ignor Leonato, truth it is, good signior, or our niece regards me with an eye of favour.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her: 'tis most true.
Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her.
Leon. The sight whereof I think you had from me,
From Claudio and the prince: but what's your will?

Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical:
but, for my will, my will is your good will may stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd in the state of honourable marriage:
which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

Leon. My heart is with your liking.

Friar. And my help here comes the prince and Claudio.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, and two or three others.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.
Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow,
Claudio: we here attend you. Are you yet determined 'to-day to marry with my brother's daughter?

Claud. I'll hold my mind, were she an Ethiopie.
Leon. Call her forth, brother; here's the friar ready.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why,
what's the matter.

That you have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm and cloudiness?

Claud. I think he thinks upon the savage bull.

Tush, fear not, man; we'll tip thy horns with gold
And all Europa shall rejoice at thee,
As once Europa did at lusty Jove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.

Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low;
And some such strange bull leap'd your father's
And got a calf in that same noble feat
Much like to you, for you have just his beat.

Claud. For this I owe you: here comes other reckonings.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?

Ant. This same is she, and I do give you her.

Claud. Why, then she's mine. Sweet, let me see your face.

Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand
Before this friar and swear to marry her.

Claud. Give me your hand: before this holy friar,
I am your husband, if you like of me.

Hero. And when I lived, I was your other wife:

Claud. Another Hero! Nothing certainer:
One Hero died defiled, but I do live,
And surely as I live, I am a maid.

D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!

Leon. She died, my lord, but whilst her slander lived.

Friar. All this amazement can I qualify;
When after that the holy rites are ended,
I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death:
Meantime let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.

Bene. Soft and fair, friar. Which is Beatrice?

Beat. [Unmasking] I answer to that name.
What is your will?

Bene. Do not you love me?

Beat. Why, no; no more than reason.

Bene. Why, then your uncle and the prince
Have been deceived; they swore you did.

Beat. Do not you love me?

Bene. Troth, no; no more than reason.

Beat. Why, then my cousin Margaret and Ursula
Are much deceived; for they did swear you did.

Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.

Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

Bene. 'Tis no such matter. Then you do not love me?

Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.
Claud. And I'll be sworn upon't that he loves her;
For here's a paper written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice.

Hero. And here's another
Writ in my cousin's hand, stolen from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.

Bene. A miracle! Here's our own hands against our hearts. Come, I will have thee;
but, by this light, I take thee for pity.

Beat. I would not deny you; but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion; and partly to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.

Bene. Peace! I will stop your mouth.

D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick, the married man?

Bene. I'll tell thee what, prince; a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour. Dost thou think I care for a satirist or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, a shall wear nothing handsome about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion. For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised and love my cousin.

Claud. I had well hoped thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgelled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double-dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceedingly narrowly to thee.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends: let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts and our wives' heels.

Leon. We'll have dancing afterward.

Bene. First, of my word; therefore play, music. Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is ta'en in flight,
And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow: I'll devise thee brave punishments for him. Strike up, pipers, [Dance.

[Exeunt.]

ACT I.

SCENE I. The king of Navarre’s park.

Enter Ferdinand, king of Navarre, Biron, Longaville, Dumain, Boyet, lords attending on the King.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives, jive register’d upon our brazen tombs and then grace us in the disgrace of death: When, spite of cormorant devours Time, he endeavour of this present breath may buy that honour which shall bate his scythe’s keen edge and make us heirs of all eternity. therefore, brave conquerors,—for so you are, that war against your own affections and the huge army of the world’s desires,—your late edict shall strongly stand in force: Navarre shall be the wonder of the world; your court shall be a little Academie, still and contemplative in living art. ‘O three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville, have sworn for three years’ term to live with me: fellow-scholars and to keep those statutes that are recorded in this schedule here: your oaths are pass’d; and now subscribe your names, that his own hand may strike his honour down that violates the smallest branch herein: subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep it too.

Long. I am resolved; ’tis but a three years’ fast: the mind shall banquet, though the body pine: at pabulum have lean pates, and dainty bits fake rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits. Dum. My loving lord, Dumain is mortified: the grosser manner of these world’s delights he throws upon the gross world’s baser slaves: to love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die; with all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over; so much, dear liege, I have already sworn, that is, to live and study here three years: but there are other strict observances: is, not to see a woman in that term,

Which I hope well is not enrolled there; And one day in a week to touch no food And but one meal on every day beside, The which I hope is not enrolled there; And then, to sleep but three hours in the night, And not be seen to wink of all the day— When I was wont to think no harm all night And make a dark night too of half the day— Which I hope well is not enrolled there: O, these are barren tasks, too hard to keep, Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep!

King. Your oath is pass’d to pass away from these.

Biron. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please:

I only swore to study with your grace
And stay here in your court for three years’ space.

Long. You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest.

Biron. By yea and nay, sir, then I swore in jest.

What is the end of study? let me know.

King. Why, that to know, which else we should not know.

Biron. Things hid and barr’d, you mean, from common sense.

King. Ay, that is study’s god-like recompense.

Biron. Come on, then; I will swear to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know:
As thus,—to study where I well may dine,
When I to feast expressly am forbid;
Or study where to meet some mistress fine,
When mistresses from common sense are hid;
Or, having sworn too hard a keeping oath,
Study to break it and not break my troth.
If study’s gain be thus and this be so,
Study knows that which yet it doth not know:
Swear me to this, and I will ne’er say no.

King. These be the stops that hinder study quite.

And train our intellects to vain delight.

Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchased doth inherit pain:
As, painfully to pore upon a book
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look:
Light seeking light doth light of light beguile;
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed
By fixing it upon a fairer eye.
Who dazling so, that eye shall be his head
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study is like the heaven’s glorious sun
That will not be deep-search’d with saucy looks:
Small have continual plodders ever won
Save base authority from others’ books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven’s lights
That give a name to every fixed star
Have no more profit of their shining nights
Than those that walk and wot not what they are.
Too much to know is to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he’s read, to reason against reading!
Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding!
Long. He weeds the corn and still lets grow the weeding.
Biron. The spring is near when green geese are a-breeding.
Dum. How follows that?
Biron. Fit in his place and time.
Dum. In reason nothing.
Biron. Something then in rhyme.
King. Biron is like an envious sniping frost
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.
Biron. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast
Before the birds have any cause to sing?

Why should I joy in any abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose
Than wish a snow in May’s new-fangled mirth;
But like of each thing that in season grows.
So you, to study now it is too late,
Climb o'er the house to unlock the little gate.
King. Well, sit you out: go home, Biron: adieu.
Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay with you:
And though I have for barbarism spoke more
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confident I’ll keep what I have swore
And hide the penance of each three years’ day.
Give me the paper; let me read the same;
And to the strictest decrees I’ll write my name.
King. How well this yielding rescues thee
From shame!

Biron [reads]. ‘Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my court:’ Hath this been proclaimed?

Long. Four days ago.
Biron. Let’s see the penalty. [Reads] ‘On pain of losing her tongue.’ Who devised this penalty?

Long. Marry, that did I.
Biron. Sweet lord, and why?
Long. To fright them hence with that dread penalty.
Biron. A dangerous law against gentility!

[Reads] ‘Item, If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, I shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise.’

This article, my liege, yourself must break:
For well you know here comes in embassy
The French king’s daughter with yourself speak—
A maid of grace and complete majesty—
About surrender up of Aquitaine
To her deceptr, sick and bedrid father:
Therefore this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes the admired princess hither.
King. What say you, lords? why, this w’ quite forgot.
Biron. So study evermore is overshot:
While it doth study to have what it would
It doth forget to do the thing it should,
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
’Tis won as towns with fire, so won, so lost.
King. We must of force dispense with the decree:
She must lie here on mere necessity.
Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn.
Three thousand times within this three year space;
For every man with his affects is born,
Not by might master’d but by special grace:
If I break faith, this word shall speak for me;
I am forsworn on ‘mere necessity.’
So to the laws at large I write my name:

And he that breaks them in the least degree
Stains his attainder of eternal shame.
Suggestions are to other as to me:
But I believe, although I seem so loath,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quick recreation granted?
King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world’s new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain;
One whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony:
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny:
This child of fancy that Armado hight.
For interim to our studies shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight
From tawny Spain lost in the world’s debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, 16
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.
Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion’s own knight.
Long. Costard the swain and he shall be our sport;
And so to study, three years is but short.

Enter Dull with a letter, and Costard.
Dull. Which is the duke’s own person?
Biron. This, fellow: what wouldst?
Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace’s tharborough: but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This is he.
Dull. Signior Arme—Arme—commends you.
There’s villainy abroad: this letter will tell you more.
Love's Labour's Lost

Scene I.

Cost. Sir, the contempts thereof are as touching me.

King. A letter from the magnificient Armado.

Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Long. A high hope for a low heaven: God rant us patience!

Biron. To hear? or forbear laughing?

Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.

Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give cause to climb in the merriness.

Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning aequenetta. The manner of it, I was taken with the manner.

Biron. In what manner?

Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those here: I was seen with her in the manor-house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman: for the form,—in some form.

Biron. For the following, sir?

Cost. As it shall follow in my correction: and I do defend the right!

King. Will you hear this letter with attention?

Biron. As we would hear an oracle.

Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.

King [reads]. 'Great deputy, the wellkin's iniquerent and sole dominator of Navarre, my own earth's god, and body's fostering patron.'

Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.

King [reads]. 'So it is.'

Cost. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so.

King. Peace!

Cost. Be to me and every man that dares not ght!

King. No words!

King [reads]. 'So it is, besiegued with sable-coloured melancholy, I did commend the black-presuming humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk. The time when, about the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper: so much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, mean, I walked upon: it is cleyed thy park, then for the place where; where, I mean, I did mounter that obscure and most preposterous gent, that draweth from my snow-white pen the non-coloured ink, which here thou viewest, beholdest, surveyest, or seest; but to the place where; it standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, hat base minnow of thy mirth,--'

Cost. Me? Costard. [reads], 'that unlettered small-knowing swain.'

Cost. Me?

King [reads]. 'that shallow vassal,'

Cost. Still me?

King [reads]. 'which, as I remember, hight Costard,'

Cost. O, me!

King [reads]. 'sorted and consorted, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continent canon, which with,—O, with—but with this I passion to say wherewith,—'

Cost. With a wench.

King [reads]. 'with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I, as my ever-esteemed duty pricks me on, have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Anthony Dull: a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation.'

Dull. Me, an't shall please you; I am Anthony Dull.

King [reads]. 'For Jaquenetta,—so is the weaker vessel called which I apprehended with the aforesaid swain,—I keep her as a vessel of thy law's sway; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all compliants of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty. Written by Don Adrian de Armado.'

Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.

King. Ay, the best for the worst. But, sirrah, what say you to this?

Cost. 'Sir, I confess the wench.'

King. Did you hear the proclamation?

Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment, to be taken with a wench.

Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a damsel.

King. Well, it was proclaimed 'damsel.'

Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir; she was a virgin.

King. It is so varied too; for it was proclaimed 'virgin.'

Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity: I was taken with a maid.

King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.

Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.

King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.

Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.

King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.

My Lord Biron, see him deliver'd o'er:

And go we, lords, to put in practice that
Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumain.

Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat,
These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Sirrah, come on.

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again; and till then, sit thee down, sorrow!

[Exeunt.

Scene II. The same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.
Moth. No, no; O Lord, sir, no.
Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?
Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough senior.
Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?
Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?
Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a congruent epithet appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.
Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.
Arm. Pretty and apt.
Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?
Arm. Thou pretty, because little.
Moth. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?
Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.
Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?
Arm. In thy condign praise.
Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.
Arm. What, that an eel is ingenious?
Moth. That an eel is quick.
Arm. I do say thou art quick in answers: thou hearest my blood.
Moth. I am answered, sir.
Arm. I love not to be crossed.
Moth. [Aside] He speaks the mere contrary; crosses love not him.
Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.
Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.
Arm. Impossible.
Moth. How many is one thrice told?
Arm. I am ill at reckoning; it fitteth the spirit of a tapster.
Moth. You are a gentleman and a gamester, sir.
Arm. I confess both: they are both the varnish of a complete man.
Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts to.
Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.
Moth. Which the base vulgar do call three.
Arm. True.
Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study? Now here is three studied, ere ye'll thrice wink: and how easy it is to put 'years' to the word 'three,' and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.
Moth. A most fine figure!
Arm. To prove you a cipher.
Moth. I will hereupon confess I am in love: and as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new-devised courtesy. I think scorn to sigh: methinks I should outwear Cupid. Comfort me, boy: what great men have been in love?
Moth. Hercules, master.
Arm. Most sweet Hercules! More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.
Moth. Samson, master; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage, for he carried the town-gates on his back like a porter: and he was in love.
Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson! I do excel thee in my rapier as much thou didst me in carrying gates. I am in love too.
Moth. Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?
Arm. A woman, master.
Moth. Of what complexion?
Arm. Of all the four, or the three, or the two, or one of the four.
Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion?
Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.
Arm. Is that one of the four complexions?
Moth. As I have read, sir; and the best of them too.
Arm. Green indeed is the colour of lovers, but to have a love of that colour, methinks Samson had small reason for it. He surely affects her for her wit.
Arm. It was so, sir; for she had a green wit.
Moth. My love is most immaculate white and red.
Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, as masked under such colours.
Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.
Moth. My father's wit and my mother's tongue assist me.
Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; more pretty and pathetic!
Moth. If she be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne'er be known,
For blushing cheeks by faults are bred.
And fears by pale white shown:
Then if she fear, or be to blame,
By this you shall not know,
For still her cheeks possess the same
Which native she doth owe.
A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.
Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?
Moth. The world was very guilty of such ballad some three ages since: but I think now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing nor the tune.
Arm. I will have that subject newly writ o'er that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl that I took in the park with the rational hint Costard: she deserves well.
Moth. [Aside] To be whipped; and yet a better love than my master.
Arm. Sing, boy; my spirit grows heavy in love.
Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a ligh tench.
Arm. I say, sing.
Moth. Forbear till this company be past.

Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must suffer him to take no delight nor no penance; but a must for three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park: she is allowed for the day woman. Fare you well.
Arm. I do betray myself with blushing. Maid.
Jag. Man?
Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.
Jag. That's hereby.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Arm. I know where it is situate.

Jaq. Lord, how wise you are! Arm. I will thee wonders.

Jaq. With that face?

Arm. I love thee.

Jaq. So I heard you say.

Arm. And so, farewell.

Jaq. Fair weather after you!

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away! [Exeunt Dull and Jaquenetta.

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall o't on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly wounded.

Arm. Take away this villain; shut him up.

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave; away! if a very good wit. Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Hercules' club; and therefore too much lds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passado respects not, the duello he regards not; his disgrace is to be called boy; but his glory is to be called men. Adieu, rash! rust! rapier! be ill, drum for your manager is in love; yea, he veth. Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme, for I am sure I shall turn sonnet. Desse wit; write pen; for I am for whole volumes.

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same.

Arm. What is the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants?

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits; consider who the king your father sends, o whom he sends, and what's his embassy: ourself, held precious in the world's esteem, o parley with the sole inheritor of all perfections that a man may owe, latchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight than Aquitaine, a dowry for a queen. Be now as prodigal of all dear grace As Nature was in making graces dear. When she did starve the general world beside And prodigally gave them all to you.

Prin. Good Lord Boyet, my beauty, though but mean, Needs not the painted flourish of your praise; Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye, Not utter'd by base sale of chapmen's tongues: I am less proud to hear you tell my worth Than you much willing to be counted wise In spending your wit in the praise of mine. But now to task the tasker: good Boyet, You are not ignorant, all-telling fame Doth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow, Till painful study shall outwear three years, No woman may approach his silent court. Therefore to's seemeth it a needful course, Before we enter his forbidden gates, To know his pleasure; and in that behalf, Bold of your worthiness, we single you As our best-moving fair solicitor. Tell him, the daughter of the King of France, On serious business, craving quick dispatch, Importunes personal conference with his grace: Haste, signify so much; while we attend, Like humble-visaged suitors, his high will.

Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go. Prin. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so. [Exit Boyet.

Who are the votaries, my loving lords, That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?

First Lord. Lord Longaville is one.

Between Lord Perigort and the beauteous heir Of Jaques Falconbridge, solemnized In Normandy, saw I this Longaville: A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd; Well fitted in arts, glorious in arms: Nothing becomes him ill that he would well. The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss, If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil, Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will; Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will still wills. It should none spare that come within his power. Prin. Some merry mocking lord, belike; is't so? Mar. They say so most that most his humours know. Prin. Such short-lived wits do wither as they grow.

Who are the rest?

Kath. The young Dumat, a well-accomplished youth, Of all that virtue love for virtue loved: Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill: For he hath wit to make an ill shape good, And shape to win grace though he had no wit. 60 I saw him at the Duke Alencçon's once; And much too little of that good I saw Is my report to his great worthiness. Ros. Another of these students at that time Was there with him, if I have heard a truth. Biron they call him; but a merrier man, Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal:
His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words
That aged ears play truant at his tales
And younger hearings are quite ravished;
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

Prin. God bless my ladies! are they all in love,
That every one her own hath garnished
With such bedecking ornaments of praise?

First Lord. Here comes Boyet.

Re-enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord? 80

Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he and his competitors in oath
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt:
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre.

Enter King, Longaville, Dumas, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prin. 'Tis fair! I give you back again; and 'tis I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours; and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.

Prin. I will be welcome, then: conduct me thither.

King. Hear me, dear lady; I have sworn an oath.

Prin. Our Lady help my lord! he'll be sworn.

King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.

Prin. Why, will shall break it; will and nothing else.

King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.

Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:
'Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it.
But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold:
To teach a teacher ill beseecheth me.
Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in my suit.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.

Prin. You will the sooner, that I were away:
For you'll prove perjured if you make me stay.

Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Biron. I know you did.

Ros. How needless was it then to ask the question!

Biron. You must not be so quick.

Ros. 'Tis long of you that spur me with such questions.

Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast
Twill tire.

Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.

Biron. What time o' day?

Ros. The hour that fools should ask.

Biron. Now fair belfay your mask!

Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!

Biron. And send you many lovers!

Ros. Amen, so you be none.

Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns; 130
Being but the one half of an entire sum
Disbursed by my father in his wars.
But say that he or we, as neither have,
Received that sum, yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
One part of Aquitaine is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
If then the king your father will restore
But that one half which is unsatisfied,
Which we much rather had depart with
And have the money by our father lent
Than Aquitaine so gelled as it is.
Dear princess, were not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding 'gainst some reason in my breast
And go well satisfied to France again.

Prin. You do the king my father too much wrong
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeming to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.

King. I do protest I never heard of it;
And if you prove it, I'll repay it back
Or yield up Aquitaine.

Prin. We arrest your word. 160

Boyet, you can produce acquittances
For such a sum from special officers
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.

Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come.
Where that and other specialties are bound:
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.

King. It shall suffice me: at which interview
All liberal reason I will yield unto.
Meantime receive such welcome at my hand
As honour without breach of honour may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness:
You may not come, fair princess, in my gates;
But here without you shall be so received
As you shall deem yourself lodged in my heart,
Though so denied fair harbour in my house.
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell!
To-morrow shall we visit you again.

Prin. Sweet health and fair desires consort your grace!
This civil war of wits were much better used
On Navarre and his book-men; for here 'tis abused.
Boyet. If my observation, which very seldom lies,
By the heart's still rhetoric disclosed with eyes,
Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected. 230
Prin. With what?
Boyet. With that which we lovers entitle affected.
Prin. Your reason?
Boyet. Why, all his behaviours did make their retire
To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire:
His heart, like an agate, with your print im-press'd,
Proud with his form, in his eye pride express'd:
His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see,
Did stumble with haste in his eyesight to be;
All senses to that sense did make their repair, 240
To feel only looking on fairest of fair:
Methought all his senses were lock'd in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy:
Who, tendering their own worth from where they were glass'd,
Did point you to buy them, along as you pass'd:
His face's own margent did quote such amaz'n
That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes.
I'll give you Aquitaine and all that is his,
An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.
Prin. Come to our pavilion: Boyet is disposed.
Boyet. But to speak that in words which his eye hath disclosed.
I only have made a mouth of his eye,
By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.
Ros. Thou art an old love-monger and speakest skilfully,
Mar. He is Cupid's grandfather and learns news of him.
Ros. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.
Boyet. Do you hear, my mad wench? 250
Mar. No.
Boyet. What then, do you see?
Ros. Ay, our way to be gone.
Boyet. You are too hard for me.
[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.
Moth. Conconsider.

[Singing.

Arm. Sweet air! Go, tenderness of years;
take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festinately hither: I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?

Arm. How meanest thou? brawling in French?

Moth. No, my complete master: but to jig off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids, sig a note and sing a note, sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love, sometime through the nose, as if you snuffed up
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

[Act 1]

love by smelling love; with your hat penthouse-like o'er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin-belly doublet like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away. These are complements, these are humours; these betray nice wench's, that would be betrayed without these; and make them men of note—do you note me—that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my penny of observation.

Arm. But O,—but O,—

Moth. 'The hobby-horse is forgot.'

Arm. Callest thou my love 'hobby-horse'?

Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love perhaps a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. By heart and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all those three I will prove.

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live; and this, by in, and without, upon the instant: by heart you love her, because your heart cannot grow by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Arm. Fetch hither the swain: he must carry me a letter.

Moth. A message well sympathized; a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

Moth. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited. But I go.

Arm. The way is but short: away!

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. The meaning, pretty ingenious? Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

Moth. Minimè, honest master; or rather, master, no.

Arm. I say lead is slow.

Moth. You are too swift, sir, to say so: Is that lead slow which is fired from a gun?

Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric!

He reputes me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he: I shoot thee at the swain.

Moth. Thump then and I flee. [Exit.

Arm. A most acute juvenal; voluble and free of grace!

By thy favour, sweet wellkin, I must sigh in thy face:

Most rude melancholy, valour gives thee place.

My herald is return'd.

Re-enter Moth with Costard.

Moth. A wonder, master! here's a costard broken in a shin.

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle: come, thy l'envoy; begin.

Cost. No egna, no riddle, no l'envoy; nosalve fin the mail, sir: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain! no l'envoy, no l'envoy; no salve, sir, but a plantain! I

Arm. By virtue, thou enforeste laughter; thy silly thought my spleen; the heaving of my lip provokes me to ridiculous smiling. O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the inconsiderate take sal for l'envoy, and the word l'envoy for a salve?

Moth. Do the wise think them other? Is it l'envoy a salve?

Arm. No, page: it is an epilogue or discourse to make plain Some obscure precedence that hath tofor be sain.

I will example it:

The fox, the ape and the humble-bee,

Were still at odds, being but three.

There's the moral. Now the l'envoy.

Moth. I will add the l'envoy. Say the mor again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, the humble-bee,

Were still at odds, being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door,

And stay'd the odds by adding four.

Now will I begin your moral, and do you folo with my l'envoy.

The fox, the ape and the humble-bee,

Were still at odds, being but three.

Arm. Until the goose came out of door,

Staying the odds by adding four.

Moth. A good l'envoy, ending in the goos would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goos that's flat.

Sir, your pennysworth is good, an your goose be fa

To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast as a Cost. Let me see; a fat l'envoy; ay, that's a fat goos.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How d this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a costard was broke in a shin.

Then call'd you for the l'envoy.

Cost. True, and I for a plantain: thus can

The boy's fat l'envoy, the goose that yo bought;

And he ended the market.

Arm. But tell me; how was there a costar broken in a shin?

Cost. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth: I wi speak that the l'envoy:

I Costard, running out, that was safely within Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirrah Costard, I will enfranchise thee Cost. O, marry me to one Frances: I sme some l'envoy, some goose, in this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean setting the at liberty, enfreedoming thy person: thou we immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, true; and now you will be m purgation and let me loose.

I give thee thy liberty, set thee fro durance; and, in lieu thereof, impose on the nothing but this: bear this significant [giving, letter] to the country maid Jaquenetta: there remuneration; for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependents. Moth, follow. [Exit.

Moth. Like the sequel, I. Signior Costard adieu.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Enter Biron.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon say a man buy for a remuneration?

Biron. Why, then, three-farthings worth of silk.

Cost. I thank your worship: God be wi' you!

Biron. Stay, slave; I must employ thee! thou wilt win my favour, good my knave, one thing for me that I shall entreat. Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Biron. This afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir: fare you well.

Biron. Thou knowest not what it is.

Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.

Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.

Biron. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, ave, it is but this:

Enter the Princess, and her train, a Forester, Boyet, Rosaline, Maria, and Katharine.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurred his horse so hard

Against the steep uprising of the hill?

Boyet. I know not; but I think it was not he.

Prin. Who'er a'was, a' show'd a mounting mind.

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our dispatch:

On Saturday we will return to France.

Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush

That we must stand and play the murderer in?

For. Hereby, upon the edge of yonder copse:

A stand where you may make the fairest shoot. 10

Prin. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot,

And thereupon you speak'st the fairest shoot.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

Prin. What, what? first praise me and again say no?

O short-lived pride! Not fair? allack for woe!

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now:

Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.

Here, good my glass, take this for telling true:

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Boyet. See, see, my beauty will be saved by merit!

O heresy in fair, fit for these days!

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.

But come, the bow: now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:

Not wounding, pity would not let me do't;

If wounding, then it was to show my skill,

That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.

And out of question so it is sometimes:

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,

When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart;

As I for praise alone now seek to spill

The poor deer's blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereignty

Only for praise sake, when they strive to be

Lords o'er their lords?

Prin. Only for praise: and praise we may afford

To any lady that subdues a lord.

Boyet. Here comes a member of the common-wealth.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my incony Jew! 120

Though Argus were her eunuch and her guard:

And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!

To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague

That Cupid will impose for my neglect

Of his almighty dreadful little might.

Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue and groan:

Some men must love my lady and some Joan.

Exit.
Enter Costard.

Cost. God dig-you-den all! Pray you, which is the head lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest and the tallest.

Cost. The thickest and the tallest! it is so; truth is truth.

An your waist, mistresse, were as slender as my wit,

One o' these maids' girdles for your waist should be fit.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest here.

Prin. What's your will, sir? what's your will?

Cost. I have a letter from Monsieur Biron to one Lady Rosaline.

Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter! he's a good friend of mine:

Stand aside, good bearer. Boyet, you can carve; Break up this capon.

Boyet. I am bound to serve.

This letter is mistook, it importeth none here; It is writ to Jaquinetta.

Prin. We will read it, I swear.

Boyet [reads]. 'By heaven, that thou art fair, is most infallible; true, that thou art beauteous; truth itself, that thou art lovely. More fairer than fair, beautiful than beauteous, truer than truth itself, have commiseration on thy hercical vassal! The magnanimous and most illustrate king Cophetua set eye upon the pernicious and indubitate beggar Zenelophon; and he it was that mightily right say, Veni, vidi, vici; which to annotainize in the vulgar,—O base and obscure vulgar Videlicet, He came, saw, and overcame: he came, one: saw, two: overcame, three. Who came? the king: why did he come? to see: why did he see? to overcome: to whom came he? to the beggar: what saw he? the beggar: who overcame he? the beggar. The conclusion is victory: on whose side? the king's. The captive is enriched: on whose side? the beggar's. The catastrophe is a nuptial: on whose side? the king's: no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the king; for so stands the comparison: thou the beggar: for so witensteth thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may: shall I enforce thy love? I could: shall I entreat thee, thy love? I will. What shalt thou exchange for rags? robes; for tittles? titles; for thyself? me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I profane my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part. Thine, in the dearest design of industry,

DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO.'

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar:

'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey.

Submitive fall his princely feet before,

And he from forage will incline to play:

But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then? Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

Prin. What plume of feathers is he that in-ditted this letter?

What vane? what weathercock? did you ever hear better?

Boyet. I am much deceived but I remember the style.

Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it erewhile.

Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keep here in court;

A phantasime, a Monarch, and one that make sport
To the prince and his bookmates.

Prin. Thou fellow, a word

Who gave thee this letter?

Cost. I told you; my lord.

Prin. To whom shouldst thou give it?

Cost. From my lord to my lady.

Prin. From which lord to which lady?

Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master o' mine,

To a lady of France that he calleth Rosaline.

Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come lords, away.

[To Ros.] Here, sweet, put up this: 'twill be thine another day.

[Exeunt Princess and train

Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the suitor?

Ros. Shall I teach you to know? I tell thee,

Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.

Ros. Why, she that bears the bow.

Finely put off!

Boyet. My lady goes to kill horns; but, if thou marry,

Hang me by the neck, if horns that year mis-carry.

Finely put on!

Ros. Well, then, I am the shooter.

Boyet. And who is your deer?

Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself come not near.

Finely put on, indeed!

Mar. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower: have I hit her now?

Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when King Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queen Guinover of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it,

Thou canst not hit it, my good man.

Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot,

An I cannot, another can.

[Exeunt Ros. and Kath.

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant: how both did fit it!

Mar. A mark marvellous well shot, for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O, mark that mark! A mark, says my lady!

Let the mark have a prick in't, to mete at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide o' the bow hand! I' faith, your hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, a' must shoot nearer, or he'll never hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then belike your hand is in.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Cast. Then will she get the upshot by cleaving the pin.
Mar. Come, come, you talk graysly; your lips grow foul.
Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir; challenge her to bowl.

But, if I eat too much rubbing. Good night, my good owl. [Exeunt Boyet and Maria.
Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown!
ord, Lord, how the ladies and I have put him down!
my troth, most sweet jests! most incony vulgar wit!
hen it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it were, so fit.
ado o' th' one side,—O, a most dainty man!
see him walk before a lady and to bear her fan!
see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a' will swear!
de his page o' t' other side, that handful of wit! heavens, it is a most pathetic it! 150 la, sola! [Exit Costard, running.

SCENE II. The same.

iter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.
Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done the testimony of a good conscience.
Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis, in odo; ripe as the pomewriter, who now hangeth a jewel in the ear of caelo, the sky, the welthe, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab on face of terra, the soil, the land, the earth.
Vath. Truly, Master Holofernes, the epithets: sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least:
sir, I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.
Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo. 11
Dull. Twas not a haud credo; 'twas a pricket.
Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind nature, as it were, in via, in way, of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or rather, entare, to show, as it were, his inclination, or his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, pruned, untrained, or rather, unlettered, or heret, unconfessed fashion, to insert again haud credo for a deer. 20
Dull. I said the deer was not a haud credo; as a pricket.
Twice-sod simplicity, bic cosfius! thou monster Ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!
Vath. Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book;
not eat paper, as it were; he hath not ink; his intellect is not replenished; he is an animal, only sensible in the duller parts;
such barren plants are set before us, that we must be careful to:
dich we of taste and feeling are, for those parts that do fructify in us more than he,
as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool,
were there a patch set on learning, to see him in a school:
minute bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,
my can brook the weather that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book-men: can you tell me by your wit
What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?
Hol. Dictynna, goodman Dull; Dictynna, goodman Dull.
Dull. What is Dictynna?
Nath. A title to Phoebus, to Luna, to the moon.
Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more,
And raught not to five weeks when he came to five-score.
The allusion holds in the exchange.
Dull. 'Tis true indeed; the collusion holds in the exchange.
Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.
Dull. And I say, the pollution holds in the exchange; for the moon is never but a month old: and I say beside that, 'twas a pricket that the princess killed.
Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extem-poral epitaph on the death of the deer? And, to humour the ignorant, call I the deer the princess killed a pricket.
Nath. Perge, good Master Holofernes, perge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility.
Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility.
The préyful princess pierced and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket:
Some say a sore; but not a sore, till now made sore with shooting.
The dogs did yell: put L to sore, then sorel jumps from thicket;
Or pricket sore, or else sorel; the people fall a-hooting.
If sore be sore, then L to sore makes fifty sorel of one sore.
Of one sore I an hundred make by adding but one more L.
Nath. A rare talent! 29
Dull. [Aside] If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent.
Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple; a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions; these are begot in the ventricle of memory, nourished in the womb of pia mater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occasion. But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.
Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you: and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.
Hol. Mehercle, if their sons be ingenuous, they shall want no instruction; if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them: but vir sapit qui paucu loquitur; a soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.
Jaq. God give you good morrow, master Parson.
Hol. Master Parson, quasi pers-on. An if one should be pierced, which is the one?
Cost. Marry, master schoolmaster, he that is likest to a hoghead.
LOVE’S LABOUR’S LOST. [Act I]

Hol. Piercing a hogshead! a good lustre of conceit in a tuft of earth; fire enough for a flint, Pearl enough for a swine: ’tis pretty; it is well.

Jaq. Good master Parson, be so good as read me this letter: it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado: I beseech you, read it.

Hol. Fauste, precor gelida quando pecus omne sub umbra Ruminat,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantuan! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice;

Veneta, Venetia,
Chi non ti vede non ti pretia. 100
Old Mantuan, old Mantuan! who understandeth thee not, loves thee not. Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa.

Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?

Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.

Hol. Let me hear a staff, a stanza, a verse; lege, domine.

Nath. [reads]
If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love? 110
Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow’d!

Though to myself forsworn, to thee I’ll faithful prove;
Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers bow’d.

Study his bias leaves and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live that art would comprehend:
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend.

All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise that I thy parts admire:
Thy eye Jove’s lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder;
Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire.

Celestial as thou art, O, pardon love this wrong,
That sing’s heaven’s praise with such an earthly tongue.

Hol. You find not the apostrophas, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified: but, for the elegance, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, care.

Ovidius Naso was the man: and why, indeed, Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? Imitari is nothing: so doth the hound his master, the ape his keeper, the tired horse his rider. But, damosella virgin, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen’s lords.

Hol. I will overglance the superscript: ’To the snow-white hand of the most beautiful Lady Rosaline.’ I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto: ’Your ladyship’s in all desired employment, BIRON.’ Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the vortaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen’s, which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Tr and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king: it may concern much. Stay not thy pleasantry; I forgive thy dul adieu.

Jaq. Good Costard, go with me. Sir, God save your life!

Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

[Exeunt Cost. and Jaq.]

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear God, very religiously; and, as a certain fath saith—

Hol. Sir, tell not me of the father: I do fe colourable colours. But to return to the verse did they please you, Sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father’s of a certain pupil of mine; where, if, before repast, shall please you to gratify the table with a grace I will, on my privilege I have with the persons of the foresaid child or pupil, undertake you ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, nor invention: I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you; for society, sa the text, is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, certes, the text most infallibly colours it. [To Dull] Sir, I do invite you; too: you shall not say me nay: panca vert Away! the gentles are at their game, and will to our recreation. [Exeunt]

SCENE III. The same.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I couring myself: they have pitched a toil; I toiling in a pitch,—pitch that defiles: defile! foul word. Well, set thee down, sorrow! for they say the fool said, and so say I, and I fool: well proved, wit! By the sight of this I am as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, sheep: well proved again o’ my side! I will love: if I do, hang me; i faith, I will not. but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Wt. I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love: and it hath taught me to rhyme and to be melancholy; and here part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one o’ my somnets already: I clown bore it, the fool sent it, and the lady he it: sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lad. By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a pap God give him grace to groan! [Stands aside.

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. Ay me!

Biron. [Aside] Shot, by heaven! Proc

sweet Cupid: thou hast thumped him with a bird-bolt under the left pap. In faith, secrets

King [reads].

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays hit

The night of dew that on my cheeks down flow Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
More sacks to the mill! O heavens, I have my wish!

Enter Dumain, with a paper.

Dumain transform'd! four woodcocks in a dish!
Dum. O most divine Kate!
Biron. O most profane coxcomb!
Dum. By heaven, the wonder in a mortal eye!
Biron. By earth, she is not, corporal, there you lie.
Dum. Her amber hair for foul hath amber quoted.
Biron. An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the cedar.
Biron. Stoop, I say;
Her shoulder is with child.
Dum. As fair as day. 90
Biron. Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine,
Dum. O that I had my wish!
Long. And I had mine!
King. And I mine too, good Lord!
Biron. Amen, so I had mine: is not that a good word?
Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood and will remember'd be.
Biron. A fever in your blood! why, then incision
Would let her out in saucers: sweet misprision!
Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.
Biron. Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.
Dum. [reads]
On a day—alack the day!—
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair
Playing in the wanton air;
Through the velvet leaves the wind, All unseen, can passage find;
That the lover, sick to death, Wish himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow; Air, would I might triumph so! 110
But, alack, my hand is sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn; Vow, alack, for youth unmeet, Youth so apt to pluck a sweet!
Do not call it sin in me, That I am forsworn for thee; Thou for whom Jove would swear Juno but an Ethiope were; And deny himself for Jove, Turning mortal for thy love.
120
This will I send and something else more plain, That shall express my true love's fasting pain, O, would the king, Biron, and Longaville, Were lovers too! Ill, to example ill, Would from my forehead wipe a perjured note; For none offend where all alike do dote.

Long. [advancing]. Dumain, thy love is far from charity, That in love's grief desirest society:
You may look pale, but I should blush, I know, To be o'erheard and taken napping so. 130
King [advancing]. Come, sir, you blush; as if your case is such:
You chide at him, offending twice as much;
You do not love Maria; Longaville.
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bash:
And mark'd thee both and for thee both did blush:
I heard your guilty rhymes, observed your fashion,
Saw sighs reek from you, noted well your passion:
Ay me! says one; O Jove! the other cries; 144
One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:
To Long. You would for paradise break faith and troth.

[To Dum.]
And Jove, for your love, would infringe an oath.

What will Biron say when that he shall hear
Faith so infringed, which such zeal did swear?
How will he scorn! how will he spend his wit!
How will he triumph, leap and laugh at it?
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me. 150
Biron. Now I step forth to whip hypocrisy.

[Advancing.]
Ah, good my liege, I pray thee, pardon me!
Good heart, what grace hast thou, thus to reproce
These worms for loving, that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears;
You'll not be perjured, 'tis a hateful thing;
Tush, none but minstrels like of sonneting!
But are you not ashamed? nay, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershoot?
You found his mote; the king your mote did see;
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O, what a scene of folly have I seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow and of teen!
O me, with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformed to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gig,
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor play at push-pin with the boys,
And cletic Timon laugh at idle toys!

Where lies thy grief, O, tell me, good Dumain?
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? all about the breast:
A caudle, ho!
King. Too bitter is thy jest.
Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?
Biron. Nay, you to me, but I betray'd by you:
I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in;
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With men like men of inconstancy.

When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for love, or spend a minute's time
In pruning me? When shall you hear that I
Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb?
King. Soft! whither away so fast?
A true man or a thief that gallops so?
Biron. I post from love; good lover, let me go.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

Jaq. God bless the king!
King. What present hast thou there?
Cost. Some certain treason.
King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.
King. If it makes nothing neither,

The treason and you go in peace away together.
Jaq. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read;
Our parson misdoubts it; 'twas treason, he said.
King. Biron, read it over.

[Giving him the paper.]

Where hadst thou it?
Jaq. Of Costard.
King. Where hadst thou it?
Cost. Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio.
[Biron tears the letter.]

King. How now! what is in you? why dost thou tear it?
Biron. A toy, my liege, a toy: your grace needs not fear it.
Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.
Dum. It is Biron's writing, and here is his name.
[Gathering up the pieces.]
Biron. [To Costard] Ah, you woreson log-gingerhead! you were born to do me shame.

Guilty, my lord, guilty! I confess, I confess.
King. What?
Biron. That you three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess:
He, he, and you, and my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.
O, dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.
Dum. Now the number is even.
Biron. True, true; we are four.

Will these turtles be gone?
King. Hence, sirs; away!
Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

[Exeunt Costard and Jaquenetta.]

Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers, let us embrace!

As true we are as flesh and blood can be:
The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his face:
Young blood doth not obey an old decree:
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore of all hands must we be forsown.
King. What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?

Biron. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heavenly Rosaline,
That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,
At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
Bows not his vassal head and stricken blind
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?
What peremptory eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty?
King. What zeal, what fury hath inspired thee now?
My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon;
She an attending star, scarce seen a light.

Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron;
O, but for my love, day would turn to night!
Of all complexions the cul'd sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek,
Where several worthies make one dignity,
Where nothing wants that want itself doth seek.
Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,—
Fie, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not:
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs,
Sheasses praise; then praise too short doth blot.

A wither'd hermit, five-score winters worn,
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Might shake off 5 fifty, looking in her eye:
Beauty doth varnish age, as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy:
Thus the sun that maketh all things shine.

King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.
Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity.

O, who can give an oath where is a book? 250
That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack,
If she learn not of her eye to look:
No face is fair that is not full so black.

King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,
The hue of dungeons and the suit of night;
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.

If in black my lady's brows be deck'd,
It mourns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of the days,
For native blood is counted painting now;
And therefore red, that would avoid displeasure,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her are chimney-sweepers black.

And since her time are colliers counted bright.

And Etheloids of their sweet complexion rich.

Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light,
Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colours should be wash'd away.

'Twere good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,
I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day.

Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here.

No devil will fright thee then so much as she.

I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.

Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see.

O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread!

O vile! then, as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see as she walk'd overhead.

But what of this? are we not all in love?

Nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.

Then leave this chat; and, good Biron,
Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn.

Ay, marry, there; some flatterry for this evil.

O, some authority how to proceed;
some tricks, some quillets, how to cheat the devil.

Some salve for perjury.

'Tis more than need.

Have, thee, then, affections men at arms. 290
Consider what you first did swear unto,
To fast, to study, and to see no woman;
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.
Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young;
And abstinence engenders maladies.

And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,
It is religion to be thus forsworn,
For charity itself fulfils the law,
And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!

Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them, lords;
Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advised,
In conflict that you get the sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing; lay these glories by:
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too: therefore let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;
Then homeward every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress: in the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shape;
For revels, dances, masks and merry hours
Forerun fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted
That may be possible, and may by us be fitted.

Biron. Allons! allons! Sow'd cockle reap'd no corn;
And justice always whirls in equal measure:
Light wenches may prove plagues to men forsworn;
If so, our copper buys no better treasure.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The same.

Enter HOLOFERNES, SIR NATHANIEL, and DULL.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir; your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without scurrility, witty without affectation, audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without horror. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tamen quae te: his humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and treasonable. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithe. [Draws out his table-book.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasimes, such insociable and point-devise companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak dout, fine, when he should say doubt; det, when he should pronounce debt,—d, e, b, t, not d, e, t: he clepeth a calf, cauf; half, hauf; neighbour vocatur nebour; neigh abbreviated ne. This is abominable,—which he would call abominable: it insinuath me of insante: anne intelligis, domine? to make frantic, lunatic.

Nath. Laus Deo, bene intelligo.

Hol. Bon, bon, fort bon, Priscian! a little scratched, 'twill serve.

Nath. Videsne quis venit?

Hol. Video, et gaudeo.

Enter ARMADO, MOTH, and COSTARD.

Arm. Chirrah! [To MOTH.

Hol. Quair chirra, not sirrah?

Arm. Men of peace, well encountered.

Hol. Most military sir, salutation.

MOTH. [Aside to Costard] They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps.

Cost. O, they have lived long on the alms-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatis: thou art easier swallowed than a fliap-draken.

Moth. Peace! the pelai begins.

Arm. [To Hol.] Monsieur, are you not lettered?

Moth. Yes: yes; he teaches boys the horn-book.

Arm. What is a, b, spelt backward, with the horn on his head?

Hol. Ba, pueritia, with a horn added.

Moth. Ba, most silly sheep with a horn. You hear his learning.

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant?

Moth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth. I.

Hol. I will repeat them,—a, e, i,—

Moth. The sheep: the other two concludes it,—o, u.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick venue of wit! snap, snap, quick and home! it rejoceth my intellect; true wit!

Moth. Offered by a child to an old man; which is wit-old.

Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?

Moth. Horns.

Arm. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Hol. Lend me thy horn to make one, and I will whip about thy infamy circum circa,—a gig of a cuckold's horn.

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou halfpenny pursuit of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion. O, an the heavens were so pleased that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldst thou make me! Go to: thou hast it ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O, I smell false Latin; dunghill for unguem.

Arm. Arts-man, preambulate, we will be singuled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or mons, the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection to congratulate the princess at her pavilion in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous
Scene I.

Love's Labour's Lost.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart.

If fairs are, come thus plentifully in:
A lady will'd about with diamonds!

Look you what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Madame, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing but this! yes, as much love in rhyme

As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper,

Writ o' both sides the leaf, margin and all,

That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.

Ros. That was the way to make his godhead wax,

For he hath been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Ros. You'll ne'er be friends with him; a' kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;

And so she died: had she been light, like you, Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit,
She might ha' been a grandam ere she died:
And so may you: for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff;

Therefore I'll darkly end the argument.

Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still i' the dark.

Kath. So do not you, for you are a light wench.

Ros. Indeed I weigh not you, and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for 'past cure is still past care.'

Prin. Well banded both; a set of wit well play'd.

But, Rosaline, you have a favour too:

Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would you knew?

An if my face were but as fair as yours,
My favour were as great; be witness this.
Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron:
The numbers true; and, were the numbering too,
I were the fairest goddess on the ground:
I am compared to twenty thousand fairs,
O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!

Prin. Any thing like?

Ros. Much in the letters; nothing in the praise.

Prin. Beauetous as ink; a good conclusion.

Ros. 'Ware pencils, ho! I let me not die your debtor,

My red dominical, my golden letter:

O that your face were not so full of O's!

Kath. A pox of that jest! and I beshrew all shows,

Prin. But, Katharine, what was sent to you from fair Dumain?

Kath. Madam, this glove.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

[ACT V]

Prin. Did he not send you twain?
Kath. Yes, madam, and moreover
Some thousand verses of a faithfull lover,
A huge translation of hypocrisy,
Vilely compiled, profound simplicity.
Mar. This and these pearls to me sent Long-vaville.
The letter is too long by half a mile.
Prin. I think no less. Dost thou not wish in heart
The chain were longer and the letter short?
Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.
Prin. We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.
Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.
That same Biron I'll torture ere I go:
O that I knew he were but in by the week!
How I would make him fawn and beg and seek
And wait the season and observe the times
And spend his prodigal wits in bootless rhymes
And spend his service to folly to my hests
And make him proud to make me proud that jests!
So pertautt-like would I o'ersway his state
That he should be my fool and I his fate.
Prin. None are so surely caught, when they are catch'd,
As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,
Hath wisdom's warrant and the help of school
And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.
Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such excess
As gravity's revolt to wantonness.
Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note
As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote;
Since all the power thereof it doth apply
To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.
Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Enter Boyet.

Boyet. O, I am stabb'd with laughter! Where's her grace?
Prin. Thy news, Boyet?
Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare!
Arm, wenches, arm! encounters mounted are Against your peace: Love doth approach disguis'd,
 Armed in arguments; you'll be surpris'd:
Muster your wits; stand in your own defence;
Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.
Prin. Saint Denis to Saint Cupid! What are they
That charge their breath against us? say, scout, say.

Boyet. Under the cool shade of a syecamore
I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour;
When, lo! to interrupt my purposed rest,
I stole into a neighbour thicket by,
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That, by and by, disguised they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart hath com'd his embassage:
Action and accent did they teach him there;
'Thus must thou speak,' and 'thus thy body bear:'
And ever and anon they made a doubt
Presence majestical would put him out;

'For,' quoth the king, 'an angel shall thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously.'
The boy replied, 'An angel is not evil;
I should have fear'd her had she been a devil.'
With that, all laugh'd and clapp'd him on the shoulder,
Making the bold wag by their praises bolden:
One rubb'd his elbow thus, and fleer'd and swore
A better speech was never spoke before;
Another, with his finger and his thumb,
Cried, 'Via! we will do't, come what will come;
The third he caper'd, and cried, 'All goes well;'
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
That in this spleen ridiculous appears,
To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.
Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?
Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus Like Muscovites or Russians, as I guess.
Their purpose is to parade, to court and dance;
And every one his love-feat will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.
Prin. And will they so? the gallants shall be:
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd;
And not a man of them shall have the grace,
Despite of suit, to see a lady's face.
Hold, Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear,
And then the king will court thee for his dear;
Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give methine,
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.
And change you favours too; so shall your loves
Woo contrary, deceived by these removes.
Ros. Come on, then; wear the favours most in sight.
Kath. But in this changing what is your intent?
Prin. The effect of my intent is to cross theirs:
To stop it but in mocking Merriment;
And mock for mock is only my intent.
Their several counsels they unbosom shall
To loves mistook, and so be mock'd withal
Upon the next occasion that we meet,
With visages display'd, to talk and greet.
Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to't?
Boyet. No, to the death, we will the move a foot;
Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace;
But while 'tis spoke each turn away her face.
Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart,
And quite divorce his memory from his part.
Prin. Therefore I do it; and I make no doubt
The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport as sport o'erthrown,
To make theirs ours and ours none but our own:
So shall we stay, mocking intended game,
And they, well mock'd, depart away with shame.

[Trumpets sound within.]

Boyet. The trumpet sounds: be mask'd: the maskers come.

Enter Blackamoors with music: MOTH: the King,
BIRON, LONGAVILLE, and DEMAIN, in Russian habits, and masked.

Moth. All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

[The Ladies turn their backs to him.

That ever turn'd their—backs—to mortal views!

BIRON. [Aside to Moth] Their eyes, villain, their eyes.

MOTh. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortal views!—

But—

BOYET. True; out indeed.

MOTh. Out of your favours, heavenly spirits, vouchsafe not to behold—

BIRON. [Aside to Moth] Once to behold, rogue.

MOTh. Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes, —with your sun-beamed eyes—

BOYET. They will not answer to that epithet; or were best call it 'daughter-beamed eyes.'

MOTh. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

BIRON. Is this your perfectness? be gone, you rogue! [Exit Moth.

ROS. What would these strangers? know their minds, Boyet:

BOYET. They do speak our language, 'tis our will

That some plain man recount their purposes:
Now what they would.

BOYET. What would you with the princess?

BIRON. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

ROS. What would they, say they?

BOYET. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

ROS. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.

BOYET. She says, you have it, and you may be gone.

KING. Say to her, we have measured many miles,

'Tis a measure with her on this grass.

BOYET. They say, that they have measured many a mile

'Tis a measure with you on this grass.

ROS. It is not so. Ask them how many inches in one mile; if they have measured many, he measure then of one is easily told.

BOYET. If to come hither you have measured many miles, the princess bids you tell many inches doth fill up one mile.

BIRON. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.

BOYET. She hears herself.

ROS. How many weary steps,

If many weary miles you have o'ergone,
Do number'd in the travel of one mile?

BIRON. We number nothing that we spend for you:
our duty is so rich, so infinite,
that we do it still without accompl.

OUSAF Show the sunshine of your face, hat we, like savages, may worship it.

ROS. My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

KING. Blessed are clouds, to do as such clouds do:

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine,

Those clouds removed, upon our watery eye.

ROS. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter;
how now request'st but moonshine in the water.

KING. Then, in our measure do but vouchsafe one change.

Thou bid'st me beg; this begging is not strange.

ROS. Play, music, then! Nay, you must do it soon.

Music plays. 211

Not yet! no dance! Thus change I like the moon.

KING. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged?

ROS. You took the moon at full, but now she's changed.

KING. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

The music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

ROS. Our ears vouchsafe it.

KING. But your legs should do it.

ROS. Since you are strangers and come here by chance,
We'll not be nice: take hands. We will not dance.

KING. Why take we hands, then?

ROS. Only to part friends: 220

Curgyt, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.

KING. More measure of this measure; be not nice.

ROS. We can afford no more at such a price.

KING. Prize you yourselves: what buys your company?

ROS. Your absence only.

KING. That can never be.

ROS. Then cannot we be bought: and so, adieu;

Twice to your visor, and half once to you.

KING. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.

ROS. In private, then.

I am best pleased with that.

[They converse apart.

BIron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

PRI. Honey, and milk, and sugar; there is three.

BIRON. Nay then, two treys, and if you grow so nice,

Metheglin, wort, and malmsye: well run, dice!

There's half-a-dozen sweets.

PRI. Seventh sweet, adieu; since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.

BIron. One word in secret.

PRI. Let it not be sweet.

BIRON. Thou grievest my gall.

PRI. Gall! bitter.

BIRON. Therefore meet.

[They converse apart.

DUM. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a word?

MAR. Name it.

DUM. Fair lady,—

MAR. Say you so? Fair lord,—

Take that for your fair lady.

DUM. Please it you, 240

As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.

KATH. What, was your vizard made without a tongue?

LONG. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.

KATH. O for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.

LONG. You have a double tongue within your mask,

And would afford my speechless vizard half.
Kath. Veal, quoth the Dutchman. Is not 'veal' a calf?
Long. A calf, fair lady!
Kath. No, a fair lord calf.
Long. Let's part the word.
Kath. No, I'll not be your half:
Take all, and wean it; it may prove an ox. 250 Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp mocks!
Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.
Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.
Kath. Bleat softly then; the butcher hears you cry.
[They converse apart.
Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen
As is the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen,
Above the sense of sense; so sensible Seemeth their conference; their conceits have wings
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.
Ros. Not one word more, my maids; break off, break off.
Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scuff!
King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple wits.
Prin. Twenty adieux, my frozen Muscovits.
[Exeunt King, Lords, and Blackamoors.
Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at?
Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out.
Ros. Well-like wits they have; gross, gross;
fat, fat.
Prin. O poverty in wit, kingly-poor flout!
Will they not, think you, hang themselves tonight?
Or ever, but in vizards, show their faces?
This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.
Ros. O, they were all in lamentable cases!
The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.
And he did swear himself out of all suit.
Mar. Dumain was at my service, and his sword:
No point, quoth I; my servant straight was mute.
Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his
heart;
And trod you what he called me?
Prin. Qualm, perhaps.
Kath. Yes, in good faith.
Prin. Go, sickness as thou art! 280
Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps.
But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.
Prin. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.
Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.
Mar. Dumain is mine, as sure as bark on tree.
Boyet. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear;
Immediately they will again be here
In their own shapes; for it can never be
They will digest this harsh indignity.
Prin. Will they return?
Boyet. They will, they will, God knows, 290
And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows:
Therefore change favours; and, when they repair;
 Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.
Prin. How blow? how blow? speak to be understood.
Boyet. Fair ladies mask'd are roses in their bud;
Dismask'd, their damask sweet commination shown,
†Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.
Prin. Avant! perplexity! What shall we do,
If they return in their own shapes to woo?
Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advised,
Let's mock them still, as well known as disguised:
Let us complain to them what fools were here,
Disguised like Muscovits, in shapeless gear;
And wonder what they were and to what end
Their shallow shows and prologue vilely penn'd
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should be presented at our tent to us.
Boyet. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.
Prin. Whip to our tents, as roses run o'er land.
[Exeunt Princess, Rosaline, Katharine, and Maria.
Re-enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and
Dumain, in their proper habits.
King. Fair sir, God save you! Where's the princess?
Boyet. Gone to her tent. Please it your majesty
Command me any service to her thither?
King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.
Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know, my
lord.
Biron. This fellow pecks up wit as pigeons
pease,
And utters it again when God doth please:
He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassails, meetings, markets, fairs;
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace, but with such show.
This gallant puts the wenches on his sleeve; 310
Hath he been Adam, he had tempted Eve;
A' can carve too, and lisp: why, this is he
That kiss'd his hand away in courtesy;
This is the ape of form, monsieur the nice,
That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honourable terms: nay, he can sing
A mean most meanly; and in ushering
Mend him who can: the ladies call him sweet;
The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet:
This is the flower that smiles on every one;
To show his teeth as white as whale's bone;
And conscientious, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongued Biron.
King. A bluster on his sweet tongue, with my heart,
That put Armado's page out of his part!
Biron. See where it comes! Behaviour, what wert thou
Till this madman show'd thee? and what art thou
now?
Re-enter the Princess, usher'd by Biron; Rosa-line, Maria, and Katharine.
King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

in. ‘Fair’ in ‘all hail’ is foul, as I conceive.
11. Construe my speeches better, if you may.
12. ‘Then wish me better; I will give you leave.

13. We came to visit you, and purpose now lead you to our court; vouchsafe it then.
14. This field shall hold me; and so hold your

15. for God, nor I, delights in perjured men.
16. Rebuke me not for that which you pro-

17. ‘the virtue of your eye must break my oath.
18. You nickname virtue; vice you should have spoke;
19. or virtue’s office never breaks men’s truth.

20. w by my maiden honour, yet as pure is the unsullied lily, I protest,

21. world of torments though I should endure,
    would not yield to your house’s guest;
22. much I hate a breaking cause to be heavenly oaths, vow’d with integrity,
23. O, you have lived in desolation here, seen unvisited, much to our shame.

24. ‘Not so, my lord; it is not so, I swear;
Ve have had pastimes here and pleasant game:

25. ness of Russians left us but of late.
26. ing. How, madam! Russians!

27. ‘ren. Ay, in truth, my lord;
28. gallants, full of courtship and of state.
29. Madam, speak true. It is not so, my

30. lord: lady, to the manner of the days, courtesy gives undeserving praise.
31. four indeed confronted were with four
    Russian habit: here they stand an hour,
    I talk’d apace; and in that hour, my lord,
    did not bless us with one happy word.
32. are not call them fools; but thus I think, en they are thirsty, fools would fain have

33. drink.
34. This jest is dry to me. Fair gentle sweet,
35. it makes wise things foolish: when we

36. h eyes best seeing, heaven’s fiery eye, light we lose light: your capacity
37. that nature that to your huge store se things seem foolish and rich things but poor.
38. This proves you wise and rich, for in my

39. I am a fool, and full of poverty.
40. But that you take what doth to you belong,
41. ere a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
42. O, I am yours, and all that I possess!
43. All the fool mine?
44. I cannot give you less.
45. Which of the wizards was it that you

46. Where? when? what wizard? why demand you this?
47. There, then, that wizard; that superfluous case

48. t bid the worse and show’d the better face.
49. We are described; they’ll mock us now downright.
50. Let us confess and turn it to a jest.
51. Amazed, my lord? why looks your high-

52. ’s. Help, hold his brows! he’ll swoon!
    Why look you pale?
53. Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.
54. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.

55. Can any face of brass hold longer out?
56. Here stand I: lady, dart thy skill at me;
    Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout;
57. Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;

58. Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will wish thee never more to dance, 400
Nor never more in Russian habit wait.
O, never will I trust to speeches penn’d,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy’s tongue,
Nor never come in vizard to my friend,
Nor woe in rhyme, like a blind harper’s song!

59. Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
    Three-plied hyperboles, spruce affection,
    Figures pedantical; these summer-flys,
    Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:

60. I do forswear them; and I here protest, 410
    By this white glove,—how white the hand,
    God knows!—
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express’d
    In russet yea’s and honest kersey noes:
And, to begin, wench,—so God help me, la!—
    My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.

61. Sans sans, I pray you.
62. Yet I have a trick
    Of the old rage: bear with me, I am sick;
    I’ll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see:
    Write, ‘Lord have mercy on us’ on those three;
    They are infected; in their hearts it lies; 420
    They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes:
    These lords are visited; you are not free,
    For the Lord’s tokens on you do I see.

63. No, they are free that gave these tokens to us.
64. Our states are forfeit: seek not to undo us.
65. It is not so; for how can this be true,
    That you stand forfeit, being those that sue?

66. Peace! for I will not have to do with you.
67. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
68. Speak for yourselves; my wit is at an end.

69. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
    Some fair excuse.

70. The fairest is confession.
    Were not you here but even now disguised?
71. Madam, I was.
    And were you well advised?
72. I was, fair madam.
    When you then were here,
    What did you whisper in your lady’s ear?
    That more than all the world I did respect her.

73. When she shall challenge this, you will reject her.
    Upon mine honour, no.

74. Peace, peace! forbear:
    Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.
    Despise me, when I break this oath of

75. mine.
Love's Labour's Lost

[Act 4, Scene 5]

Prin. I will; and therefore keep it. Rosaline, What did the Russian whisper in your ear? Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear As precious eyesight, and did value me Above this world; adding thereto moreover That he would wed me, or else die my lover. Prin. God give thee joy of him! the noble lord Most honourably doth uphold his word. King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my truth, I never swore this lady such an oath. Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it plain, You gave me this: but take it, sir, again. King. My faith and this the princess I did give: I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve. Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear; And Lord Biron, I thank you, is my dear. What, will you have me, or your pearl again? Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twain. I see the trick on't; here was a consent, Knowing aforehand of our merriment, To dash it like a Christmas comedy: Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight zany, Some mumble-news, some trencher-knight, some Dick. That smiles his cheek in years and knows the trick To make my lady laugh when she's disposed, Told our intents before; which once disclosed, The ladies did change favours: and then we, Following the signs, woud but the sign of she. Now, to our perjury to add more terror, We are again forsworn, in will and error. Much upon this it is: and might not you Forestall our sport, to make us thus untrue? Do not you know my lady's foot by the squier, And laugh upon the apple of her eye? And stand between her back, sir, and the fire, Holding a trencher, jesting merrily? You put our page out: go, you are allow'd; Die when you will, a smack shall be your shroud. You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye Wounds like a leaden sword. Biron. Full merrily Hath this brave manage, this career, been run. Biron. Lo, he is tilting straight! Peace! I have done. Enter Costard.

Welcome, pure wit! thou parst a fair fray. Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know Whether the three Worthies shall come in or no. Biron. What, are there but three? Cost. No, sir; but it is vara fine, For every one pursents three. Biron. And three times thrice is nine. Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope it is not so. You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know: I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,— Biron. Is not nine. Cost. Under correction, sir, we know where until it doth amount. Biron. By Jove, I always took three thrice for nine. Cost. O Lord, sir, it were pity you should your living by reckoning, sir. Biron. How much is it? Cost. O Lord, sir, the parties themselves, actors, sir, will show whereunto it doth amonst for mine own part, I am, as they say, but perfect one man in one poor man, Pompion Great, sir. Biron. Art thou one of the Worthies? Cost. It pleased them to think me worthy Pompiion the Great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worth, but I am to stay for him. Biron. Go, bid them prepare. Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care. [Exit Costard.]

King. Biron, they will shame us: let the approach. Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord: a 'tis some policy To have one soaw worse than the king's and company. King. I say they shall not come. Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'ern you now: That sport best pleases that doth least know how! Where zeal strives to content, and the content Dies, the zeal of that which it presents: Their form confounded makes most form in mirth. When great things labouring perish in their birth Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expen of thy royal sweet breath as will utter a bra of words. [Converses apart with the King, and delivers him a paper.]

Arm. That is all one, my fair, sweet, homonarch; for, I protest, the schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical; too too vain, too too vain, but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna de guer. I wish you the peace of mind, my royal couplement! [Exit King. Here is like to be a good presence of the Worthies. He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompey the Great; the parish curate, Alexander; Armado's page, Hercules; the pedlar, Judas Maccabeaus: And if these four Worthies in their first shew thrive, These four will change habits, and present the other five. Biron. There is five in the first show. King. You are deceived: 'tis not so. Biron. The pedlar, the bragart, the hedge- priest, the fool and the boy:—] Abate throw at novum, and the whole wor Cannot pick out five such, take each one his vein.
Enter Costard, for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am,—

Boyet. You lie, you are not he. 559

Cost. I Pompey am,—

Boyet. With libbard’s head on knee.

Biron. Well said, old mocker: I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost. I Pompey am, Pompey surnamed the Big.—

Dum. The Great.

Cost. It is, ‘Great,’ sir:—

Pompey surnamed the Great;
That oft in field, with targe and shield, did make my foe to sweat;
And travelling along this coast, here I am
come by chance,
And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet luss of France.
your ladyship would say, ‘Thanks, Pompey,’
I had done.

Prin. Great thanks, great Pompey. 560

Cost. ’Tis not so much worth; but I hope I scarfet: I made a little fault in ‘Great.’

Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves e best Worthy.

Enter Sir Nathaniel, for Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I lived, I was the world’s commander;
y east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:
yscutcheon plain declares that I am Alisander,— Boyet. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron. Your nose smells ‘no’ in this, most tender-smelling knight.

Prin. The conqueror is dismay’d. Proceed, good Alexander. 570

Nath. When in the world I lived, I was the world’s commander,—

Boyet. Most true, ’tis right; you were so, Alisander.

Biron. Pompey the Great,—

Cost. Your servant, and Costard.

Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away lisander.

Cost. [To Sir Nath.] O, sir, you have overrowned Alisander the conqueror! You will be rapted out of the painted cloth for this: your on, that holds his poll-axe sitting on a close-ool, will be given to Ajax: he will be the ninth orthy. A conqueror, and afraid to speak! run way for shame, Alisander. [Nath. retires.]

here, an’t shall please you; a foolish mild man;
a honest man, look you, and soon dashed. He a marvellous good neighbour, faith, and a very ood bowler: but, for Alisander,—alas, you see ow, a little o’erparted. But there are Wor-ies a-coming will speak their mind in some ther sort.

Prin. Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter Holofernes, for Judas; and Moth, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this imp,

Whose club kill’d Cerberus, that three-headed canis;
And when he was a babe, a child, a shrimp,
Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus.
Quomiam he seemeth in minority,
Ergo I come with this apology.
Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish. [Moth retires.

Judas I am,—

Dum. A Judas! 600

Dum. Judas Maccabæus clipt is plain Judas.

Biron. A kissing traitor. How art thou proved Judas?

Hol. Judas I am,—

Dum. The more shame for you, Judas.

Hol. What mean you, sir?

Boyet. To make Judas hang himself.

Hol. Begin, sir; you are my elder.

Biron. Well followed: Judas was hanged on an elder.

Hol. I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron. Because the hath no face.

Hol. What is this?

Boyet. A citron-head.

Dum. The head of a bodkin.

Biron. A Death’s face in a ring.

Long. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.

Boyet. The pommel of Caesar’s falchion.

Dum. The carved-bone face on a flask.

Biron. Saint George’s half-cheek in a brooch.

Dum. Ay, and in a brooch of lead. 621

Biron. Ay, and worn in the cap of a toothdrawer.

And now forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol. You have put me out of countenance.

Biron. False; we have given thee faces.

Hol. But you have out-faced them all.

Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.

Boyet. Therefore, as he is an ass, let him go.
And so adieu, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay?—

Dum. For the latter end of his name. 630

Biron. For the ass to the Jude; give it him:—
Jud-as, away!

Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boyet. A light for Monsieur Judas! it grows dark, he may stumble. [Hol. retires.

Prin. Alas, poor Maccabæus, how hath he been baited!

Enter Armado, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me,
I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Troyan in respect of
this. 640

Boyet. But is this Hector?

King. I think Hector was not so clean-timbered.

Long. His leg is too big for Hector’s.

Dum. More calf, certain.

Boyet. No; he is best indue in the small.

Biron. This cannot be Hector.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

[Act]

Dum. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.
Arm. The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty, Gave Hector a gift,—
Dum. A gilt nutmeg.
Biron. A lemon.
Long. Stuck with cloves.
Dum. No, cloven.
Arm. Peace! The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,
Gave Hector a gift, the heir of Ilion;
A man so breathed, that certain he would fight:
Yea,
From morn till night, out of his pavilion. 660
I am that flower,—
Dum. That mirth.
Long. That column.
Arm. Sweet Lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.
Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.
Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.
Arm. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten;
sweet chucks, beat not the bones of the buried:
When he breathed, he was a man. But I will forward with my device. [To the Princess] Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of hearing. 670
Prin. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.
Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.
Boyet. [Aside to Dum.] Loves her by the foot.
Dum. [Aside to Boyet] He may not by the yard.
Arm. This Hector far surmounted Hannibal,—
Cost. The party is gone, fellow Hector, she is gone; she is two months on her way.
Arm. What meanest thou? 680
Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan,
The poor wench is cast away: she's quick;
The child brares in her belly already: 'tis yours.
Arm. Dost thou infamize me among potentates? thou shalt die.
Cost. Then shall Hector be whipped for Jaquenetta that is quick by him and hanged for Pompey that is dead by him.
Dum. Most rare Pompey!
Boyet. Renowned Pompey! 690
Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the Huge!
Dum. Hector trembles.
Biron. Pompey is moved. More Ates, more Ates! stir them on! stir them on! 700
Dum. Hector will challenge him.
Biron. Ay, if a' have no more man's blood in's belly than will sup a flea.
Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.
Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man: I'll slash; I'll do it by the sword. I beseech you, let me borrow my arms again.
Dum. Room for the incensed Worthies!
Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.
Dum. Most resolute Pompey!
Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower. Do you not see Pompey is uncasing for the combat? What mean you? You will lose your steps as a child, skipping and vain.
Arm. Gentlemen and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt. 711
Dum. You may not deny it: Pompey has made the challenge.
Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
Biron. What reason have you for't?
Arm. This the naked truth of it is, I have shirt; I go woolward for penance.
Boyet. True, and it was enjoined him Rome for want of linen: since when, I'll sworn, he wore none but a dishcloth of Jaquenetta's, and that a' wears next his heart for favour.

Enter Mercade.

Mer. God save you, madam!
Prin. Welcome, Mercade;
But that thou interrupt'st our merriment.
Mer. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—
Prin. Dead, for my life!
Mer. Even so; my tale is told.
Biron. Worthies, away! the scene begins cloud.
Arm. For mine own part, I breathe from breath. I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right my self like a soldier. [Exeunt Worthies.
King. How fares your majesty?
Prin. Boyet, prepare; I will away to-night.
King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.
Prin. Prepare, I say. I thank you, gracious lords;
For all your fair endeavours; and entreat,
Out of a new-sol'd soul, that you vouchsafe
In your rich wisdom to excuse or hide
The liberal opposition of our spirits,
If over-boldly we haveborne ourselves
In the converse of breath: your gentleness
Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord!
A heavy heart bears not a nimble tongue:
Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks
For my great suit so easily obtained.

King. ¶The extreme parts of time extremel forms
All causes to the purpose of his speed,
And often at his very loose decisions
The laborious long process could not arbitrate:
And though the mourning brow of progeny
Forbid the smiling courtesy of love
The holy suit which pain it would convince,
Yet, since love's argument was first on foot,
Let not the cloud of sorrow justle it
From what it purposed; since, to wait friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome-profitable
As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not: my griefs are double.

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;
And by these badges understand the king.
For all your fairs have we neglected time,
Play'd foul play with our oaths: your beauty,
Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our humours
Even to the opposed end of our intents:
And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—
As love is full of unbefitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping and vain,
Form'd by the eye and therefore, like the eye,
Full of strange shapes, of habits and of forms,
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

PRIN. We have received your letters full of love;
our favours, the ambassadors of love;
and, in our maiden council, rated them,
A courtship, pleasant jest and courtesy.
Our letters, madam, show’d much more than jest.

DUM. Our letters, madam, show’d much more than jest.

LOVE’S LABOUR’S LOST.

PRIN. A time, methinks, too short
To make a world-without-end bargain in.
To no, my lord, your grace is perjur’d much,
All of dear guiltiness; and therefore this:
For my love, as there is no such cause;
Some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
Here stay until the twelve celestial signs
Fave brought about the annual reckoning.
If this austere insensible life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
Frost and fasts, hard lodging and thin weeds
Not the gaudy blossoms of your love,
But that it bear this trial and last long;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Some challenge me, challenge me by these Darts,
And, by this virgin palm now kissing thine,
Will be thine; and till that instant shut
My woeful self up in a mourning house,
Raining the tears of remembrance
For the remembrance of my father’s death.
If this thou do deny, let us part hands,
Neither intitled in the other’s heart.

KING. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
To flatter up these powers of mine with rest,
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye!
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

BIRON. And what to me, my love? and what to me?

RES. You must be purged too, your sins are rack’d,
You are attainted with faults and perjury;
Therefore if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But in the weary beds of people sick.

DUM. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

A wife?

KATH. A beard, fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

DUM. O, shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?

KATH. Not so, my lord; a twelvemonth and a day
I’ll mark no words that smooth-faced wooers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come;
Then, if I have much love, I’ll give you some.

DUM. I’ll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

KATH. Yetswear not, lest ye be forsworn again.

LONG. What says Maria?

MAR. At the twelvemonth’s end
I’ll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

LONG. I’ll stay with patience; but the time is long.

MAR. The liker you; few taller are so young.

BIRON. Studies my lady? mistress, look on me;
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there?
Impose some service on me for thy love.

RES. Oft have I heard of you, my Lord Biron,
Before I saw you; and the world’s large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks,
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,
Which you on all estates will execute
That lie within the mercy of your wit.

To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And therewithal to win me, if you please,
Without which I am not to be won,
You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day
Visit the speechless sick and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

BIRON. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible:
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

RES. Why, that’s the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools:
A jest’s prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue.
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Deaf’d with the clamours of their own dear groans,
Will hear your idle scorn, continue then,
And I will have you and that fault withal;
But if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

BIRON. A twelvemonth! well; befall what will befal.

I’ll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.

PRIN. [To the King] Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.
KING. No, madam; we will bring you on your way.

BIRON. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies’ courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.

KING. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day,
And then ’twill end.

BIRON. That’s too long for a play.
Re-enter Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—

Prin. Was not that Hector? 390

Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave. I am a votary; I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? It should have followed in the end of our show.

King. Call them forth quickly; we will do so.

Re-enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and others.

This side is Hiems, Winter, this Ver, the Spring; the one maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

The Song.

Spring.

When daisies pied and violets blue
And lady-smocks all silver-white
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,
Cuckoo;
Cuckoo, cuckoo: O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and daws,
And maidsens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,
Cuckoo;
Cuckoo, cuckoo: O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

Winter.

When icicles hang by the wall
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail
And Tom bears logs into the hall
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit;
Tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

When all aloud the wind doth blow
And coughing drowns the parson's saw
And birds sit brooding in the snow
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit;
Tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You that way: we this way. [Exeunt.]

Scene: Athens, and a wood near it.

ACT I.

Scene I. Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

Th. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour raws on apace; four happy days bring in other moon: but, O, methinks, how slow

his old moon wanes! she lingers my desires,

like to a step-dame or a dowager

ong withering out a young man's revenue.

Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;

our nights will quickly dream away the time;

and then the moon, like to a silver bow

ebent in heaven, shall behold the night

four solemnities.

Th. Go, Philostrate,

ir up the Athenian youth to merriments;

wake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth;

urn melancholy forth to funerals;

he pale companion is not for our pomp.

[Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta, I woo'd thee with my sword,

ud won thy love, doing thee injuries;

it I will wed thee in another key,

th pomp, with triumph and with revelling.

Enter Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!

Th. Thanks, good Egeus: what's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint again my child, my daughter Hermia.

and forth. Lysander: and, my gracious duke,

his man hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child:

hou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes

And interchanged love-tokens with my child:

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung

With feigning voice verses of feigning love,

And stolen with his fancy

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits,

Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetsmells, messengers

Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth:

With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughter's

heart,

Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,

To stubborn harshness: and, my gracious duke,

Be it so she will not here before your grace

Consent to marry with Demetrius,

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens,

As she is mine, I may dispose of her:

Which shall be either to this gentleman

Or to her death, according to our law

Immediately provided in that case.

Th. What say you, Hermia? be advised,

fair maid:

To you your father should be as a god;

One that composed your beauties, yea, and one

To whom you are but as a form in wax

By him imprinted and within his power

To leave the figure or disfigure it.

Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

Th. In himself he is;

But in this kind, wanting your father's voice,

The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

Th. Rather your eyes must with his judgement look.

Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me.

I know not by what power I am made bold,

Nor how it may concern my modesty,

In such a presence here to plead my thoughts;

But I beseech your grace that I may know

The worst that may befall me in this case,

If I refuse to wed Demetrius.
The.  Either to die the death or to abjure
For ever the society of men.
Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.
Thrice-blessed they that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage;
But earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that which withering on the virgin thorn
Grows, lives and dies in single blessedness.
Her.  So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.
The.  Take time to pause; and, by the next new moon—
The sealing-day betwixt my love and me,
For everlasting bond of fellowship—
Upon that day either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest
For aye austerity and single life.
Dem.  Relent, sweet Hermia: and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right.
Lys.  You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.
Ege.  Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my
love,
And what is mine my love shall render him.
And she is mine, and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.
Lys.  I, am my lord, as well derived as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his; too
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
If not with vantage, as Demetrius';
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia:
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this spotted and inconstant man.
The.  I must confess that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus; you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up—
Which by no means we may extemate—
To death, or to a vow of single life.
Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love?
Demetrius and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.
Ege.  With duty and desire we follow you.
[Exeunt all but Lysander and Hermia.

Lys.  How now, my love! why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the roses there do fade so fast?
Her.  Belike for want of rain, which I could Betemn them from the tempest of my eyes.
Lys.  Ay me! for aught that I could ever rea
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood,
Her.  O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to love
Lys.  Or else misguid'd in respect of years,
Her.  O spite! too old to be engaged to young
Lys.  Or else it stood upon the choice of friends;
Her.  O hell! to choose love by another's eye
Lys.  Or, if there were a sympathy in choice
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the collid'd night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth
And ere a man hath power to say 'Behold!'
The jaws of darkness do devour it up,
So quick bright things come to confusion.
Lys.  If then true lovers have seen ever cross,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross,
As due to love as thoughts and dreams and sighs,
Wishes and tears, poor fancy's followers.
Lys.  A good persuasion: therefore, hear me,
Hermia.
I have a widow aunt, a dowager
Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote seven league
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us. If thou lov'st me then,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night:
And in the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.
Her.  My Lysander! My good Lysander!
I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls and prosperous loves
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage quee
When the false Troyan under sail was seen,
By all the vows that ever men have broke
In number more than ever women spoke,
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.
Lys.  Keep promise, love. Look, here come Helena.

Enter Helena.
Her.  God speed fair Helena! whither away?
Hel.  Call me you fair? that fair again unsay.
Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair!
Your eyes are lode-stars; and your tongue's sweet
air
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear,
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Sickness is catching: O, were favour so,
Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go;
My ear should catch your voice, my eye your ey

Scene I. A Midsummer-Night's Dream.

[Exeunt all but Demetrius and Lysander.]

Demetrius. Well, Lysander, what thinkst thou of my girl?
Lysander. I think she is the fairest that ever I beheld, Demetrius.

Scene II. Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?
Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the script.
Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and the duchess, on his wedding-day at night.
Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on, then read the names of the actors, and so grow to a point.

Quin. Marry, our play is, The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.

Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms, I will condole in some measure. To the rest: yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Pyramus rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split.

Quin. Read it, then. It is, The raging rocks And shivering shocks Shall break the locks Of prison gates; And Phibbus' car Shall shine from far And make and mar The tendril Fates.

This was lofty! Now name the rest of the players. This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling.

Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.
Flu. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. Flute, you must take Thisby on you.
Flu. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?

Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.
Flu. Nay, faith, let not me play a woman; I have a beard coming.

Quin. That's all one: you shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.
Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too, I'll speak in a monstrous little voice, 'Thisane, Thisane;' 'Ah Pyramus, my lover dear! thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!' and much more.

Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus: and, Flute, you Thisby.

Bot. Well, proceeded.

Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.

Flu. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother. Tom Snout, the tinker.

Flu. Here, Peter Quince.

Snout. You, Pyramus' father: myself, Thisby's
A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

ACT I.

Enter, from opposite sides, a Fairy, and Puck.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale,

Thorough bush, thorough brier,

Over park, over pale,

Thorough flood, thorough fire,

I do wander every where,

Swifter than the moon's sphere;

And I serve the fairy queen,

To dew her orbs upon the green.

The cowslips, sages, scabious, know

In their gold coats spots you see;

Those be rubies, fairy favours,

In those freckles live their savours:

I must go seek some dewdrops here

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

 Farewell, thou lob of spirits; I'll be gone:

Our quean and all our elves come here anon.

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to night:

Take heed the queen come not within his sight

For Oberon is passing fell and wrath,

Because that she as her attendant hath

A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king;

She never had so sweet a changeling;

And jealous Oberon would have the child

Knight of his train, to trace the forests wild;

But she performeth withholds the loved boy,

Crows him with flowers and makes him all his joy,

And now they never meet in grove or green,

By fountain clear, or spangled starlight sheen,

But they do square, that all their elves for fear

Creep into acorn-cups and hide them there.

Fai. Either I mistake thy shape and make it quite,

Or else ye are that shrewd and knavish sprite

Call'd Robin Goodfellow: I'll eat you he:

This is the time the maidens of the villagery,

Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the corn

And bootless make the breathless housewife crouch,

And sometime make the drink to bear no harm,

Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm.

Those that Hobgoblin call ye and sweet Puck

You do their work, and they shall have good luck

Are ye not F? I think not.

Puck. Thou speak'st aright;

I am that merry wanderer of the night.

I jest to Oberon and make him smile

When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,

Neighing in likeness of a filly foal;

And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted crab,

And when she drinks, against her lips I bob

And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale.

The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,

Sometimes for three-foot stool mistaketh me;

Then slip I from her bum, down topples she;

And both her 'sowder', her 'pail', her 'foul',

And then the whole quire hold their hips and laugh,

And waxen in their mirth and naze and swear

A merrier hour was never wasted there.

But, room, fairy! here comes Oberon.

Fai. And here my mistress. Would that he were gone!

Enter, from one side, OBERON, with his train from the other, TITANIA, with hers.

Obe. Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania. (To Titania. What, jealous Oberon! Fairies, sir, hence:

I have forsworn his bed and company.

Obe. Tarry, rash wanton: am not I thy lord?

Tit. Then I must be thy lady; but I know When thou hast stolen away from fairy land,

And in the shape of Corin sat all day,

Playing on pipes of corn and versing love To amorous Phillida. Why art thou here, Come from the farthest steps of India? But that, forsooth, the bouncing Amazon, Thy buskin'd mistress and your warrior love, To Theseus must be wedded, and you come To give their bed joy and prosperity.
Tita. Perchance till after Theseus’ wedding-day,
If you will patiently dance in our round
And see our moonlight revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.
Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.
Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.
[Exit Titania with her train.
Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove
Till I torment thee for this injury.
My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou rememberest
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin’s back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath
That the rude sea grew civil at her song
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid’s music.
Puck. I remember.
Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not,
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm’d: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throne by the west,
And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts; 150
But I might see young Cupid’s fiery shaft
Quench’d in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial vortices passed over,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark’d I where the bolt of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love’s wound,
And maidsens call it love-in-idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew’d thee once:
The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid 170
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.
Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again
Ere the leviathan can swim a league.
Puck. I’ll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes. [Exit.
Obe. Having once this juice,
I’ll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes.
The next thing then she waking looks upon,
Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love;
And ere I take this charm from off her sight,
As I can take it with another herb,
I’ll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible;
And I will overhear their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.
Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander and fair Hermia?
The one I’ll slay, the other slayeth me. 190
Thou told’st me they were stolen unto this wood;
And here am I, and woe within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more.
Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted admant;
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.
Act II

Scene II. Another part of the wood.

Enter Titania, with her train.

Tita. Come, now a roundel and a fairy song
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds,
Some war with rere-mice for their leathern wings
To make my small elves coats, and some keep
The clamorous owl that nightly hoots and wond'rs
At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices and let me rest.

The Fairies sing.

You spotted snakes with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blind-worms, do no wrong,
Come not near our fairy queen.
Philomel, with melody
Sing in our sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby, lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harm,
Nor spell nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh:
So, good night, with lullaby.
Weaving spiders, come not here;
Hence, you long-leg'd spinners, hence!
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm nor snail, do no offence.
Philomel, with melody, &c.

A Fairy. Hence, away! now all is well:
One afoot stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Fairies. Titania sleeps.

Enter Oberon, and squeezes the flower on Titania's eyelids.

Obe. What thou seest when thou dost wake,
Do it for thy true-love take,
Love and languish for his sake:
Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wakest, it is thy dear:
Wake when some vile thing is near.

[Exit.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood:
And to speak truth, I have forgot our way:
We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
No, no, I am as ugly as a bear;
For beasts that meet me run away for fear:
Therefore no marvel though Demetrius
Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia's spherie eye?
But who is here? Lysander! on the ground! 100
Dead! or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.
Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

Lys. [Awaking] And through fire I will for thy sweet sake.

Transparent Helena! Nature shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.
Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.
What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
Yet Hermia still loves you: then be content. 120

Lys. Content with Hermia! No; I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
Not Hermia but Helena I love:
Who will not change a raven for a dove?
The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says you are the worthier maid:

Things growing are not ripe until their season:
So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;
And touching now the point of human skill,
Reason becomes the marshal to my will:
And leads me to your eyes, where I o'erslook
Love's stories written in love's richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?
When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?
Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man,
That I did never, no, nor never can,
Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
But you must flout my insufficiency?
Good truth, you do me wrong, good sooth, you do,
In such disdainful manner me to woo.

But fare you well: perfurce I must confess
I thought you lord of more true gentleness.
O, that a lady, of one man refused,
Should of another therefore be abused! [Exit.

Lys. She sees not Hermia. Hermia, sleep thou there?
And never mayst thou come Lysander near!
For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings,
Or as the heresies that men do leave
Are hated most of those they did deceive. 140
So thou, my surfeit and my heresy,
Of all be hated, but the most of me!
And, all my powers, address your love and might
To honour Helen and to be her knight! [Exit.

Her. [Awaking] Help me, Lysander, help me! I do thy best
To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast!
Ay me, for pity! what a dream was here!
Lysander, look how I do quake with fear:
Metthought a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.

Lysander! what, removed? Lysander! lord!
What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?
Mute the compare with whips that love
Alack, where are you? speak, an if you hear;
Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.
No? then I well perceive you are not nigh:
Either death or you I'll find immediately. [Exit.
ACT III.

SCENE I. The wood. Titania lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Fat, pat; and here’s a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn-brake our tiring-house; and we will do it in action as we will do it before the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince,--

Quin. What sayest thou, bully Bottom?

Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

Snout. By’t lakin, a parlous fear.

Star. I believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit; I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords and that Pyramus is not killed indeed; and, for the more better assurance, tell them that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: this will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves to bring in—God shield us!—a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to’t.

Snout. Therefore another prologue must tell him not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion’s neck: and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same defect,—"Ladies,—or ‘Fair ladies,—I would wish you,—or ‘I would request you,—or ‘I would entreat you,—not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life; no, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are;’ and there indeed let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Snug the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things; that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for, you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Snout. Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then may you leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of Moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snout. You can never bring in a wall. What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present Wall and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some rough-cast about him, to signify wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come sit down, every mother’s son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake: and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What hempen home-spuns have we swaggering here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? &c
What, a play toward! 'I'll be an auditor;
An actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus, Thisby, stand forth.

Bot. Thisby, the flowers of odious savours sweet.—

Quin. Odours, odours.

Bot. — odours savours sweet:
So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear.
But hark, a voice! stay thou but here awhile,
And by and by I will to thee appear. [Exit.

Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e’er played here. [Exit. 90

Flu. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

Flu. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,
Of e’er the rose on triumphant brier,
Most brisky juvenile and eke most lovely Jew,
As true as truest horse that yet would never tire.

I’ll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny’s tomb.

Quin. ‘Ninus’ tomb,’ man: why, you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your part at once, cues and all.

Pyramus enter: your cue is past; it is, ‘never tire.’

Flu. O,—As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass’s head.

Bot. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine.

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted. Pray, masters! fly, masters! Help! [Exit Quince, Snug, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Puck. I’ll follow you, I’ll lead you about a round,
Through bog, through bush, through brave, through brier:

Sometime a horse I’ll be, sometime a hound,
A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. [Exit.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them to make me afeard.
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs
And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,
To have my love to bed and to arise;
And pluck the wings from painted butterflies
To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes:
Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

Pear. Hail, mortal!
Cob. Hail!
Moth. Hail!
Mus. Hail!
Bot. I cry your worships mercy, heartily: I beseech your worship's name.
Cob. Cobweb.
Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Peaseblossom.
Bot. I pray you, commend to Mistress Squash, your mother, and to Master Peasod, your father. Good Master Peaseblossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too. Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mus. Mustardseed.
Bot. Good Master Mustardseed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like excheif hath devoured many a gentleman of your house: I promise you your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire your more acquaintance, good Master Mustardseed. 201

Tita. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.

The moon methinks looks with a watery eye;
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.
Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. Another part of the wood.

Enter Oberon

Obe. I wonder if Titania be awakened?
Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.

How now, mad spirit!
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?
Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.

Near to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
A crew of patches, rude mechanicals,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play
Intended for great Theseus' nuptial-day.
The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented, in their sport
Forsook his scene and enter'd in a brake:
When I did him at this advantage take,
An ass's niple I fixed on his head:
Anon his Thisebe must be answered,
And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping fowler eye,
Or russet-pated coughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
Sever themselves and madly sweep the sky,
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly;
And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls;
He murder cries and help from Athens calls.
Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong,
Made senseless things begin to do them wrong:
For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch;
Some sleeves, some hats, fromyielders all things catch.
I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment, so it came to pass,
Titania waked and straightforwardly loved an ass.
Obs. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet catch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?
Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finish'd too,
And the Athenian woman by his side;
That, when he waked, of force she must be eyed.

Enter Hermia and Demetrius.
Obs. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.
Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man.
Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.
Her. Now I but chide; but I should use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day
As he to me: would he have stolen away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bored and that the moon
May through the centre creep and so displease
Her brother's noontide with the Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.
Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
Pierced through the heart with your stern cruelty:
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear, as yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.
Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?
Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.
Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou drivest me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him, then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O, once tell true, tell true, even for my sake!
Durst thou have look'd upon him when he wak'd,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Dem. You spend your passion on a misprised mood.
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for ought that I can tell.
Her. I pray thee, tell me then that he is well.
Dem. An if I could, what should I get therefor?
Her. A privilege never to see me more.
And from thy hatred presence part I so:

See me no more, whether he be dead or no.

Exit Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here therefore for a while I will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay.

Lies down and sleeps.
Obs. What hast thou done? thou hast mis taken quite
And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight
Of thy misprision must perf orce ensue
Some true love turn'd and not a false turn'd true.
Puck. Then fate o'er rules, that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.
Obs. About the word go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer,
With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear:
By some illusion see thou bring her here:
I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.
Puck. I go, I go; look how I go,
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow.

Obs. Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye.
When his love he doth esp'y,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wakest, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.
Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand;
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's fee.
Shall we their fond pageant see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!

Obs. Stand aside: the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.
Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me
That befall preposterously.

Enter Lysander and Helena.
Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears:
Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?
Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!
These vows are Hermia's: will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:
Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.
Lys. I had no judgement when to her I swore.
Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.
Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.
Dem. [Awaking] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!
O what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?
Cystal is muddy. O, how rife in show
By lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
Hat pure congealed white, high Taurus' snow,
And with the eastern wind, turns to a crow
Hen thou hold'st up thy hand: O, let me kiss
His princess of pure white, this seal of bliss!
Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
O set against me for your errament:
You were civil and knew courtesy,
Would not do me thus much injury.
An you not hate me, as I know you do,
If you must join in souls to mock me too?
'Tould you men, as men you are in show,
Would not use a gentle lady so?
O vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,
I do not sure you hate me with your hearts.
Both are rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both rivals, to mock Helen:
Trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
O conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With thine derision! none of noble sort
Could so offend a virgin and extort
Poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.
Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius; be not so;
Or you love Hermia; this you know I know:
I, here, with all good will, with all my heart,
Hermia's love I yield you up my part;
And yours of Helena to me bequeath,
If I do love and will do till my death.
Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.
Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will none:
'T was I loved her, all that love is gone.
She heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn'd,
And now to Helen is it home return'd,
Here to remain.
Lys. Helen, it is not so.
Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Ext, to thy peril, thou aby it dear,
Ook, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Re-enter Hermia.
Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
He ear more quick of apprehension makes;
Herein it doth impair the seeing sense,
Pays the hearing double recompense.
Hou art not by mine eye, Lysander found;
The ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
Ut why unkindly didst thou leave me so?
Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?
Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?
Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,
Air Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all you fiery oes and eyes of light.
Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know,
He hate I bear thee made me leave thee so?
Hou. You speak not as you think: It cannot be.
Lys. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!
Now I perceive they have conjoin'd all three
To fashion this false sport, in spite of me.
Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspired, have you with these contrived
To bait me with this foul derision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shared,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time
For parting us—O, is it all forgot?
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence?
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition;
Two lovely berries moulded on one stem;
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Due but to one and crowned with one crest.
And will you rent our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feel the injury.
Her. I am amazed at your passionate words.
I scorn you not: it seems that you scorn me.
Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other love, Demetrius,
Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,
To call me goddess, nymph, divine and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefor doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection,
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate,
But miserable most, to love unloved?
This you should pity rather than despise.
Her. I understand not what you mean by this.
Hel. Ay, do, persevere, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back;
Wink each at other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carri'd, shall be chronicled.
If you have any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument,
But fare ye well: 'tis partly my own fault;
Which death or absence soon shall remedy.
Lys. Stay, gentle Helena; hear my excuse:
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!
Hel. O excellent!
Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.
Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.
Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers.
Helen, I love thee: by my life, I do:
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false that says I love thee not.
Dem. I say I love thee more than he can do.
Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.
Dem. Quick, come!
Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this?
Lys. Away, you Ethiop!
Dem. No, no; he'll...

Seem to break loose; take on as you would follow,
But yet come not: you are a tame man, go!
Lys. Hang off, thou cat, thou burr! vile thing, let loose, 260
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent!
Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change is this?
Sweet love,—
Lys. Thy love! out, tawny Tartar, out! Out, loathed medicine! hated potion, hence!
Her. Do you not jest?
Hel. Yes, sooth; and so do you.
Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.
Dem. I would I had your bond, for I perceive
A weak bond holds you: I'll not trust your word.
Lys. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?
Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so. 270
Her. What, can you do me greater harm than hate?
Hate me therefore? O me! what news, my love!
Am not I Hermia? are not you Lysander?
I am as fair now as I was erewhile.
Since night you loved me; yet since night you left me:
Why, then you left me—O, the gods forbid!—
In earnest, shall I say?
Hel. Ay, by my life; And never did desire to see thee more.
Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt;
Be certain, nothing truer; 'tis no jest 280
That I do hate thee and love Helena.
Her. O me! you juggler! you canker-blossom!
You thief of love! what, have you come by night
And stolen my love's heart from him?
Hel. Fine, faith! Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear
Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?
Fie, fie! you counterfeit, you puppet, you!
Her. Puppet? why so? ay, that way goes the game.
Now I perceive that she hath made compare 290
Between our statures; she hath urged her height;
And with her personage, her tall personage,
Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him.
And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low?
How low am I, thou painted maypole? speak;
How low am I? I am not yet so low
But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.
Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me: I was never curst; 300
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. You perhaps may think,
Because she is something lower than myself,
That I can match her.
Hel. Lower! hark, again.
Her. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.
I exclaim did love you, Hermia,
Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you;
Save that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood. 310
He follow'd you; for love I follow'd him;

But he hath chid me hence and threaten'd me
To strike me, spur me, nay, to kill me too;
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly back.
And follow you no further: let me go:
You see how simple and how fond I am.
Her. Why, get you gone: who is't that hinder you?
Hel. A foolish heart, that I leave here behind
Her. What, with Lysander?
Hel. With Demetrius. 320
Lys. Be not afraid; she shall not harm the Helena.
Dem. No, sir, she shall not, though you take her part.
Hel. O, when she's angry, she is keen an shrewd!
She was a vixen when she went to school;
And though she be but little, she is fierce.
Her. 'Little' again! nothing but 'low' an 'little'!
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.
Hel. Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minims, of hindering knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn.
Dem. You are too officious 33
In her behalf that scorns your services.
Let her alone: speak not of Helena;
Take not her part; for, if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby it.
Lys. Now she holds me not;
Now follow, if thou darest, to try whose right,
Of thine or mine, is most in Helena.
Dem. Follow! nay, I'll go with thee, choose by jole. [Exeunt Lysander and Demetrius.
Her. You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you;
Nay, go not back.
Hel. I will not trust you, I, 34
Nor longer stay in your curt company.
Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit
Her. I am amazed, and know not what to say
The game.
Obz. This is thy negligence: still thou mistakest
Or else committ'st thy knaverys wilfully.
Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook
Did not you tell me I should know the? can
By the Athenian garment he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have 'pointed an Athenian's eyes;
And so far am I glad it so did sort
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.
Obz. Thou see'st these lovers seek a place to fight:
Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog as black as Achiron,
And lead these testy rivals so astray
As one come not within another's way.
Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong; 361
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And from each other look thou lead them thus,
Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep
With leaden legs and batte wings doth creep:
Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
Scene II.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

For if but once thou show me thy grey light,
I'll find Demetrius and revenge this spite. [Sleeps.

Re-enter Puck and Demetrius.

Puck. Ho, ho, ho! Coward, why comest thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou darest; for well I wot
Thou run'st before me, shifting every place,
And darest not stand, nor look me in the face.

Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here.

Dem. Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see:
Now, go thy way. Faintness constraineth me
To measure out my length on this cold bed.

By day's approach look to be visited. [Lies down and sleeps.

Re-enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night! O long and tedious night,
Abate thy hours! Shine comforts from the east,
That I may back to Athens by daylight.

From these that my poor company detest:
And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye,
Steal me awhile from mine own company.

[Lies down and sleeps.

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more;
Two of both kinds makes up four.

Here she comes, curst and sad:
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad.

Re-enter Hermia.

Herm. Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew and torn with briers,
I can no further crawl, no further go;
My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the break of day.
Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

[Lies down and sleeps.

Puck. On the ground
Sleep sound:
I'll apply
To your eye,
Gentle lover, remedy.
[Squeezing the juice on Lysander's eyes.

When thou wak'st,
Thou takest
True delight
In the sight
Of thy former lady's eye:
And the country proverb known,
That every man should take his own,
In your waking shall be shown:
Jack shall have Jill;
Nought shall go ill;
The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be well.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene I. The same. Lysander, Demetrius, Helena, and Hermia lying asleep.

Enter Titania and Bottom; Peaseblossom, Clown, Moth, Mustardseed, and other Fairies attending; Oberon behind unseen.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable cheek do coy,

400 Re-enter Lysander.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Puck. Here, villain; drawn and ready. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight.

Puck. Follow me, then, o plainer ground.

[Exit Lysander, as following the voice.

Re-enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander! speak again:
hou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
peak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars, elling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
and wilt not come? Come, recreant; come, thou child:
I' l whip thee with a rod; he is defiled hat draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea, art thou there?

Puck. Follow my voice: we will try no manhood here.

[Exit Lysander.

Lys. He goes before me and still dares me on:
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
He villain is much lighter-heeld than I:
follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
that fallen am I in dark uneven way,
and here will rest me. [Lies down.] Come,
- thou gentle day!
To bear him to my bower in fairy land.
And now I have the boy, I will undo
This hateful imperfection of her eyes:
And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain;
That, he awakening when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair
And think no more of this night's accidents
But as the fierce vexation of a dream.
But first I will release the fairy queen.
Be as thou wast wont to be;
See as thou wast wont to see;
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power.
Now, my Titania; wake you, my sweet queen.
Methought I was enamour'd of an ass.

Obe. There lies your love.

Tit. How came these things to pass?
O, how mine eyes do loathe his visage now!

Obe. Silence awhile. Robin, take off this head.
This is a magic call; and strong and dead
Than common sleep of all these five the sense.

Tit. Music, ho! music, such as charmeth sleep!

[Music, still.

Puck. Now, when thou wakest, with thine own fool's eyes peep.

Obe. Sound, music! Come, my queen, take hand in hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers lie.
Now thou and I are new in amity
And will to-morrow midnight solemnly
Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly
And bless it to all fair prosperity:
There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark:
I do hear the morning lark.

Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade:
We the globe can compass soon,
Swifter than the wandering moon.

Tit. Music, ho! my lord, and in our flight
Tell me how it came this night
That I sleeping here was found
With these mortals on the ground.

[Exeunt.

[Horns winded within.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and attendants.

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;
For now our observation is performed;
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds.
Uncouple in the western valley; let them go:
Dispatch, I say, and find the forester.

[Exit an Attendant.

We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hipp. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete they bade the bear
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves, 120
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry: I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
For in the temple, by and by, with us
These couples shall eternally be knit:
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purposed hunting shall be set aside. 180
Away with us to Athens; three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.
Come, Hippolitta.

[Exeunt The, Hif, Ege, and train.
Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.
Her. Methinks I see these things with parted eye,
When every thing seems double.
Hel. So methinks:
And I have found Demetrius like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.
Dem. Are you sure
That we are awake? It seems to me
That yet we sleep, we dream. Do not you think
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?
Her. Yea; and my father.
Hel. And Hippolitta.
Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.
Dem. Why, then, we are awake: let's follow
him;
And by the way let us recount our dreams.

[Exeunt.
Bot. [Awaking] When my cue comes, call me,
and I will answer: my next is, 'Most fair Pyra-mus.' Heigh-ho! Peter Quince! Flute, the bellow's-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! Star-veling! God's my life, stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream, past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was,—and methought
I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to touch, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death. 180

Scene II. Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?
Stor. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is transported.
Flu. If he come not, then the play is marred:
it goes not forward, doth it?
Quin. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens able to discharge Pyramus but he.
Flu. No, he hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens.
Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.
Flu. You must say 'paragon': a paramour is,
God bless us, a thing of naught.
Enter Snug.

Smg. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flu. O sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a day during his life; he could not have 'scaped sixpence a day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?

Quin. Bottom! O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what: for if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. 'I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.'

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you is, that the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together, good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case, let Thisby have clean linen; and let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath; and I do not doubt but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words: away! go, away! [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hipp. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of them.

The. More strange than true: I never may believe These antique fables, nor these fairy toys. Lovers and madmen have such seething brains, Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend More than cool reason ever comprehends. The lunatic, the lover and the poet Are of imagination all compact: One sees more devils than vast hell can hold, That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic, as Sesostris' beauty in a brow of Egypt: The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven: And as imagination bodies forth The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen Turns them to shapes and gives to airy nothing A local habitation and a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination, That it would but apprehend some joy, It comprehends some bringer of that joy; Or in the night, imagining some fear, How easy is a bush supposed a bear!

Hipp. But all the story of the night told over, And all their minds transfigured so together, More witnesseth than fancy's images And grows to something of great constancy; But, however, strange and admirable. Thee. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermione, and Helena.

Joy, gentle friends! joy and fresh days of love Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us. Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed!

Thee. Come now; what masques, what dances shall we have,

To wear away this long age of three hours Between our after-supper and bed-time?

Where is our usual manager of mirth?

What revels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Phil. Here, mighty Theseus.

Thee. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?

What masque? what music? How shall we rejoice?

Thee. The busy time, if not with some delight?

Phil. There is a brief how many sports are ripe:

Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper.]

Thee. [Reads] 'The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung By an Athenian eunuch to the harp.'

We'll none of that: that have I told my love, In glory of my kinsman Hercules.

[Reads] 'The riot of the tipsey Bacchanals, Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage,' That is an old device; and it was play'd When I from Thebes came last a conqueror. [Reads] 'The thrice three Muses mourning for the death Of Lernion, late deceased in baggary.' That is some satire, keen and critical, Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

[Reads] 'A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth.' Merry and tragical! tedious and brief!

That is, hot ice and wondrous strange snow. How shall we find the concord of this discord? Go, Phil. A play there is, my lord, some ten words long, Which is as brief as I have known a play: But by ten words, my lord, it is too long, Which makes it tedious; for in all the play There is not one word apt, one player fitted: And tragical, my noble lord, it is; For Pyramus therein doth kill himself. Which, when I saw rehearsed, I must confess, Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears The passion of loud laughter never shed.

Thee. What are they that do play it?

Phil. Hard-handed men that work in Athens here. Which never laboured in their minds till now, And now have told'd their unbreathed memories With this same play, against your nuptial. Thee. And we will hear it.

Phil. It is not for you: I have heard it over,
This beauteous lady Thisby is certain.
This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present
Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers sunder:
And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are content
To whisper. At the which let no man wonder.
This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
Presenteth Moonshine: for, if you will know,
By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn
To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo.
This grisly beast, which Lion hight by name, 140
The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,
Did scare away, or rather did affright;
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,
Which Lion vole with bloody mouth did stain.
Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain:
Whereat, with blade, with bloody blameful blade,
His dagger broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain 151
At large discourse, while here they do remain.

Enter Prologue, Thisbe, Lion, and Moonshine.

The. I wonder if the lion be to speak.
Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may,
When many asses do.
Wall. In this same interlude it doth befall
That I, one Snout by name, present a wall;
And such a wall, as I would have you think,
That had in it a crannied hole or chink,
Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,
Did whisper very secretly.
This loam, this rough-cast and this stone doth show
That I am that same wall; the truth is so:
And this the cranney is, right and sinister,
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.
Dem. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?

Enter Pyramus.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

Pyr. O grim-look'd night! O night with hue so black!
O night, which ever art when day is not!
O night, O night! alack, alack, alack,
I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!
And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall,
That stand'st between her father's ground and mine!
Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall,
Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine
eyne! 171
[Wall holds up his fingers.]
Thanks, courteous wall! Jove shield thee well for this!

But what see I? No Thisby do I see.
O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss!
Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me!

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.
Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. 'Deceiving me' is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now,
And I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall pat as I told you. Yonder she comes.

Enter Thisbe.

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,
For parting my fair Pyramus and me!
My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones,
Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.
Pyr. I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.
Thisby!

This. My love thou art, my love I think.
Pyr. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace;
And, like Limander, am I trusty still.
This. And I like Helen, till the Fates me kill.
Pyr. Not Shafalus to Procris was so true.
This. As Shafalus to Procris, I to you.
Pyr. O, kiss me through the hole of this vile wall!
This. Kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.
Pyr. Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?
This. Tide life, tide death, I come without delay. [Exeunt Pyramus and Thisbe.

Wall. Thus have I, Wall, my part discharged so;
And, being done, thus Wall away doth go. [Exit.

Thee. Now is the mural down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so wilful to hear without warning.

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.
Thee. The best in this kind are but shadows;
and the worst are no worse, if imagination amends them.

Hip. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.
Thee. If we imagine no worse of them than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear
The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor,
May now per chance both quake and tremble here,
When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.
Then know that I, one Snug the joiner, am
A lion-fell, nor else no lion's dam;
For, if I should as lion come in strife
Into this place, 'twere pity on my life.
Thee. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.
Thee. True; and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion; and the fox carries the goose.
Thee. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon present—

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.
Thee. He is no creature, and his horns are invisible within the circumference.

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon present;
Myself the man i' the moon do seem to be.
Thee. This is the greatest error of all the rest:
the man should be put into the lanthorn. How is it else the man i' the moon?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle; or, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hip. I am awearie of this moon: would he would change!
Thee. It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, Moon. Moon. All that I have to say, is, to tell you that the lanthorn is the moon; I, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lanthorn; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?

Lion. [Roaring] Oh— [Thisbe runs off.

Dem. Well roared, Lion.

Thee. Well run, Thisbe.

Hip. Well shone, Moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

The Lion shakes Thisbe's mantle, and exit.

Thee. Well moused, Lion.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;
I thank thee, Moon, for shining now so bright;
For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay, O spite! But mark, poor knight,
What dreadful dole is here! Eyes, do you see? How can it be?
O dainty duck! O dear! Thy mantle good, What, stain'd with blood! Approach, ye Furies fell! O Fates, come, come, Cut thread and thrum; Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!
Thee. This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.
Pyr. O wherefore, Nature, didst thou lions frame?
Since lion vile hath here deflower'd my dear: Which is—no, no—which was the fairest dame That lived, that loved, that liked, that look'd with cheer.
Scene 1.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Come, tears, confound; Out, sword, and wound The pant of Pyramus; Ay, that left pant, Where heart doth hop: [Stabs himself. Thus die I, thus, thus, thus. Now am I dead, Now am I fled; My soul is in the sky: Tongue, lose thy light: Moon, take thy flight: [Exit Moonshine. Now die, die, die, die, die. [Dies. Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one. Lys. Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing. Thee. With the help of a surgeon he might yet recover, and prove an ass. Hie. How chance Moonshine is gone before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover? Thee. She will find him by starlight. Here she comes; and her passion ends the play. Re-enter Thisbe. Hie. Methinks she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus; I hope she will be brief. Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better; he for a man, God warrant us; she for a woman, God bless us. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes. Dem. And thus she means, videlicet:— This. Asleep, my love? What, dead, my dove? O Pyramus, arise! Speak, speak. Quite dumb? Dead, dead? A tomb Must cover thy sweet eyes. These lily lips, This cherry nose, These yellow cowslip cheeks, Are gone, are gone: Lovers, make moan! His eyes were green as locks. O Sisters Three, Come, come to me, With hands as pale as milk; Lay them in gore, Since you have shore With shears his thread of silk. Tongue, not a word: Come, trusty sword; Come, blade, my breast imbure: [Stabs herself. And, farewell, friends; Thus Thysby ends: Adieu, adieu, adieu. [Dies. The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead. Dem. Ay, and Wall too. Bot. [Starting up] No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company? The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it had played Pyramus and hunged himself in Thisbe's garner, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But, come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone. [A dance. The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve: Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time. I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn. As much as we this night have overwatch'd. This palatable-play hath well beguiled The heavy gait of night. Sweet friends, to bed. A fortnight hold we this solemnity, In nightly revels and new jollity. [Exeunt. Enter Puck. Puck. Now the hungry lion roars, And the wolf behovels the moon; Whilst the heavy ploughman snores, All with weary task fordone. Now the wasted bands do glow, Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud, Puts the wretch that lies in woe In remembrance of a shroud. Now it is the time of night That the graves all gaping wide, Every one lets forth his sprite, In the church-way paths to glide: And we fairies, that do run By the triple Hecate's team, From the presence of the sun, Following darkness like a dream, Now are frolic: not a mouse Shall disturb this hallow'd house: I am sent with broom before, To sweep the dust behind the door. Enter Oberon and Titania with their train. Obe. Through the house give glimmering light, By the dead and drowsy fire: Every elf and fairy sprite Hop as light as bird from brier; And this dirty, after me, Sing, and dance it trippingly. Tita. First, rehearse your song by rote, To each word a warbling note: Hand in hand, with fairy grace, Will we sing, and bless this place. [Song and dance. Obe. Now, until the break of day, Through this house each fairy stray. To the best bride-bed will we, Which by us shall blessed be; And the issue there create Ever shall be fortunate. So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be; And the blots of Nature's hand Shall not in their issue stand; Never mole, hare lip, nor scar, Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity, Shall upon their children be. With this field-dew consecrate, Every fairy take his gilt; And each several chamber bless, Through this palace, with sweet peace; And the owner of it blest 12—2
Ever shall in safety rest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.]
Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumber'd here
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,

Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend:
And, as I am an honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long;
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.

[Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I. Venice. A street.

Enter Antonio, Salarino, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad:
It wearies me; you say it waries you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born,
I am to learn;
And such a want-wit sadness makes of me,
That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There, where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, 10
Or, as it were, the pageant of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curtsy to them, do them reverence,
As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Sala. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth,
The better part of my affections would
Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind,
Peering in maps for ports and piers and roads;
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt
Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind cooling my broth
Would blow me to an ague, when I thought
What harm a wind too great at sea might do.
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high-top lower than her ribs
To kiss her burial. Should I go to church
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all her spices on the stream,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks,
And, in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought
To think on this, and shall I lack the thought
That such a thing behanced would make me sad?
But tell not me; I know, Antonio,
Is sad to think upon his merchandise. 40

Ant. Believe me, no: I thank my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate
Upon the fortune of this present year:
Therefore my merchandise makes me not sad.

Salar. Why, then you are in love.

Ant. Fie, fie! Not in love neither? Then let us say you are sad,
Because you are not merry: and 'twere as easy
For you to laugh and leap and say you are merry,
Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Janus, 50
Nature hath framed strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And other of such vinegar aspect
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Salar. Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kinsman, Gratiano and Lorenzo. Fare ye well:
We leave you now with better company.

Salar. I would have stay'd till I had made you merry,
If worthier friends had not prevented me.

Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard.
I take it, your own business calls on you
And you embrace the occasion to depart.

Salar. Good morrow, my good lords.

Bass. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh? say, when?
You grow exceeding strange; must it be so?

Salar. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

Exeunt Salarino and Salanio.

Lor. My Lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio,
We two will leave you; but at dinner-time, 70
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Bass. I will not fail you.

Gra. You look not well, Signior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world:
They lose it that do buy it with much care:
Believe me, you are marvellously changed.

Ant. I hold the world but as the world,
Grat. A stage where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.

Gra. Let me play the fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come,
And let my liver rather heat with wine
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks—
There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond,
And do a wiffl stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,
As who should say 'I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips let no dog bark!'
O my Antonio, I do know of these Thieves that are therefore only a rascalise
For saying nothing, when I am very sure,
If they should speak, would almost damn those ears
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools.
I'll tell thee more of this another time:
But fish not, with this melancholy bait,
For this fool judgion, this opinion.
Come, good Lorenzo. Fare ye well awhile:
I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner-time:
I must be one of these same dumb wise men,
For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Gra. Well, keep me company but two years more,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.

Ant. Farewell: I'll grow a talker for this gear.

Gra. Thanks, I faith, for silence is only commendable
In a neat's tongue dried and a maid not vendible.

[Exeunt Gratiano and Lorenzo.]

Ant. Is that any thing now?

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them, they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well, tell me now what lady is the same
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promised to tell me of?

Bass. 'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,
How much I have disabled mine estate,
By something showing a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance:
Nor do I now make moon to be abridged
From such a noble rate; but my chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time something too prodigal
Hath left me gaged. To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money and in love,
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburden all my plots and purposes
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it;
And if it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour, be assured,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

But soon as in my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth, and by adventuring both
I oft found both: I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and, like a wiffl youth,
That which I owe is lost; but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the aim, or to find both
Or bring your latter hazard back again
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And out of doubt you do me now more wrong
In making question of my uttermost
Than if you had made waste of all I have:
You do not therefore only an archeologist
That in your knowledge may be by me done,
And I am prest unto it: therefore, speak.

Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left;
And she is fair and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages;
Her name is Portia, nothing undervalued.
To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia:
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors, and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont Colchos' strand,
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind pressages me such thrift,
That I should questionless be fortunate.

Ant. Thou know'st that all my fortunes are
At sea;
Neither have I money nor commodity
To raise a present sum: therefore go forth;
Try what my credit can in Venice do:
That shall be rack'd, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is, and I no question make
To have it of my trust or for my sake. [Exeunt.]

Scene II. Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is aweary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are; and yet, for aught I see, they are as sick that surfeit with too much as they that starve with nothing. It is no mean happiness therefore, to be seated in the mean: superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences and well pronounced.

Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree:
such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband. O me, the word 'choose!' I may neither choose whom I would nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father. Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous; and holy men at their death have good inspirations:
therefore the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver and lead;
whereof who chooses his meaning chooses you,
will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly but one who shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee, over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and,
according to my description, level at my affec-

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great approprigation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. I am much afraid my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Ner. Then there is the County Palatine.

Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say 'If you will not have me, choose:' he hears merry tales and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannersadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death'shead with a bone in his mouth than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, Monsieur Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker: but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's, a better bad habit of frowning than the Count Palatine; he is every man in no man; if a throste sing, he falls straight caping: he will fence with his own shadow:
if I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him, for if he love me to madness, I shall never require him.

Ner. What say you, then, to Falconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the court and swear that I have a poor pennypoorth in the English. He is a proper man's picture, but, alas, who can converse with a dumb-show? How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany and his behav-our every where.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman and swore he would pay him again when he was able: I think the Frenchman became his surety and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the Duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober, and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man, and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast: an the worst fall that ever fell, I hope I shall make shift to go without
him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept
him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket, for if the devil be within and that temptation without, I know he will choose it.
I will do any thing, Nerissa, ere I'll be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords: they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is, indeed, to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will. I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar and a soldier, that came hither in company of the Marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio; as I think, he was so called.

Ner. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a Serving-man.

How now! what news?

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the prince his master will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good a heart as I can bid the other four farewell,
I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me.

Como, Nerissa. Sirrah, go before.
Whilest we shut the gates upon one wooer, another knocks at the door. [Exeunt.
Scene III. Venice. A public place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Shy. Three thousand ducats; well.
Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.
Shy. For three months; well.
Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.
Shy. Antonio shall become bound; well.
Bass. May you stead me? will you please me? shall I know your answer?
Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months and Antonio bound.
Bass. Your answer to that.
Shy. Antonio is a good man.
Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
Shy. Oh, no, no, no, no; my meaning in saying he is a good man is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Yet his means are in assumption: he hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand, moreover, upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath, squandered abroad. But ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land-rats and water-rats, water-thieves and land-thieves, I mean pirates, and then there is the peril of waters, winds and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient. Three thousand ducats; I think I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.
Shy. I will be assured I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me. May I speak with Antonio?
Bass. If it please you to dine with us.
Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habitation which your prophet the Nazarite conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following, but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is Signior Antonio.
Shy. [Aside] How like a fawning publican he looks!
I hate him for he is a Christian,
But more for that in low simplicity
He lends out money gratis and brings down
The rate of usage here with us in Venice.
If I can catch him once upon the hip,
I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him.
He hates our sacred nation, and he rails,
Even there where merchants most do congregate.
On me, my bargains and my well-won thrifts,
Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe,
If I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?
Shy. I am debating of my present store,
And, by the near guess of my memory,
I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. What of that?
Tubah, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe,
Will furnish me. But soft! how many months
Do you desire? [To Ant.] Rest you fair, good signior;
Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, although I neither lend nor borrow
By taking nor by giving of excess,
Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend,
I'll break a custom. Is he yet possess'd
How much ye would?

Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.
Shy. I had forgot; three months; you told me so.
Well then, your bond; and let me see; but hear you;
Methought you said you neither lend nor borrow Upon advantage.
Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob grazed his uncle Laban's sheep—
This Jacob from our holy Abram was,
As his wise mother wrought in his behalf,
The third possessor; ay, he was the third—
Ant. And what of him? did he take interest?
Shy. No, not take interest, not, as you would say,
Directly interest: mark what Jacob did.
When Laban and himself were compromised
That all the earlings which were streak'd and pied
Should fall as Jacob's hire, the ewes, being rank,
In the end of autumn turned to the rams,
And, when the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders in the act,
The skilful shepherd peal'd me certain wands
And, in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes,
Who then conceived did in eaning time
Fall parti-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's.
This was a way to thrive, and he was blest:
And thrift is blessing, if men steal it not.
Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob served for;
A thing not in his power to bring to pass,
But sway'd and fashion'd by the hand of heaven.
Was this set forth to make interest good?
Or is your gold and silver ewes and rams?
Shy. I cannot tell; I make it breed as fast:
But note me, signior.
Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio,
The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose.
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart:
O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!
Shy. Three thousand ducats; 'tis a good round sum.
Three months from twelve; then, let me see;

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft
In the Rialto you have rated me
About my moneys and my usances:
Still have I borne it with a patient shrug,
For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe.
You call me believer, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine,
And all for use of that which is mine own.
Well then, it now appears you need my help:
Go to, then; you come to me, and you say
'Shylock, we would have moneys:' you say so;
You, that did vioe your rheum upon my beard.

[Act I.]
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE III. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur
Over your threshold; moneys is your suit.
What should I say to you? Should I not say 'Hath a dog money? is it possible
A cur can lend three thousand ducats? Or Shall I bend low and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath and whispering humbleness,
Say this;
'Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last;
You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies
I'll lend you thus much moneys'?

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again,
To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too.
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friends; for when did friendship take
A breed for barren metal of his friend?
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who, if he break, thou mayst with better face
Exact the penalty.

Sky. Why, look you, how you storm!
I would be friends with you and have your love,
Forget the shames that you have stain'd me with,
Supply your present wants and take no doit
Of usance for my moneys, and you'll not hear me:
This is kind I offer.

Bass. This was kindness.

Sky. This kindness will I show
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond; and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, I faith; I'll seal to such a bond
And say there is much kindness in the Jew.

Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me:
I'll rather dwell in my necessity,

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it:
Within these two months, that's a month before
I'll bring my ends together, I'll searcely, I'll
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Sky. O father Abram, what these Christians are,
Whose own hard dealings teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others? Pray you, tell me this;
If he should break his day, what should I gain
In the exactation of the forfeiture?
A pound of man's flesh taken from a man
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. I say,
I'll buy his favour, I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, adieu;
And, for my love, I pray you wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Skyllock, I will seal unto this bond.

Sky. Then meet me forthwith at the notary's;
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and purse the ducats straight,
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an unthrift knave, and presently
I will be with you.

The Hebrew will turn Christian; he grows kind.
Bass. I like not fair terms and a villain's mind.

Ant. Come on: in this there can be no dismay;
My ships come home a month before the day.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the Prince of Morocco and his train; Portia, Nerissa, and others attending.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun,
To whom I am a neighbour and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phæbus' fire scarce thaw's the icles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is best qualified for me.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath fear'd the valiant: by my love, I swear
The best-regarded virgins of our clime
Have loved it too: I would not change this hue,
Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a hidden oracle;
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing:
But if my father had not scanted me
And hedged me by his wit, to yield myself
His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair
As any comer I have look'd on yet
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you:
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets
To try my fortune. By this scimitar
That slew the Sophy and a Persian prince
That won three fields of Sultain Solyma,
I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. But, alas the while!
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand.
So is Alcides beaten by his page;
And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain,
And die with grieving.

Por. You must take your chance,
And either not attempt to choose at all
Or swear before you choose, if you choose wrong.
Never to speak to lady afterward.
In way of marriage: therefore be advised.

Mor. Nor will not. Come, bring me unto my chance.

Por. First, forward to the temple: after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then! To make me blest or cursed'st among men.

[Cornets, and Exeunt.

SCENE II. Venice. A street.

Enter Launcelot.

Laun. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew my master. The fiend is at mine elbow and tempts me saying to me
'Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot,' or 'good Gobbo,' or 'good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away.' My conscience says 'No; take heed, honest Launcelot:
take heed, honest Gobbo,' or, as aforesaid, 'honest Launcelot Gobbo: do not run; scorn running with thy heels.' Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack: 'Via! says the fiend; 'away!' says the fiend; 'for the heavens, rouse up a brave mind,' says the fiend, 'and run.' Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me: 'My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man's son, or rather an honest woman's son; for, indeed, my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste; well, my conscience says 'Launcelot, budge not.' 'Budge,' says the fiend. 'Budge not,' says my conscience. 'Conscience,' say I, 'you run well; 'Fiend,' say I, 'you counsel well!' to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who, God bless the mark, is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saying your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly the Jew is the very devil incarnate! and, in my conscience, my conscience is bade by the fiend make counsel, to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your command; I will run.

Enter Old Gobbo, with a basket.

Gob. Master young man, you, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. [Aside] O heavens, this is my true-begotten father! who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not: I will try confusions with him.

Gob. Master young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. Turn up on your right hand at the next turning, but, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.

By God's sorriness, 'twill be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him or no?

Laun. Talk you of young Master Launcelot?

[Aside] Mark me now: now will I raise the waters. Talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man, and, God be thanked, well to live.

Laun. Well, let his father be what 'a will, we talk of young Master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship's friend and Launcelot, sir.

Laun. But I pray you, ergo, old man, ergo, I beseech you, talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, an't please your mastership.

Laun. Ergo, Master Launcelot. Talk not of Master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman, according to Fates and Destinies and such odd sayings, the Sisters Three and such branches of learning, is indeed deceased, or, as you would say in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. A Merry. Good forbid! the boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Laun. Do I look like a cudgel or a hovel-post, a staff or a prop? Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day, I know you not, young gentleman; but, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, God rest his soul, alive or dead?

Laun. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind; I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son; give me your blessing; truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long; a man's son may, but at the length truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up: I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.

Laun. Pray you, let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son.

Laun. I know not what I shall think of that: but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and I am sure you say of your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord worshipped might he be! what a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin my fill-horse has on his tail.

It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward: I am sure he had more hair of his tail than I have of my face when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord, how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How 'gree you now?

Laun. Well, well: but, for mine own part, as I have, set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground. My master's a very Jew: give him a present! give him a halter: I am famished in his service; you may tell every finger I have with my ribs. Father, I am glad you are come: give me your present to master Bassanio, who, indeed, gives rare new liveries: if I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground. O rare fortune! here comes the man: to him, father; for I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter BASSANIO, with LEONARDO and other followers.

Bass. You may do so; but let it be so hasted that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. See these letters delivered; put the liveries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging.

[Exit a Servant.]

Laun. To him, father.

Gob. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy! wouldst thou aught with me?

Gob. Here's my son, sir, a poor boy.

Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man; that would, sir, as my father shall specify—

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve—

Laun. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and have a desire, as my father shall specify—

Gob. His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins—
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

act iv. scene v.

To be brief, the very truth is that the had done me wrong, doth cause me, as father, being, I hope, an old man, shall fru-
you—
I have here a dish of doves that I would your worship, and my suit is—
In brief, the suit is impertinent to
, as your worship shall know by this honest
; and, though I say it, though old man,
father, my father.
One speak for both. What would you?
Serve you, sir. 151
That is the very defect of the matter, sir.
I know thee well; thou hast obtained thy suit:
lock thy master spoke with me this day,
I hav'fath'nd thee, if it be preferment leave a rich Jew's service, to become follower of so poor a gentleman.
The old proverb is very well parted when my master Shylock and you, sir: you
e the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.
Thou speakest it well. Go, father, with thy son.
be guardian of thy old master and inquire lodging out. Give him a livery re guarded than his fellows': see it done.
Father, in. I cannot get a service; no:
ave ne'er a tongue in my head. Well, if any in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer wear upon a book, I shall have good fortune.
to, here's a simple line of life: here's a small of wives: alas, fifteen wives is nothing!
en widows and nine maids is a simple coming-or one man: and then to 'scape drowning ce, and to be in peril of my life with the edge feather-bed; here are simple scapes. Well, fortunate woman, she's a good wench for Father, come; I'll take my leave of Jew in the twinkling of an eye.
[Exit Launcelot and Old Gobbo.
I pray thee, good Lorenzo, think on this:
all things being bought and orderly bestow'd,
urn in haste, for I do feast to-night.
best-esteemed acquaintance: bie thee, go.
My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.
Where is your master?
Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit.
Signior Bassanio!
Gratiano!
I have a suit to you.
You have obtained it.
You must not deny me: I must go with to Belmont.
Why, then you must. But hear thee,
Gratiano; thine art too wild, too rude and bold of voice;
that become thee happily enough:
in such eyes as ours appear not faults;
where thou art not known, why, there they nothing too liberal. Pray thee, take pain allay with some cold drops of modesty
y skipping spirit, lest through thy wild beh-

I be misconstrued in the place I go to
And lose my hopes.
Signior Bassanio, hear me:
If I do not put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely,
Nay more, while grace is saying, hide mine
Thus with my hat, and sigh and say 'amen,'
Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam, never trust me more.
Well, we shall see your bearing.
Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not
By what we do to-night,
No, that were pity:
I would entreat you rather to put on
Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have
That purpose merriment. But fare you well:
I have some business.
And I must to Lorenzo and the rest:
But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exit.

Scene III. The same. A room in Shylock's house.

Enter Jessica and Launcelot.
I am sorry thou wilt leave my father so:
Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness.
But fare thee well, there is a ducat for thee:
And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see
Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest:
Give him this letter; do it secretly;
And so farewell: I would not have my father
See me in talk with thee.
Lorenzo, Adieu! tears exhibit my tongue. Most beautiful pagan, most sweet Jew! if a Christian did not play the knave and get thee, I am much deceived. But, adieu: these foolish drops do something drown my manly spirit: adieu.
Farewell, good Launcelot. [Exit Launcelot.
Allack, what heinous sin is it in me
To be ashamed to be my father's child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners. O Lorenzo,
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife,
Become a Christian and thy loving wife. [Exit.

Scene IV. The same. A street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salarino, and Salanio.
Nay, we will slink away in supper-time,
Disguise us at my lodging and return,
All in an hour.
We have not made good preparation.
Salar. We have not spoken us yet of torch-
Salan. 'Tis vile, unless it may be quaintly
And better in my mind not undertook.
'Tis now but four o'clock: we have two
To furnish us.
Enter Launcelot, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Laun. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand; and whiter than the paper it writ on. Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith.

Laun. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whither goest thou?

Laun. Marry, sir, to bid my old master the Jew to sup to-night with my new master the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this: tell gentle Jessica I will not fail her; speak it privately.

Go, gentlemen, [Exit Launcelot.]

Will you prepare you for this masque to-night? I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salar. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Salar. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me and Gratiano at Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Salar. 'Tis good we do so.

[Exeunt Salar. and Salan.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed how I shall take her from her father's house, what gold and jewels she is furnished with, what page's suit she hath in readiness. If ever the Jew her father come to heaven, it will be for his gentle daughter's sake: and never dare misfortune cross her foot, unless she do it under this excuse, that she is issue to a faithless Jew. Come, go with me; persuade this as thou goest: fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exeunt.

Scene V. The same. Before Shylock's house.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge, the difference of old Shylock and Bassanio:—what, Jessica! thou shalt not gormandise, as thou hast done with me:—what, Jessica! and sleep and snore, and rend apparel out;—why, Jessica, I say!

Laun. Why, Jessica!

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Yes. Call you? what is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica: there are my keys. But wherefore should I go? I am not bid for love; they flatter me: but yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon the prodigal Christian. Jessica, my girl, hast to my house. I am right loath to go: there is some ill a-brewing towards my rest, for I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I his.
Enter Lorenzo.
or. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
I, but my affairs, have made you wait:

you shall please to play the thieves for wives,
which long for you then. Approach;
edwells my father Jew. Ho! who's within?

Enter Jessica, above, in boy's clothes.

es. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty,
it: I'll swear that I do know your tongue.
or. Lorenzo, and thy love.
es. Lorenzo, certain, and my love indeed, who love I so much? And now who knows you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours? 31 or. Heaven and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.
es. Here, catch this casket; it is worth the pains,
I glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,
I am much ashamed of my exchange:
love is blind and lovers cannot see pretty follies that themselves commit;
if they could, Cupid himself would blush me thus transformed to a boy.
or. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer. 40
es. What, must I hold a candle to my shames?
y in themselves, good sooth, are too light.
y, 'tis an office of discovery, love;
I should be obscured.
or. So are you, sweet n in the lovely garnish of a boy.
come at once;
the close night doth play the runaway,
we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast.
es. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
h some more ducats, and be with you straight.
[Exit above. 50
or. Now, by my hood, a Gentle and no
Jew.
or. Beshrew me but I love her heartily;
she is wise, if I can judge of her,
fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,
true she is, as she hath proved herself,
in therefore, like herself, wise, fair and true,
il she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, below.
at, art thou come? On, gentlemen; away!
masking mates by this time for us stay.
[Exit with Jessica and Salarino.

Enter Antonio.

int. Who's there? 60
ra. Signior Antonio!
int. Fie, fie, Gratiano! where are all the rest?
in one o'clock: our friends all stay for you.
masque to-night: the wind is come about;
sanio presently will go abroad;
are sent twenty out to seek for you.
ra. I am glad on't: I desire no more delights an to be under sail and gone to-night. [Exit.
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England
A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold, but that's insculp'd upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within. Deliver me the key:
Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may! 60
For. There, take it, prince; and if my form lile there,
Then I am yours: [He unlocks the golden casket. Mor.
O hell! what have we here?
A carrion Death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll! I'll read the writing.
[Reads] All that glister is not gold;
Often have you heard that told:
Many a man his life hath sold
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tombs do worms infold,
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgement old,
Your answer had not been inscrull'd:
Fare you well; your suit is cold.
Cold, indeed; and labour lost:
Then, farewell, heat, and welcome, frost!
Portia, adieu. I have too grieved a heart.
To take a tedious leave; thus losers part.
[Exit with his train. Flourish of cornets.
For. A gentle riddance. Draw the curtains, go.
Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII. Venice. A street.

Enter SALARINO and SALANIO.

Salar. Why, man, I saw Bassanio under sail:
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.
Salan. The villain Jew with outcries raised
the duke,
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica:
Besides, Antonio certified the duke
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Salan. I never heard a passion so confused,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets;
'My daughter! O my ducats! O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian! O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stolen from me by my daughter!
And jewels, two stones, two rich and precious stones,
Stolen by my daughter! Justice! find the girl;
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats.'
Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,
Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.
Salan. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.
Salar. Marry, well remember'd.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country richly fraught:

I thought upon Antonio when he told me;
And wish'd I could not be the more.
Salar. You were best to tell Antonio when you hear;
Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman treads not th' earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part;
Bassanio told him he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd, 'Do not so;
Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time:
And for the Jew's bond which he hath of me,
I'll not enter in thy mind of love:
Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship and such fair ostents of love;
As shall conveniently become you there:
And even there, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted.
Salan. I think he only loves the world for love.
I pray thee, let us go and find him out
And quicken his embraced heaviness
With some delight or other.
Salar. Do we so. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX. Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Nerissa with a Servitor.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee; draw the curtain straight:
The Prince of Arragon hath ta'en his oath,
And comes to his election presently.
Flourish of cornets. Enter the Prince of Arragon, Portia, and their trains.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince:
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemnized:
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.
Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things:
First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket 'twas I chose; next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage:
Lastly, If I do fail in fortune of my choice,
Immediately to leave you and be gone.
Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.
Ar. And so have I address'd me. Fortune now
To my heart's hope! Gold; silver; and base lead.
'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.'
You shall look fairer, ere I give or hazard.
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see:
'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'
What many men desire! that 'many' may be meant
By the fool multitude, that choose by show,
Enter a Servant.

Serv. Where is my lady?

Por. Here: what would my lord?

Serv. Madam, there's lighted at your gate
A young Venetian, one that comes before
To signify the approaching of his lord;
From whom he bringeth sensible regretts,
To wit, besides commendants and courteous breath,
Gifts of rich value. Yet I have not seen
So likely an ambassador of love:
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-spurrier comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee: I am half afear
Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.

Come, come, Nerissa: for I long to see
Quick Cupid's post that comes so mannerly.

Ner. Bassanio, lord Love, if thy will it be!

[Ereunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Venice. A street.

Enter Salanio and Salarino.

Salan. Now, what news on the Rialto?

Salar. Why, yet it lives there unchecked
That Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wrecked
On the narrow seas; the Goodwins, I think they Call the place; a very dangerous flat and fatal,
Where the carcases of many a tall ship lie buried,
As they say, if my gossip Report be an honest
Woman of her word.

Salan. I would she were as lying a gossip in
That as ever knapped ginger or made her neighbours
Believe she wept for the death of a third Husband. But it is true, without any slips of Proximity or crossing the plain highway of talk,
That the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—
O that I had a title good enough to keep his Name company!

Salar. Come, the full stop.

Sali. Ha! what sayest thou? Why, the End is, he hath lost a ship.

Salar. I would it might prove the end of his Losses.

Salan. Let me say 'amen' betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer, for here he comes in the Likeness of a Jew.

Enter Shylock.

How now, Shylock! what news among the Merchants?

Shy. You knew, none so well, none so well as
You, of my daughter's flight.

Salar. That's certain; I, for my part, knew
The tailor that made the wings she flew withal.

Salan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew
The bird was fledged; and then it is the complexion
Of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salar. That's certain, if the devil may be her Judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!

Salan. Out upon it, old Carrion! rebels it at These years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods than there is between red wine and rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio has had any loss at sea or no? Shy. There I have another bad match; a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto; a beggar, that was used to come so smug upon the mart; let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer; let him look to his bond: he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy; let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: what's that good for? Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility? Revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? Why, revenge. The villain you teach me, I will execute, and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Enter Tubal.

Salar. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew. [Exeunt Salar, Shy., and Servant.

Shy. How now, Tubal! what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why, there, there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I never felt it till now: two thousand ducats in that; and other precious, precious jewels. I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she were here at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them? Why, so: and I know not what's spent in the search: why, thou loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief; and no satisfaction, no revenge: nor no ill luck stirring but what lights on my shoulders; no sighs but of my breathing; no tears but of my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too: Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. Hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thank God, I thank God. Is't true, is't true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal: good news, good news! ha, ha! where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, in one night fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stickest a dagger in me: I shall never see my gold again: fourscore ducats at a sitting! fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it: I'll plague him; I'll torture him! I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tormentest me, Tubal; it was my turquiose; I had it of Leah for a barter: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true. Go, Tubal, fee me an officer; bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will. Go, go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue; go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal. [Exeunt.

Scene II. Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and Attendants.

Por. I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company: therefore forbear awhile. There's something tells me, but it is not love, I would not lose you; and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality. But lest you should not understand me well,—And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought,—I would detain you here some month or two Before you venture for me. I could teach you How to choose right, but I am then forsworn; I So will I never be: so may you miss me; But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin, That I had been forsworn. Beshrew your eyes, They have d'orlook'd me and divided me: One half of me is yours, the other half yours, Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours, And so all yours. O, these naughty times Put bars between the owners and their rights! And so, though yours, not yours. Prove it so, Let fortune go to hell for it, not I, I I speak too long; but 'tis to peize the time, To eke it and to draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Bass. Let me choose;

For as I am, I live upon the rack.

Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio! then confess What treason there is mingled with your love.

Bass. None but that ugly treason of mistrust, Which makes me fear the enjoying of my love: There may as well be amity and life 30 'Tween snow and fire, as treason and my love.

Por. Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack, Where men enforced do speak anything.
Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.

Port. Well then, confess and live.

Bass. 'Confess' and 'love' had been the very sum of my confession; I happy torment, when my tormenter both teach me answers for deliverance! let me to my fortune and the caskets.

Port. Away, then! I am lock'd in one of them:

you do love me, you will find me out. erissa and the rest, stand all aloof. et music sound while he doth make his choice; hen, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end, ading in music: that the comparison day stand more proper, my eye shall be the nd watery death-bed for him. He may win; nd what is music then? Then music is ven as the flourish when true subjects bow o a new-crowned monarch: such it is s are those dulcet sounds in break of day hat creep into the dreaming bridgedom's car and summon him to marriage. Now he goes, ith no less presence, but with much more love, han young Alcides, when he did redeem he virgin tribute paid by howling Troy o the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice; he rest aloof are the Dardanian wives, ith bleared visages, come forth to view he issue of the exploit. Go, Hercules! ive thou, I live: with much more dismay view the fight than thou that makest the fray.

Music, whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

Song.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
Reply, reply.

It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed; and fancy dies
In the creative eyes.

Let us all ring fancy's knell:
I'll begin it.—Ding, dong, bell.

All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward show be least themselves;
he world is still deceived with ornament.
aw, what plea so taintt and corrupt it, being seasoned with a gracious voice, aucres the show of evil? In religion, hat damned error, but some sober brow ill bless it and approve it with a text, iding the grossness with fair ornament?
here is no vice so simple but assumes me mark of virtue on his outward parts: ow many cowards, whose hearts are all as false stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins brs of Hercules and Florence Mars, ho, inward search'd, have livers white as milk; d these assume but valour's excrement render them redivent! Look on beauty, shou you shall see 'tis purchas'd by the weight; hich therein works a miracle in nature, aking them lightest that wear most of it: o are those crisp'd snaky golden locks hich make such wanton gambols with the wind,

Bass. Upon supposed fairness, often known To be the dowry of a second head, The skull that bred them in the sepulchre. Thus ornament is but the guiled shore To a most dangerous sea; the beauceous scarf Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word, The seeming truth which cunning times put on To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gaudy gold, Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee; Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge 'Twee man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead, Which rather threatenest than dost promise aught, Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence; And here choose I: joy be the consequence!

Port. [Aside] How all the other passions fleet to air.

As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embraced despair, And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy! O love, Be moderate; allay thy ecstasy; In measure rein thy joy; scant this excess. I feel too much thy blessing: make it less, For fear I surfeit.

Bass. What find I here? [Opening the leaden casket.]

Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes? Or whether, riding on the balls of mine, Seem they in motion? Here are seven'd lips, Parted with sugar breath: so sweet a bar Should sunder such sweet friends. Here in her hairs

The painter plays the spider and hath woven A golden mesh to entrapp the hearts of men Faster than gnats in cobwebs; but her eyes,— How could he see to do them? having made one, Methinks it should have power to steal both his And leave itself unfurnish'd. Yet look, how far The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow In underprizing it, so far this shadow Doth limb behind the substance. Here's the scroll,

The continent and summary of my fortune. [Reads] You that choose not by the view, Chance as fair and choose as true! Since this fortune falls to you, Be content and seek no new. If you be well pleased with this And hold your fortune for your bliss, Turn you where your lady is And claim her with a loving kiss. A gentle scroll. Fair lady, by your leave; I come by note, to give and to receive. Like one of two contending in a prize, That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes, Hearing applause and universal shout, Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt Whether those peals of praise be his or no; So, thrice-fair lady, stand I, even so; As doubtful whether what I see be true, Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you. Port. You see me, Lord Bassano, where I stand, Such as I am: though for myself alone I would not be ambitious in my wish, To wish myself much better; yet, for you I would be trebled twenty times myself; A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times
More rich;
That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
† Is sum of something, which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractised; 161
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
† But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all is that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself and what is mine to you and yours
Is now converted: but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants, 170
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants and this same myself
Are yours, my lord: I give them with this ring;
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love
And be my vantage to exclaim on you.

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins;
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As, after some oration fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Amongst the buzzing pleased multitude;
Where every something, being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy,
Express'd and not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence:
O, then be bold to say Bassanio's dead!
Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, good joy: good joy, my lord and lady!

Gra. My lord Bassanio and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish;
For I am sure you can wish none from me:
And when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thank your lordship, you have got me one.
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid; 200
You loved me, I loved you;
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the casket there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For wooring here until I sweat again,
And swearing till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love, at last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this fair one here
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achieved her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa? 210

Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleased withal.

Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your marriage.

Gra. We'll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and stake down?

Gra. No; we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down.

But who comes here? Lorenzo and his infidel?

What, and my old Venetian friend Nerissa?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Nerissa, a Messenger from Venice.

Bass. Lorenzo and Nerissa, welcome hither;
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome. By your leave,
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. So do I, my lord:
They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honour. For my part, my lord,
My purpose was not to have seen you here; 230
But meeting with Nerissa by the way,
He did intreat me, past all saying nay,
To come with him along.

Sal. I did, my lord;
And I have reason for it. Signor Antonio
Comends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.

Bass. Ere I ope his letter,
I pray you, tell me how my good friend doth.

Sal. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind,
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate.

Gra. Nerissa, cheer you stranger; bid her
Your hand, Salerio: what's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jasons, we have won the fleece.

Sal. I would you had won the fleece that
The hath lost.

Por. There are some shrewd contents in your same paper,
That steals the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse
With leave, Bassanio; I am half yourself. 250
And I must freely have the half of anything
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia
Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And then I told you true: and yet, dear lady,
Raking myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing: for, indeed,
I have engaged myself to a dear friend,
Engaged my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound,
Issuing life-blood. But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit:
From Tripolis, from Mexico and England, 270
From Lisbon, Barbary and India?
And not one vessel's cape the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marring rocks?

Sal. Not one, my lord.
Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Scene III. Venice. A street.

Enter Shylock, Salariino, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy. Gaoler, look to him: tell not me of mercy;
his is the fool that lent out money gratis:
aoler, look to him.

Ant. Hear me yet, good Shylock.

Shy. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond:
I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond.
Thou call'st me dog before thou hastad a cause;
But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs:
The duke shall grant me justice. I do wonder,
Thou naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak.

Shy. I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak:
I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I'll have no speaking: I will have my bond.

[Exit.]

Salar. It is the most impenetrable cur
That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone:
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers. 10
He seeks my life: his reason well I know:
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures.
Many that have at times made moan to me;
Therefore he hates me.

Salar. I am sure the duke
Will never grant this forfeit to hold.

Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law:
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied
Will much impeach the justice of his state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go:
These griefs and losses have so bated me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.

Well, gaoler, on. Pray God, Bassanio come to see me pay his debt, and then I care not!

[Exeunt.]

Scene IV. Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthasar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of your lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners and of spirit;
Which makes me think that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestow'd
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish misery!
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Scene V. The same. A garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Lau. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise ye, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter; therefore be of good cheer, for truly I think you are damned. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good; and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lau. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed: so the sins of my mother should be visited to me.

Lau. Truly then I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother; well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Lau. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians now before; e'en as many as could well live, one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say: here he comes.

Lau. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo: Launcelot and I are out. He tells me flatly there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter: and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth, for in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lau. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Lau. It is much that the Moor should be more than reason: but if she be less than an honest woman, she is indeed more than I took her for.

Jes. How every fool can play upon the word! I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendeable in none but parrots. Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

Lau. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Lau. Goodly Lord, what a wit-snapper are you! then bid them prepare dinner.

Lau. That is done too, sir; only 'cover' is the word.

Lau. Will you cover then, sir?

Lau. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.
Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou but lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought
Thou 'lt shoW thy mercy and remorse more strange
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh,
Thou wilt not only loose the forfeiture,
But, touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moiety of the principal;
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Enow to press a royal merchant down
And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never train'd
To offices of tender courtesy.

We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

Sky. I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose;
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter and your citie's freedom.
You'll ask me, why I wouldst not be loath to have
A weight of carrion flesh than to receive
Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that:
But, say it is my humour: is it answer'd?
What if my house be troubled with a rat
And I be pleased to give ten thousand ducats
To have it ban'd? What, are you answer'd yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bagpipe sings 'tis the nose,
Cannot contain their urine: for affection,
Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood
Of what it likes or loathes: Now, for your answer:
As there is no firm reason to be render'd,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig;
Why he, a harmless necessary cat;
'Tis he, a woolen bag-pipe; but of force
Must yield to such inevitable shame
As to offend, himself being offended;
So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodged hare and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio, that I follow thus:
A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd?

Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man,
To excuse the current of thy cruelty.

Sky. I am not bound to please thee with my answers.

Bass. Do all men kill the things they do not love?

Sky. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first.

Sky. What, wouldst thou have a serpent sting thee twice?

Ant. I pray you, think you question with the Jew:

You may as well go stand upon the beach
And bid the main flood bathe his usual height;
You may as well use question with the wolf
Why he hath made the ewe bleed for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops and to make no noise,
When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that—than which what's harder?
His Jewish heart: therefore, I do beseech you, 80
Make no more offers, use no farther means,
But with all brief and plain conveniency
Let me have judgement and the Jew his will.
Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.
Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them; I would have my bond.
Duke. How shalt thou hope for mercy, rendering nothing?
Shy. What judgement shall I dread, doing no wrong?
You have among you many a purchased slave, 90
Which, like your asses and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish parts,
Because you bought them: shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs?
Why sweat they under burthens? let their beds
Be made as soft as yours and let their palates
Be season'd with such viands? You will answer
'The slaves are ours': so do I answer you:
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought: 'tis mine and I will have it. 100
If you deny me, fie upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
I stand for judgement; answer, shall I have it?
Duke. Upon my power I may dismiss this court,
Unless Bellario, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come here to-day.
Saler. My lord, here stays without
A messenger with letters from the doctor,
New come from Padua.
Duke. Bring us the letters; call the messenger.
Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man, courage yet!
The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones and all,
Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.
Ant. I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground; and so let me
You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio,
Than to live still and write mine epistle.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.
Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?
Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario greets your grace.
Shy. Presenting a letter. 120
Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?
Shy. To cut the forfeit from that bankrupt
there.
Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh
Jew,
Thou makest thy knife keen; but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?
Shy. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make,
Gra. O, be thou damn'd, inexecrable dog!
And for thy life let justice be accused.
Thou almost makest me waver in my faith 130
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
The souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men: thycurrish spirit
Gover'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

199

How much more elder art thou than thy looks!
Por. Therefore lay bare your bosom.
Shy. Ay, his breast:

So says the bond: doth it not, noble judge?

‘Nearest his heart;’ those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh

The flesh?
Shy. I have them ready.
Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,

To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.
Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?
Por. It is not so expressed; but what of that?

’Twere good you do so much for charity.
Shy. I cannot find it; ‘tis not in the bond.
Por. You, merchant, have you any thing to say?

Ant. But little: I am arm’d and well prepared.

Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well!

Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you;
For herein Fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom: it is still her use

To let the wretched man outlive his wealth,
To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty; from which lingering penance
Of such misery doth she cut me off.

Commend me to your honourable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio’s end;
Say how I loved you, speak me fair in death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge

Whether Bassanio had not once a love,
Repent but you that you shall lose your friend,
And he repents not that he pays your debt;
Por. For if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I’ll pay it presently with all my heart.

Ant. A little, Antonio, I am married to a wife
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem’d above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all

Here to this devil, to deliver you.
Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that,
If she were by, to hear you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some power to change this currish Jew.

Por. ’Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unquiet house.

Shy. These be the Christian husbands. I have a daughter;
Would any of the stock of Barrabas
Had been her husband rather than a Christian?

Aside. We trifle time: I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant’s flesh is thine:

The court awards it, and the law doth give it.
Shy. Most rightful judge!
Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast:
The law allows it, and the court awards it.
Shy. Most learned judge! A sentence! Come, prepare!
Por. Tarry a little; there is something else.
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are ‘a pound of flesh.’
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh; But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate Unto the state of Venice. Gra. O upright judge! Mark, Jew: a learned judge! Shy. Is that the law? Por. Therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh. Shed thou no blood, nor cut thou less nor more But just a pound of flesh: if thou cut'st more Or less than a just pound, be it so much As makes it light or heavy in the substance, Or the division of the twentieth part Of on' which, my lord, I mean. But in the estimation of a hair, Thou diest and all thy goods are confiscate. Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew! Now, infidel, I have you on the hip. Por. Why doth the Jew pause? take thy forfeiture. Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go. Bass. I have it ready for thee; here it is. Por. He hath refused it in the open court: He shall have merely justice and his bond. Gra. A Daniel, still say I, a second Daniel! I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word. Shy. Shall I not have barely my principal? Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture, To be so taken at thy peril. Jew. Shy. Why, then the devil give him good of it! I'll stay no longer question. Por. Tarry, Jew: The law hath yet another hold on you. It is enacted in the laws of Venice, If it be proved against an alien That by direct or indirect attempts He seek the life of any citizen, The party 'gainst the which he doth contrive Shall seize one half his goods; the other half Comes to the privy coffer of the state; And the offender's life lies in the mercy Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice. In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st; For it appears, by manifest proceeding, That indirectly and directly too Thou hast contrived against the very life Of the defendant; and thou hast incur'd The danger formerly by me rehearsed. Down therefore and beg mercy of the duke. Gra. Beg that thou mayst have leave to hang thyself: And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state, Thou hast not left the value of a cord; Therefore thou must be hang'd at the state's charge. Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirits, I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it: For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's; The other half comes to the general state, Which humbleness may drive unto a fine. Por. Ay, for the state, not for Antonio. Shy. Nay, take my life and all; pardon not that: You take my house when you do take the prop That doth sustain my house; you take my life When you do take the means whereby I live. Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio? Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake. Ant. So please my lord the duke and all the court To quit the fine for one half of his goods, I am content; so he will let me have The other half in use, to render it, Upon his death, unto the gentleman That lately stole his daughter: Two things provided more, that, for this favour, He presently become a Christian: The other, that he do record a gift, Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd, Unto his son Lorenzo and his daughter. Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recant The pardon that I late pronounced here. Por. Art thou contented, Jew? what dost thou say? Shy. I am content. Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift. Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence; I am not well: send the deed after me, And I will sign it. Duke. Get thee gone, but do it. Gra. In christening shalt thou have two godfathers: Had I been judge, thou should'st have had ten more, To bring thee to the gallows, not the font. [Exit Shylock. Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner. Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon; I must away this night toward Padua, And it is meet I presently set forth. Duke. I am sorry that your leisure serves you not. Antonio, gratify this gentleman, For, in my mind, you are much bound to him. [Exeunt Duke and his train. Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof, Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew, We freely cope your courteous pains withal, And stand indebted, over and above, In love and service to you evermore. Por. He is well paid that is well satisfied; And I, delivering you, am satisfied And therein do account myself well paid: My mind was never yet more mercenary, I pray you, know me when we meet again: I wish you well, and so I take my leave. Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further: Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute, Not as a fee: grant me two things, I pray you,
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
Per. You press me far, and therefore I will yield.
To Ant. Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake;
To Bass. And, for your love, I'll take this ring from you:
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more;
And you in love shall deny me this.
Bass. This ring, good sir, alas, it is a trifle!
I will not shame myself to give you this.
Per. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it.
Bass. There's more depends on this than on the value.
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation:
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.
Per. I see, sir, you are liberal in offers:
You taught me first to beg; and now methinks
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.
Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife:
And when she put it on, she made me vow
That I should neither sell nor give nor lose it.
Per. That 'tis cause serves many men to save their gifts.
An your wife be not a mad-woman,
And know well how I have deserved the ring,
She would not hold out enemy for ever,
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you!
[Exit Portia and Nerissa.]
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. [Act V.]

Lor. Leave hollaing, man: here.

Lawn. Sola! where? where?

Lor. Here.

Lawn. Tell him there's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news: my master will be here ere morning. [Exit.

Lor. Sweet soul, let's in, and there expect their coming.

And yet no matter: why should we go in? 50

My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,

Within the house, your mistress is at hand;

And bring your music forth into the air.

[Exit Stephano.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!

Here will we sit and let the sounds of music

Creep in our ears; soft stillness and the night

Become the touches of sweet harmony.

Sit, Jessica. Look how the floor of heaven

Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold:

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st

But in his motion like an angel sings,

Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins;

Such harmony is in immortal souls;

But whilst this muddy vesture of decay

Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

Enter Musicians.

Come, ho! and wake Diana with a hymn:

With sweetest touches pierce your mistress' ear

And draw her home with music. [Music.

Yes. I am never merry when I hear sweet music.

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive:

For do but note a wild and wanton herd,

Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,

Fetching mad bounds, belowing and neighing loud,

Which is the hot condition of their blood;

If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound,

Or any air of music touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze

By the sweet power of music: therefore the poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods:

Since nought so stockish, hard and full of rage,

But music for the time doth change his nature.

The man that hath no music in himself,

Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,

Is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils;

The motions of his spirit are dull as night

And his affections dark as Erebos;

Let no such man be trusted. Mark the music.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.

How far that little candle throws his beams! 90

So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shine, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:

A substitute shines brightly as a king

Until a king be by, and then his state

Empties itself, as doth an inund brook

Into the main of waters. Music! hark!

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect:

Methinks it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Por. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark

When neither is attended, and I think

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,

When every goose is cackling, would be thought

No better a musician than the wren.

How many things by season season'd are

To their right praise and true perfection!

Peace, ho! the moon sleeps with Endymion

And would not be awaked. [Music ceases.

Lor. That is the voice, 110

Or I am much deceived, of Portia.

Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the cuckoo,

By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.

Por. We have been prayer for our husbands' healths,

Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.

Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet;

But there is come a messenger before,

To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa;

Give order to my servants that they take

No vote at all of our being absent hence;

120 Nor you, Lorenzo; Jessica, nor you.

[A turret sounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand; I hear his trumpet:

We are no tell-tales, madam; fear you not.

Por. This night methinks is but the dayLight sick;

It looks a little paler: 'tis a day,

Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,

If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;

For a light wife doth make a heavy husband, 150

And never be Bassanio so for me:

But God sort all! You are welcome home, my friends.

Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my friend.

This is the man, this is Antonio,

To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,

For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.

Ant. No more than I am well acquitted of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:

It must appear in other ways than words, 140

Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.

Gra. [To Ner.] By yonder moon I swear

you do me wrong;

In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk:

Would he were gelt that had it, for my part,

Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paistry ring

That she did give me, whose posy was

For all the world like cutler's poetry

Upon a knife, 'Love me, and leave me not.' 150

Ner. What talk you of the posy or the value?

You swore to me, when I did give it you,
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?
I was enforced to send it after him;
I was beset with shame and courtesy;
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmirch it. Pardon me, good lady;
For, by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begged
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor e'er come near my house:
Since he hath got the jewel that I loved,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you:
I'll not deny him any thing I have,
No, not my body nor my husband's bed:
Know him well, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me like
Argus:
If you do not, if I be left alone,
Now, by mine honour, which is yet mine own,
I'll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore be well advised
How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Gra. Well, do you so: let not me take him, then;
For if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen.

Ant. I am the unhappy subject of these quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And, in the hearing of these many friends, 241
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself—

Por. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye, one: swear by your double self,
And there's an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me:
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear
I never more will break an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth;
Which, but for him that had your husband's ring,
Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety. Give him this
And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, Lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.

Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!

Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio:
For, by this ring, the doctor lay with me,

Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano;
For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor's clerk,
In lieu of this last night did lie with me.

Gra. Why, this is like the meaning of highways
In summer, where the ways are fair enough:
What, are we cuckolds ere we have deserved it?

Por. Speak not so grossly. You are all amazed!
Here is a letter; read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find that Portia was the doctor, Nerissa there her clerk: Lorenzo here 270
And even but now return'd; I have not yet Enter'd my house. Antonio, you are welcome; And I have better news in store for you Than you expect: unseal this letter soon; There you shall find three of your argosies Are richly come to harbour suddenly: You shall not know by what strange accident I chanced on this letter.
Ant. I am dumb.
Bass. Were you the doctor and I knew you not? 280
Gra. Were you the clerk that is to make me cuckold?
Ner. Ay, but the clerk that never means to do it, Unless he live until he be a man.
Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bed-
Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and 290 living;
For here I read for certain that my ships are safely come to road.
Por. How now, Lorenzo! My clerk hath some good comforts too for you. Ner. Ay, and I' ll give them him without a fee. 290
There do I give to you and Jessica, From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift, After his death, of all he dies possess'd of.
Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way Of starved people.
Por. It is almost morning, And yet I am sure you are not satisfied Of these events at full. Let us go in; And charge us there upon interrogatories, And we will answer all things faithfully.
Gra. Let it be so: the first interrogatory 300 That my Nerissa shall be sworn on is, Whether till the next night she had rather stay, Or go to bed now, being two hours to day: But were the day come, I should wish it dark, That I were couching with the doctor's clerk. Well, while I live I 'll fear no other thing So sore as keeping safe Nerissa's ring. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Orchard of Oliver's house.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will but poor a thousand crowns, and, as thou sayest, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ass? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taugh their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired; but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something: that nature gave me his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude: I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go, apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Enter Oliver.

Orl. Now, sir! what make you here?
Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.
Orl. What mar you then, sir?
my father left me by testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you; you shall have some part of your will: I pray you, leave me.

Orl. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is 'old dog' my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service. God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word. [Exeunt Orlando and Adam.

Oli. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Holla, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?

Den. So please you, he is here at the door, and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.] 'Twill be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship. 100

Oli. Good Monsieur Charles, what's the new news at the new court?

Cha. There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news: that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell if Rosalind, the duke's daughter, be banished with her father? 133

Cha. O, no; for the duke's daughter, her cousin, so loves her, being ever from their cradle bred together, that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oli. Where will the old duke live?

Cha. They say he is already in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand that your younger brother Orlando hath a disposition to come in disguised against me to try a fall. To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in: therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intendment or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein and have by underhand means laboured to dissuade him from it, but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles: it is the stiffestborn young fellow of France, full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother: therefore use thy discretion; I had as lief thou didst break his neck as his finger. And thou wert best look to't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device and never leave thee till he ha' thine life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak it without charity of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, thou wouldst have seen a man and weep and thou must look pale and wonder.

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, I'll give him my payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more: and so God keep your worship!

Oli. Well, good Charles. [Exit Charles.] Now will I stir this gamester; I hope I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he's gentle, never schooled and yet learned, full of noble device, of all sorts enchantingly beloved, and indeed so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who but a few know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither; which now I'll go about. [Exit.]

Scene II. Lawn before the Duke's palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.

Rosa. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of; and would you yet I were merier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein I see thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so would'st thou, if the truth of thy love to me was so righteously tempered as mine is to thee.

Rosa. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know my father hath no child but I; nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir, for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection; by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn monster: therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No? when Nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by Fortune fall into the fire? Though Nature hath given us wit to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is Fortune too hard for Nature, when Fortune makes Nature's natural the cutter-off of Nature's wit.

Cel. Peradventure this is not Fortune's work neither, but Nature's; who perceiveth our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses and hath sent this natural for our whetstone; for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits. How now, wit! whither wander you?

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Cel. Were you made the messenger?

Touch. No, by mine honour, but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight that swore by his honour they were good pancakes and swore by his honour the mustard was naught: now I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Cel. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry, now unmuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were; but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before ever he saw those pancakes or that mustard.

Cel. Prithiee, who is't that thou meanest?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Ros. My father's love is enough to honour him: enough! speak no more of him; you'll be whipped for taxation one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely what wise men do foolishly.

Cel. By my troth, thou sayest true; for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show. Here comes Monsieur Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-crammed.

Cel. All the better; we shall be the more marketable.

Enter Le Beau.

Bon jour, Monsieur Le Beau: what's the news?

Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Cel. Sport! of what colour?

Le Beau. What colour, madam! how shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the Destinies decree.

Cel. Well said; that was laid on with a trowel.

Touch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,—

Ros. Than losest thy old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning; and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end; for the best is yet to do; and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cel. Well, the beginning, that is dead and buried.

Le Beau. There comes an old man and his three sons,—

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence.

Ros. With bills on their necks, 'Be it known unto all men by these presents.'

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ros. Alas!

Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?

Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.

Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day: it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dothes upon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.
Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man? 160
Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Cel. Alas, he is too young! yet he looks successfully.

Duke F. How now, daughter and cousin! are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you; there is such odds in the man. In pity of the challenger's youth I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated. Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Do so: I'll not be by.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princesses call for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler? 179

Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of his youth.

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes or knew yourself with your judgement, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we will make it our suit to the duke that the wrestling might not go forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts; wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your fair eyes and gentle wishes go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one advantage that was never gracious: if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so: I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me, the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cel. And mine, to eke out hers.

Ros. Fare you well: pray heaven I be deceived in you!

Cel. Your heart's desires be with you!

Cha. Come, where is this young gallant that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Cha. No, I warrant your grace, you shall not entreat him to a second, have that so mightily persuaded him from a first. 210

Orl. An you mean to mock me after, you shou'd not have mocked me before: but come your ways.

Ros. Now Hercules be thy speed, young man!

Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. (They wrestle.)

Ros. O excellent young man!

Cel. If I had a thunder-bolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. [Shout. Charles is thrown.

Duke F. No more, no more.

Orl. Yes, I beseech your grace: I am not yet well breathed.

Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speak, my lord.

Duke F. Bear him away. What is thy name, young man?

Orl. Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys.

Duke F. I would thou hadst been son to some man else:

The world espy'd thy father honourable,
But I did find him still mine enemy:
Thou shouldst have better pleased me with this deed,
Hadst thou descended from another house.
But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth:
I would thou hadst told me of another father.

[Exeunt Duke Fred., train, and Le Beau.

Cel. O my young father, coz, would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son,
His youngest son; and would not change that calling,
To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Ros. My father loved Sir Rowland as his soul,
And all the world was of my father's mind:
Had I known this young man his son,
I should have given him tears unto entreaties, 250
Ere he should thus have ventured.

Cel. Gentle cousin,
Let us go thank him and encourage him:
My father's rough and envious disposition
Sticks me at heart. Sir, you have well deserved:
If you do keep your promises in love
But justly, as you have exceeded all promise,
Your mistress shall be happy.

Ros. [Giving him a chain from her neck.

Gentleman.

Wear this for me, one out of suits with fortune,
That could give more, but that her hand lacks

Shall we go, coz?

Cel. Ay. Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Orl. Can I not say, I thank you? My better parts
Are all thrown down, and that which here stands up
Is but a quittance, a mere lifeless block.

Ros. He calls us back: my pride fell with my fortunes;
I'll ask him what he would. Did you call, sir?
Sir, you have wrestled well and overthrown
More than your enemies.

Cel. Will you go, coz?

Orl. Have with you. Fare you well.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Orl. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?
I cannot speak to her, yet she urged conference.
O poor Orlando, thou art overthrown!
Or Charles or something weaker masters thee.

Re-enter Le Beau.

Le Beau. Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you
To leave this place. Albeit you have deserved
AS YOU LIKE IT.

High commendation, true applause and love,
That such is now the duke's condition
That he misconstrues all that you have done.
The duke is humorous; what he is indeed,
Dore suits you to conceive than I to speak of.
Orl. I thank you, sir: and, pray you, tell me this:
Which of the two was daughter of the duke
That here was at the wrestling?
Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge
By manners;
But yet indeed the lesser is his daughter:
The other is daughter to the banish'd duke,
And here detain'd by her usurping uncle,
To keep his daughter company; whose loves
Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.
But I can tell you that of late this duke
Faith ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece,
Round'd upon no other argument
But that the people praise her for her virtues
And pity her for her good father's sake;
And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady
Vill suddenly break forth. Sir, fare you well:
Hereafter, in a better world than this,
Shall desire more love and knowledge of you.
Orl. I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.
[Exit Le Beau.]
Thus must I from the smoke into the smother;
From tyrant duke unto a tyrant brother; 300
But heavenly Rosalind!
[Exit.]

SCENE III. A room in the palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. Why, cousin! why, Rosalind! Cupid
Ave mercy! not a word?
Ros. Not one to throw at a dog.
Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be Cast away upon curs; throw some of them at me;
Ome, lame me with reasons.
Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up;
Then the one should be lamed with reasons
And he other mad without any.
Cel. But is all this for your father? 10
Ros. No, some of it is for my child's father. (58)
, how full of briers is this working-day world!
Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon Me in holiday foolery: if we walk not in the Ridden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.
Ros. I should shake them off my coat: these Urs are in my heart.
Cel. Hem them away.
Ros. I would try, if I could cry 'hem' and
Have him.
Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.
Ros. O, they take the part of a better wrestler
Than myself!
Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try
A time, in despite of a fall. But, turning these Easts out of service, let us talk in good earnest: it
Is possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into A strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest Son?
Ros. The duke my father loved his father
Learily. 31
Cel. Doth it therefore ensue that you should Ove his son dearly? By this kind of chase, I
Would hate him, for my father hated his father
Learily: yet I hate not Orlando.

Res. No, faith, hate him not, for my sake.
Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve
Well?
Res. Let me love him for that, and do you Love him because I do. Look, here comes the duke.
Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Duke F. Mistress, dispatch with you your Saftest haste
And get you from our court.
Res. Me, uncle?
Duke F. You, cousin: Within these ten days if that thou be'st found
So near our public court as twenty miles,
Thou diest for it.
Res. I do beseech your grace,
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me:
If with myself I hold intelligence,
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires, 50
If that I do not dream or be not frantic,—
As I do trust I am not—then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborn
Did I offend your highness.
Duke F. Thus do all traitors:
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace itself.
Let it suffice thee that I trust thee not.
Res. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor:
Tell me whereon the likelihood depends.
Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter; there's enough.
Res. So was I when your highness took his dukedom;
So was I when your highness banish'd him:
Treason is not inherited, my lord;
Or, if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me? my father was no traitor:
Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much
To think my poverty is treacherous.
Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.
Duke F. Ay, Celia; we stay'd her for your sake,
Else had she with her father ranged along. 70
Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay;
It was your pleasure and your own remorse:
I was too young that time to value her;
But now I know her: if she be a traitor,
Why so am I; we still have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, eat together,
And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable.
Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and her Smoothness,
Her very silence and her patience
Speak to the people, and they pity her.
Thou art a fool: she robs thee of thy name;
And thou wilt show more bright and seem more Virtuous
When she is gone. Then open not thy lips:
Firm and irrevocable is my doom:
Which I have pass'd upon her; she is banish'd.
Cel. Pronounce that sentence then on me, my
liege:
I cannot live out of her company.
Duke F. You are a fool. You, niece, provide
yourself:
If you outstay the time, upon mine honour,
And in the greatness of my word, you die.

[Exit Duke Frederick and Lords.]

Cel. O my poor Rosalind, whither wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine. I charge thee, be not thou more grieved than I am.

Rosalind. I have more cause.

Cel. Thou hast not, cousin; my charge Rosalind.

Ros. Prithie, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke Hath banish'd me, his daughter?

Cel. No, hath not? Rosalind lacks then the love
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one:
Shall we be sunder'd shall we part, sweet girl?

No: let my father seek another heir.

Therefore devise with me how we may fly, Whither to go and what to bear with us; And do not seek to take your change upon you, To bear your griefs yourself and leave me out; For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale, Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.

Ros. Why, whither shall we go?

Cel. To seek my uncle in the forest of Arden.

Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us, maidens as we are, to travel forth so far! Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.

Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire
And with a kind ofumber smirch my face;
The like do you; so shall we pass along
And never stir assultants.

Ros. Were it not better, Because that I am more than common tall, That I did suit me all points like a man? A gallant curtale-axe upon my thigh, A boar-spear in my hand; and— in my heart Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will— We'll have a swashing and a martial outside, As many other mannish cowards have That do outface it with their semblances.

Cel. What shall I call thee when thou art a man?

Ros. I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own page; And therefore look you, call me Ganymede. But what will you be call'd?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state.

No longer Celia, but Aliena.

Ros. But, cousin, what if we assay'd to steal The clownish fool out of your father's court? Would he not be a comfort to our travel?

Cel. He'll go along o' the wide world with me; Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away, And get our jewels and our wealth together, Devise the fittest time and safest way To hide us from pursuit that will be made After my flight. Now go we in content To liberty and not to banishment. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke senior, Amiens, and two or three Lords, like foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile,
Hath not old custom made this life more sweet

Than that of painted pomps? Are not these woods More free from peril than the envious court? Here feel we but the penalty of Adam, The man's difference, as the icy fang And churlish chiding of the winter's wind, Which, when it bites and blows upon my body, Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say 'This is no flattering: these are counsellors That feelingly persuade me what I am.' Sweet are the uses of adversity,

Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head; And this our life exempt from public haunt Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,

Sermons in stones and good in every thing,

I would not change it.

Ami. Happy is your grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it like me the poor dappled foals, Being the breeders of this desert city, Should in their own confines with forked heads Have their round haunches gored.

First Lord. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques grieves at that,
And in that kind, swears you do more usurp Than doth your brother that hath banish'd you. To-day my Lord of Amiens and myself Did steal behind him as he lay along

Under an oak whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that-brawls along this wood:
To the which place a poor sequester'd stag, That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt, Did come to languish, and indeed, my lord, The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat Almost to bursting, and the big round tears Cours'd one another down his innocent nose In piteous chase; and thus the hairy fool,

Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques? Did he not moralize this spectable?

First Lord. O, yes, into a thousand similes, First, for his weeping into the needless stream; Poor deer,' quoth he 'thou makest a testament As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more To that which had too much': then, being there alone,

Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends, 'Tis right, quoth he 'thus misery doth part The flux of company;' anon a careless herd, Full of the pasture, jumps along by him And never stays to greet him; 'Ay,' quoth Jaques, 'Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens; 'Tis just the fashion: wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there?' Thus most inventively he pierced through The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life, swearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants and what's worse, To fright the animals and to kill them up In their assign'd and native dwelling-place.

Duke S. And did you leave him in this contemplation?
Scene I.

Sec. Lord. We did, my lord, weeping and commenting Upon the sobbing deer.
Duke S. Show me the place:
I love to cope him in these sullen fits,
For then he’s full of matter.
First Lord. I’ll bring you to him straight.
[Exeunt.]

Scene II.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.
Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them?
It cannot be: some villains of my court
Are of consent and sufferance in this.
First Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her,
The ladies, her attendants of her chamber,
Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early
They found the bed untreasured of their mistress.
Sec. Lord. My lord, the roysth, clant, at whom so oft
Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing.
Hisperia, the princess’ gentlewoman,
Confesses that she secretly o’her heard
Your daughter and her cousin much commend
The parts and graces of the wrestler.
That did but lately foil the sinewy Charles;
And she believes, wherever they are gone,
That youth is surely in their company.
Duke F. Send to his brother; fetch that gallant hither;
If he be absent, bring his brother to me;
I will make him find him: do this suddenly,
And let not search and inquisition quail
To bring again these foolish runaway. [Exeunt.]

Scene III.

Before Oliver’s house.
Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.
Orl. Who’s there?
Adam. What, my young master? O my gentle master!
O my sweet master! O you memory
Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here?
Why are you virtuous? why do people love you?
And therefore are you gentle, strong and valiant?
Why would you hurt food to overcome
The bonny prizer of the humorous duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
Know you not, master, to some kind of men
Their graces serve them but as enemies?
No more do yours: your virtues, gentle master,
Are sandaled and holy traitors to you.
O, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it!
Orl. Why, what’s the matter?
Adam. O unhappy youth!
Come not within these doors; within this roof
The enemy of all your graces lives;
Your brother—no, no brother; yet the son—
Yet not the son, I will not call him son
Of him I was about to call his father—
Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
To burn the lodging where you use to lie
And you within it: if he fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off.
Overheard him and his practices.

This is no place; this house is but a butchery:
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.
Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go?
Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.
Orl. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food?
Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road?
This I must do, or know not what to do:
Yet this I will not do, do how I can;
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood and bloody brother.
Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred Crowns, The thrifty hire I saved under your father,
Which I did store to be my foster-nurse
When service should in my old limbs lie lame
And unregarded age in corners thrown:
Take that, and He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold;
All this I give you. Let me be your servant:
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood,
Nor did not with unasham’d forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility;
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty, but kindly: let me go with you;
I’ll do the service of a younger man
In all your business and necessities.
Orl. O good old man, how well in thee appears
The constant service of the antique world,
When service sweet for duty, not for need!
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion,
And having that, do choke their service up
Even with the having: it is not so with thee.
But, poor old man, thou prunest a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come thy ways; we’ll go along together,
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We’ll light upon some settled low content.
Adam. Master, go on, and I will follow thee,
To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty.
From seventeen years till now almost fourscore
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week:
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better
Than to die well and not my master’s debtor.
[Exeunt.]

Scene IV. The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind for Ganymede, Celia for Aliena, and Touchstone.
Ros. O Jupiter, how weary are my spirits! Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.
Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man’s apparel and to cry like a woman; but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat:
therefore courage, good Aliena!
Cor. I pray you, bear with me; I cannot go no further.

Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you than bear you; yet I should bear no cross if I did bear you, for I think you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the forest of Arden.

Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden; the more fool I; when I was at home, I was in a better place: but travellers must be content.

Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Look you, who comes here; a young man and an old in solemn talk.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still.

Sil. O Corin, that thou know'st how I do love her!

Cor. I partly guess; for I have loved ere now.

Sil. No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess, Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover As ever sight'd upon a midnight pillow: But if thy love were ever like to mine, As sure I think did never man love so— How many actions most ridiculous Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy?

Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.

Sil. O, thou didst then ne'er love so heartily!

If thou remember'st not the slightest folly That ever love did make thee run into, Thou hast not loved:

Or if thou hast not sat as I do now, Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress' praise, Thou hast not loved:

Or if thou hast not broke from company Abruptly, as my passion now makes me, Thou hast not loved.

O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe! [Exit.

Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound, I have by hard adventure found mine own.

Touch. And mine. I remember, when I was in love I broke my sword upon a stone and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile: and I remember the kissing of her batlet and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked; and I remember the wooing of a peascod instead of her, from whom I took two cobs and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears 'I wear these for my sake.' We that are true lovers run into strange capers: but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Ros. Thou speakest wiser than thou art ware of.

Touch. Nay, I shall ne'er be ware of mine own wit till I break my shins against it.

Ros. I love, I love! this shepherd's passion Is much upon my fashion.

Touch. And mine; but it grows something stale with me.

Cel. I pray you, one of you question yond man If he for gold will give us any food: I faint almost to death.

Touch. Holla, you clown!

Ros. Peace, fool: he's not thy kinsman.

Cor. Who calls?

Touch. Your betters, sir.

Ros. Peace, I say. Good even to you, friend, And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.

Ros. I prithee, shepherd, if that love or gold Can in this desert place buy entertainment, Bring us where we may rest ourselves and feed; Here's a young maid with travel much oppress'd And faints for succour.

Cor. Fair sir, I pity her And wish, for her sake more than for mine own, My fortunes were more able to relieve her; But I am shepherd to another man And do not shear the fleeces that I graze: My master is of churlish disposition And little recks to find the way to heaven By doing deeds of hospitality:

Ros. Besides, his cote, his hocks and bounds of feed Are now on sale, and at our sheeprace now, By reason of his absence, there is nothing That you will feed on: but what is, come see, And in my voice most welcome shall you be.

Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?

Cor. That young swain that you saw here but erewhile, That little cares for buying any thing.

Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty, Buy thou the cottage, pasture and the flock, And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

Cel. And we will mend thy wages. I like this place, And willingly could waste my time in it.

Cor. Assuredly the thing is to be sold: Go with me: if you like upon report The soil, the profit and this kind of life, I will your very faithful feeder be And buy it with your gold right suddenly. [Exeunt.

Scene V. The forest.

Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.

Song.

Ami. Under the greenwood tree Who loves to lie with me, And turn his merry note Unto the sweet bird's throat, Come hither, come hither, come hither: Here shall he see No enemy But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more, I prithee, more.

Ami. It will make you melancholy, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, I prithee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs. More, I prithee, more.

Ami. My voice is ragged: I know I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more; another stanza; call you 'em stanzos?

Ami. What you will, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?
Scene v.

Ami. More at your request than to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I’ll thank you; but that they call compliment is like the encounter of two dog-apes, and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks I have given him a penny and he renders me the beggarly thanks.

Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I’ll end the song. Sirs, cover the hole; the duke will drink under this tree. He hath been all this day to look you.

Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come.

Scene VI. The forest.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no further: O, I die for food! Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Ori. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little. If this uncouth forest yield any thing savage, I will either be food for it or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm’s end: I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou lookest cheerily, and I’ll be with thee quickly. Yet thou liest in the bed: come, I will bear thee to some shelter; and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam!

Scene VII. The forest.

A table set out. Enter Duke senior, Amiens, and Lords like outlaws.

Duke S. I think he be transform’d into a beast; For I can no where find him like a man.

First Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence.

Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical, We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.

Go, seek him: tell him I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

First Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.

Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this, That your poor friends must woo your company? What, you look merrily!

Jaq. A fool, a fool! I met a fool the forest, A motley fool; a miserable wight. As I do live by that fool: Who laid him down and bask ’d him in the sun, And r veil’d on Lady Fortune in good terms, In good set terms and yet a motley fool.

‘Good morrow, fool,’ quoth I. ‘No, sir,’ quoth he,

‘Call me not fool till heaven hath sent me fortune.’

And then he drew a dial from his poke,

And, looking on it with lack-lustre eye,

Says very wisely, ‘It is ten o’clock:

Thus we may see,’ quoth he, ‘how the world wags:

’Tis but an hour ago since it was nine,

And after one hour more ‘twill be eleven;

And so, from hour to hour, we ripe and ripe,

And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot;

And thereby hangs a tale. When I did hear

The motley fool thus moral on the time,

My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,

That fools should be so deep-contemplative,

And I did laugh sans intermission

An hour by his dial. O noble fool!

A worthy fool! Motley’s the only wear.

Duke S. What, what!

Jaq. O worthy fool! One that hath been a courtier,

And says, if ladies be but young and fair,

They have the gift to know it: and in his brain,

Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit

After a voyage, he hath strange places cram’d

With observation, the which he vents

In mangled forms. O that I were a fool!

I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

Jaq. It is my only suit;

Provided that you weed your better judgements

Of all opinion that grows rank in them

That I am wise. I must have liberty

Withal, as large a charter as the wind,

To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;

And they that are most galled with my folly,

They must must laugh. And why, sir, must they so?

The ‘why’ is plain as way to parish church:

He that a fool doth very wisely hit

Doth very foolishly, although he smart,

Not to seem senseless of the bob: if not,

The wise man’s folly is anatomized

Even by the squandering glances of the fool.

Invest me in my motley: give me leave

[Exeunt.]
To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the soul body of the infected world, 60
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

_Duke S._ Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.

_Jaq._ What, for a counter, would I do but good?

_Duke S._ Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding sin:
For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself; 70
And all the embossed sores and headed evils,
That thou with license of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

_Jaq._ Why, who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea,
Till that the weary very means do ebb?
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say the city-woman bears
The unboned encumbrances on unworthy shoulders?
Who can come in and say that I mean her, 80
When such a one as she such is her neighbour?
Or what is he of basest function
That says his bravery is not of my cost,
Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits
His folly to the mettle of my speech?
There then; how then? what then? Let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong’d him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong’d himself: if he be free,
Why then my taxing like a wild-goose flies,
Unclaim’d of any man. But who comes here?

_Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn._

_Orl._ Forbear, and eat no more.

_Jaq._ Why, I have eat none yet.

_Orl._ Nor shalt not, till necessity be served.

_Jaq._ Of what kind should this cock come of?

_Duke S._ Art thou thus bolden’d, man, by thy distress,
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem’st so empty?

_Orl._ You touch’d my vein at first: the thorny point
Of bare distress hath ta’en from me the show
Of smooth civility: yet am I inland bred
And know some nurture. But forbear, I say:
He dies that touches any of this fruit
Till I and my affairs are answered.

_Jaq._ An you will not be answered with reason, I must die.

_Duke S._ What would you have? Your gentleness shall force
More than your force move us to gentleness.

_Orl._ I must die for food; and let me have it.

_Duke S._ Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

_Orl._ Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you:
I thought that all things had been savage here;
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of stern commandment. But whate’er you are
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time;
If ever you have look’d on better days,
If ever been where bells have knoll’d to church,
If ever sat at any good man’s feast,
If ever from your eyelids wiped a tear
And know what ‘tis to pity and be pitied,
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be;
In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

_Duke S._ True is it that we have seen better days,
And have with holy bell been knoll’d to church
And sat at good men’s feasts and wiped our eyes
Of drops that sacred pity hath engender’d:
And therefore sit you down in gentleness
And take upon command what help we have
That to your wanting may be minister’d.

_Orl._ Then but forbear your food a little while,
While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step.

_Limp’d in pure love: till he be first sufficed,
Oppress’d with two weak evils, age and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.

_Duke S._ Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.

_Orl._ I thank ye; and be blest for your good comfort!

_[Exit._

_Duke S._ Thou seest we are not all alone unhappy:
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play in.

_Jaq._ All the world’s a stage,
And all the men and women merely players: 140
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first the infant,
Mewing and puking in the nurse’s arms.
And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woful ballad
Made to his mistress’ eyebrow. Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon’s mouth. And then the justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lined,
With eyes severe and bearded of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And then he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper’d pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side, 159
His youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

_Re-enter Orlando, with Adam._

_Duke S._ Welcome. Set down your venerable burthen,
And let him feed.

_Orl._ I thank you most for him.

_Adam._ So had you need: I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

_Duke S._ Welcome; fall to: I will not trouble you.

_As you to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing._
Scene VII.

As you like it.

Song.

Ami. Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh-ho! sing, heigh-ho! into the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh-ho, the holly!

This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
That dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.

Heigh-ho! sing, &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son,
As you have whisper'd faithfully you were,
And as mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly im'd and living in your face,
Be truly welcome hither: I am the duke
That loved your father: the residue of your fortune,
Go to my cave and tell me. Good old man,
Thou art right welcome as thy master is.
Support him by the arm. Give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exit.

ACT III.

Scene I. A room in the palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Oliver.

Duke F. Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be;
But were I not the better part made mercy,
I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:
Find out thy brother, wheresoe'er he is;
Seek him with candle; bring him dead or living
Within this twelveth month, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory.
Thy lands and all things that thou dost call thine
Worth seizure do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth
Of what we think against thee.

Ol: O that your highness knew my heart
in this!
I never loved my brother in my life.

Duke F. More villain thou. Well, push him out of doors;
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands:
Do this expeditiously and turn him going. [Exit.

Scene II. The forest.

Enter Orlando, with a paper.

Orl. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And thou, thrice-crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye which in this forest looks
Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.

Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life,
Master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself,
It is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well;
but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now, in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well;
but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?

Cor. No more but that I know the more one sickens the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means and content is without three good friends; that the property of rain is to wet and fire to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep, and that a great cause of the night is lack of the sun; that he that hath learned no wit by nature nor art may complain of good breeding or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher.
Wast ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damned.

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Touch. Truly, thou art damned like an ill roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never sawest good manners; if thou never sawest good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.

Cor. Not a whit, Touchstone: those that are good manners at the court are as ridiculous in the country as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court. You told me you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands:
that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes, and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweet? and is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, I say; come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner.
Shallow again. A more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! thou worms-meat, in respect of a good piece of flesh indeed! Learn of the wise, and perpend: civet is of a baser than tar, the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too courtly a wit for me:
I'll rest.

Touch. Wilt thou rest damned? God help thee, shallow man! God make incision in thee! thou art raw.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good, content with my harm, and the greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze and my lambs suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you, to bring the ewes and the rams together and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle; 'tis bawd to a bell-wether, and to betray a she-lamb of a twelvemonth to a crooked-pated, old, cuckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou beest not damned for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou should'st scape.

Cor. Here comes young Master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, with a paper, reading.

Rosalind. From the east to western Ind, No jewel is like Rosalind. Her worth, being mounted on the wind, Through all the world bears Rosalind. All the pictures fairest lined Are but black to Rosalind. Let no fair be kept in mind But the fair of Rosalind. I'll rhyme you so eight years together, dinners and suppers and sleeping-hours excepted: it is the right butter-women's rank to market.

Rosalind. Out, fool! For a taste: If a hart do lack a hind, Let him seek out Rosalind. If the cat will after kind, So be sure will Rosalind. Winter garments must be lined, So must slender Rosalind. They that reap must sheaf and bind; Then to cart with Rosalind. Sweetest nut hath sourest rind, Such a nut is Rosalind. He that sweetest rose will find Must find love's prick and Rosalind.

This is the very false gallop of verses: why do you infect yourself with them?

Rosalind. Peace, you dull fool! I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit. I'll graff it with you, and then I shall graff it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit in the country; for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, with a writing.

Celia. Peace!

Here comes my sister, reading: stand aside.

Celia. [Reads]

Why should this a desert be?
For it is unpeopled? No;
Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings show:
She, how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age;

Some, of violated vows
'Twixt the souls of friend and friend:
But upon the fairest boughs,
Or at every sentence end,
Will I Rosalind write,

Touch. Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little show.

Therefore Heaven Nature charged
That one body should be fill'd
With all graces wide-enlarged:
Nature presently distill'd

Celia. Helen's cheek, but not her heart,
Cleopatra's majesty,
Atalanta's better part,
Sad Lucretia's modesty.
Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly synod was devised,
Of many faces, eyes and hearts,
To have the touches dearest prized.

Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

Rosalind. O most gentle pulpit! what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried 'Have patience, good people'!

Celia. How now! back, friends! Shepherd, go off a little. Go with him, sirrah.

Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

Celia. Didst thou hear these verses?

Rosalind. O, yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Celia. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses.

Rosalind. Ay, but the feet were lame and could not bear themselves without the verse and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Celia. But didst thou hear without wondering how thy name should be hangéd and carved upon these trees?

Rosalind. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder before you came; for look here what I found on a palm-tree. I was never so bemused since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Celia. Trow you who hath done this?

Rosalind. Is it a man?

Celia. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck. Change you colour?

Rosalind. I prithee, who?

Celia. O Lord, Lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes and so encounter.

Rosalind. Nay, but who is it?

Celia. Is it possible?

Rosalind. Nay, I prithee now with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Celia. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful! and yet again wonderful, and after that out of all hoping.

Rosalind. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am capricious like a man, I have a Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Re-enter Orlando and Jaques.

[The boy is brought in; he is dressed as a woman.] Orlando: O, holla, and note him. I said, 'tis no means fair. Time travels in divers places with divers persons. I'll tell you what. Where thou dost find a woman, when thou dost find her, I pray you, ask what time o' day. If she ask you what time o' day, go ask her what time o' day. If she say, 'Tis a fault I will not change for a foot of Time; if she say, 'Tis a fault I will not change for a foot o' Time, you may say, 'Tis a fault I will not change for a foot o' Time, and she shall see him.

Re-enter Orlando and Jaques.

[The boy is brought in; he is dressed as a woman.] Orlando: O, holla, and note him. I said, 'tis no means fair. Time travels in divers places with divers persons. I'll tell you what. Where thou dost find a woman, when thou dost find her, I pray you, ask what time o' day. If she ask you what time o' day, go ask her what time o' day. the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury; these Time ambles withal.

Ori. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows, for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.

Ori. Who stays it still withal?

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and term and then they perceive not how Time moves.

Ori. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Ori. Are you native of this place?

Ros. As the coney that you see dwell where she is kindled.

Ori. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many: but indeed an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love.

I have heard him read many lectures against it, and I thank God I am not a woman, to be touched with so many giddy offences as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.

Ori. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal: they were all like one another as half-pence are, every one fault seeming monstrous till his fellow-fault came to match it.

Ori. I prithee, recount some of them.

Ros. No, I will not cast away my physic but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving 'Rosalind' on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns and elegies on brambles, all, forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind: if I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotation of love upon him.

Ori. I am he that is so love-shaked: I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you: he taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes I am sure you are not prisoner.

Ori. What were his marks?

Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not, a blue eye and sunken, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not, a beard neglected, which you have not; but I pardon you for that, for simply your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue: then your hose should be ungarnted, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied and every thing else that you demonstrating a careless desolation; but you are no such man; you are rather point-device in your accoutrements as loving yourself than seeming the lover of any other.

Ori. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it! you may as soon make her you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do than to confess she does: that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth,
And. I do not know what 'poetical' is: is it nest in deed and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly; for the truest poetry is most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry, what they swear in poetry may be said as they do feast.

And. Do you wish then that the gods had de me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly; for thou swearest to me in art honest; now, if thou wert a poet, I shght have some hope thou didst feign.

And. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No, truly, unless thou wert hardened; for honesty coupled to beauty is to see honey a sauce to sugar.

And. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods in foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy faults; sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it may be, I will marry thee, and to that end have been with Sir Oliver Martext, the vicar of next village, who hath promised to meet me this place of the forest and to couple us.

And. I would see this meeting.

Touch. Well, the gods give us joy!

Touch. Amen. A man may, if he were of a lawful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here have no temple but the wood, no assembly of horn-beasts. But what thought? Courage! horns are odious, they are necessary. It is d, 'many a man knows no end of his goods: Iht; many a man has good horns, and knows end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his fe;' 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even Poor men alone? No, no; the noblest deer tham as huge as the rascal. Is the single in therefore blessed? No: as a walled town more worthier than the village, is so the forehead a married man more honourable than the bare ow of a bachelor; and by how much defence better than no skill, by so much is a horn more efficacious than to want. Here comes Sir Oliver.

Enter Sir Oliver Martext.

Sir Ol. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man.

Sir Ol. Truly, she must be given, or the arriage is not lawful.

[Exeunt Jaques, Touchstone and Audrey.]

Scene IV. The forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. Never talk to me; I will weep.

Cel. Do, I prithee; but yet have the grace to consider that tears do not become a man.

Ros. But have I not cause to weep?

Cel. As good cause as one would desire; therefore weep.

Ros. His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Cel. Something browner than Judas's: marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

Ros. 'Tis my faith, his hair is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Ros. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.

Cel. He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them.

Ros. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.

Ros. Do you think so?

Cel. Yes; I think he is not a pick-purse nor a horse-stealer, but for his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet or a worm-eaten nut.

Ros. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in; but I think he is not in.

Ros. You have heard him swear downright he was.

Cel. 'Was' is not 'is'; besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confirmer of false reckonings. He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.
Ros. I met the duke yesterday and had much question with him: he asked me of what parentage I was; I told him, of as good as he; so he laughed and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Cel. O, that’s a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover; as a pensive tilt, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose; but all’s brave that youth mounts and folly guides. Who comes here?

Enter Corin.

Cor. Mistress and master, you have oft inquired
After the shepherd that complain’d of love,
Who you saw sitting by me on the turf,
Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess
That was his mistress.

Cel. Well, and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play’d,
Between the pale complexion of true love
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,
So hence a little and I shall conduct you,
If you will mark it.

Ros. O, come, let us remove:
The sight of lovers feedeth those in love.

Bring us to this sight, and you shall say
I’ll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exeunt.

Scene V. Another part of the forest.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Sil. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe;
Say that you love me not, but say not so
In bitterness. The common executioner,
Whose heart the accustom’d sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the axe upon the humble neck
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Cecilia, and Corin, behind.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner:
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell’st me there is murder in mine eye:
’Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
That eyes, that are the frailst and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call’d tyrants, butchers, murderers!

Now I do frown on thee with all my heart;
And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee:
Now counterfeit to swoon; why now fall down;
Or if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers!

Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee:
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Sil. O dear Phebe,

If ever,—as that ever may be near,—
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That he’s been keen arrows make.

Phe. But till that time
Come thou not near me: and when that time
comes,
Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not;
As till that time I shall not pity thee.

Ros. And why, I pray you? Who might I
That you insult, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched? What though you have beauty,—
As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without candle may go dark to bed—
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?

Why, what means this? Why do you look on me
I see no more in you than in the ordinary
Of nature’s sale-work. ’O’d my little life,
I think she means to tangle my eyes too!

No, faith, proud mistress, hope not after it:
’Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow me
Like foggy south puffing with wind and rain?

You are a thousand times a properer man
Than she a woman: ’tis such fools as you
That makes the world full of ill-favour’d children.
’Tis not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And if you see her, she sees herself more proper Than any of her lineaments can show her.

But, mistress, know yourself: down on your knees,
And thank heaven, fasting, for a good man’s love.

For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:

Cry the man mercy; love him; take his offer:

Yet is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer.

So take her to thee, shepherd: fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you, chide a yet together:
I had rather hear you chide than this man woo.

Ros. He’s fallen in love with your fowle and she’ll fall in love with my anger. If it be so fast as she answers thee with frowning looks I’ll scarce her with bitter words. Why look yo so upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I bear you.

Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am failer than vows made in wine:

Besides, I like you not. If you will know my house
’Tis at the tuft of olives here hard by.

Will you go, sister? Shepherd, ply her hard.

Come, sister. Shepherdess, look on him better,
And be not proud: though all the world could see None could be so abused in sight as he.

Come, to our flock.

[Exeunt Rosalind, Cecilia and Corin.

Phe. Dead shepherd, now I find thy saw of might

’Who ever loved that loved not at first sight?’

Sil. Sweet Phebe,—

Phe. Ha, what sayst thou, Silvius?

Sil. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius

Phe. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be:
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,

By giving love your sorrow and my grief

Were both exterminated.
He. Thou hast my love; is not that neighbourly? 90
iil. I would have you.
He. Why, that were covetousness. vius, the time was that I hated thee, d yet it is not that I bear thee love; t since that thou canst talk of love so well, y company, which erst was irksome to me, ill endure, and I'll employ thee too; i do not look for further recompense an thine own gladness that thou art employ'd. 100 silt. So holy and so perfect is my love, d I in such a poverty of grace, that I shall think it a most plenteous crop - glean the broken ears after the man at the main harvest reaps: loose now and then scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.
He. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me erewhile?
Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft; d he hath bought the cottage and the bounds at the old carlot once was master of.
Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him; is but a peevish boy; yet he talks well; 110 at what care I for words? yet words do well hen he that speaks them pleases those that hear. is a pretty youth: not very pretty: it, sure, he's proud, and yet his pride becomes he'll make a proper man: the best thing in him his complexion; and faster than his tongue id make offence his eye did heal it up. e is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall: is leg is but so so; and yet 'tis well; were a pretty redness in his lip, little riper and more lusty red ran that mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the differ- ence stwixt the constant red and mingled damask, here be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him? i pleased as I did, would have gone near a fall in love with him; but, for my part, love him not nor hate him not; and yet have more cause to hate him than to love him: or what had he to do to chide at me? e said mine eyes were black and my hair black; nd, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me: 120 marvel why I answer'd not again: that's all one; omittance is no quittance. 'I'll write to him a very taunting letter, nd thou shalt bear it: wilt thou, Silvius? Silt. Phebe, with all my heart. Phe. I'll write it straight; he matter's in my head and in my heart: will be bitter with him and passing short. to me, Silvius. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The forest.

Enter ROSALIND, CELIA, and JAQUES.

Jaq. I prithee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.
Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.
Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than laughing.
Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are abominable fellows and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.
Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.

Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation, nor the musician's, which is fantastical, nor the courtier's, which is proud, nor the soldier's, which is ambitious, nor the lawyer's, which is politic, nor the lady's, which is nice, nor the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear you have sold your own lands to see other men's; then, to have seen much and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jaq. Yes. I have gained my experience.
Ros. And your experience makes you sad: I had rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad; and to travel for it too!

Enter ORLANDO.

Orl. Good day and happiness, dear Rosalind! Jaq. Nay, then, God be wi' you, as you talk in blank verse. [Exit.

Ros. Farewell, Monsieur Traveller: look you lies and wear strange suits, disable all the benefits of your own country, be out of love with your nativity and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are, or I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola. Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover! An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapped him o' the shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart-whole.

Orl. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight: I had as lief be wood of a snail.

Orl. Of a snail?

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head; a better jointure, I think, than you make a woman: besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns, which such as you are fain to be beholding to your wives for: but he comes armed in his fortune and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Cel. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better hearer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me, for now I am in a holiday humour and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, an I were your very very Rosalind?

Orl. I would kiss before I spoke.

221
Ros. Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers lacking—God warn us!—matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Orl. If the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty ranker than my wit.

Orl. What of, my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well in her person I say I will not have you.

Orl. Then in mine own person I die.

Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, videlicit, in a love-case. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night: for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont and being taken with the cramp was drowned: and the foolish coroners of that age found it was 'Hero of Sestos.' But these are all lies: men have died from time to time and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind, for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly. But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on disposition, and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me, Rosalind.

Ros. Yes, faith, will I, Fridays and Saturdays and all.

Orl. And wilt thou have me?

Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Orl. What sayest thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so.

Ros. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing? Come, sister, you shall be the priest and marry us. Give me your hand, Orlando. What do you say, sister?

Orl. Pray thee, marry us,

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin, 'Will you, Orlando—'

Cel. Go to. Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Orl. I will.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Orl. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say 'I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.'

Orl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband: there's a girl goes before the priest; and certainly a woman's thought runs before her actions.
In love! But it cannot be sounded: my Edition hath an unknown bottom, like the bay
Portugual.
Ced. Or rather, bottomless, that as fast as you affection in, it runs out.
Ros. No, that same wicked bastard of Venus it was begot of thought, conceived of spleen horm of madness, that blind rascally boy that uses every one's eyes because his own are out, im be judge how deep I am in love. I'll thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of lando: I'll go find a shadow and sigh till he me.
Ced. And I'll sleep. [Exit.

SCENE II. The forest.

Enter Jaques, Lords, and Foresters.
Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer?
A Lord. Sir, it was I.
Jaq. Let's present him to the duke, like a man conqueror; and it would do well to set a deer's horns upon his head, for a branch of story. Have you no song, forester, for this pose?
For. Yes, sir.
Jaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, it make noise enough.

Song.
For. What shall he have that kill'd the deer?
His leather skin and horns to wear.
Then sing him home;
[The rest shall bear this burden.
Take thou no scorn to wear the horn;
It was a crest ere thou wast born:
Thy father's father wore it,
And thy father bore it: The horn, the horn, the lusty horn
Is not a thing to laugh to scorn. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The forest.
Enter Rosalind and Celia.
Ros. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? and here much Orlando!
Ced. I warrant you, with pure love and troubl brain, he hath ta'en his bow and arrows and gone forth to sleep. Look, who comes here.

Enter Silvius.
Sil. My errand is to you, fair youth;
y gentle Phebe bid me give you this:
know not the contents: but, as I guess the stern brow and waspish action hich she did use as she was writing of it, bears an angry tenour: pardon me:
am but as a guiltless messenger.
Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter
nd play the swaggerer; bear this, bear all:
he says I am not fair, that I lack manners
he calls me proud, and that she could not love me,
'ere man as rare as phœnix. 'Od's my will!
'er love is not the hare that I do hunt:
'hy writes she to me? Well, shepherd, well, his is a letter of your own device.
Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents:

Phèbe did write it.
Ros. Come, come, you are a fool
And turn'd into the extremity of love.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand,
A freestone-colour'd hand; I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands:
She has a huswife's hand; but that's no matter:
I say she never did invent this letter;
This is a man's invention and his hand.
Sil. Sure, it is hers.
Ros. Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style,
A style for challengers; why, she defies me,
Like Turk to Christian: women's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant-rude invention,
Such Ethiope words, blacker in their effect Than in their countenance. Will you hear the letter?
Sil. So please you, for I never heard it yet;
Yet heard too much of Phèbe's cruelty.
Ros. She Phèbes me: mark how the tyrant writes. [Reads.
Art thou god to shepherd turn'd;
That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?
Can a woman rail thus?
Sil. Call you this railing?
Ros. [Reads]
Why, thy godhead laid apart,
Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?
Did you ever hear such railing?
Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me.
Meaning me a beast.
If the scorn of your bright eye
Have power to raise such love in mine,
Alack, in me what strange effect
Would they work in mild aspect!
Whiles you chid me, I did love;
How then might your prayers move!
He that brings this love to thee
Little knows this love in me:
And by him seal up thy mind;
Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer take
Of me and all that I can make;
Or else by him my love deny,
And then I'll study how to die.
Sil. Call you this chiding?
Ced. Alas, poor shepherd!
Ros. Do you pity him? no, he deserves no pity.
Wilt thou love such a woman? What, to make thee an instrument and play false strains upon thee! not to be endured! Well, go your way to her, for I see love hath made thee a tame snake, and say this to her: that if she love me,
I charge her to love thee; if she will not, I will never have her unless thou entreat for her. If you be a true lover, hence, and not a word; for here comes more company. [Exit Silvius.

Enter Oliver.
Oli. Good morrow, fair ones: pray you, if you know,
Where in the purlieus of this forest stands
A sheep-cote fenced about with olive trees?
Ced. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom:
The rank of osiers by the murmuring stream.
Left on your right hand brings you to the place.
But at this hour the house doth keep itself.
There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue, Then should I know you by description; Such garments and such years: 'The boy is fair, Of female favour, and bestows himself † Like a ripe sister; the woman low And browner than her brother.' Are not you The owner of the house I did inquire for?

Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say we are. Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both, And to that youth he calls his Rosalind

He sends this bloody napkin. Are you he?

Ros. I am: what must we understand by this?

Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me What man I am, and how, and why, and where This handkercher was stain'd.

Cel. I pray you, tell it. Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you He left a promise to return again Within an hour, and pacing through the forest, Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy, Lo, what befel! he threw his eye aside, And mark what object did present itself: Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age And high top braid with dry antiquity, A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair, Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck A green and gilded snake had wreathed itself, Who with her head nimble in threats approach'd The opening of his mouth; but suddenly, Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself, And with indented glides did slip away Into a bush; under which bush's shade A lioness, with udders all drawn dry, Lay coughing, head on ground, with catlike watch, When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis The royal disposition of that beast To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead: This seen, Orlando did approach the man And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

Cel. O, I have heard him speak of that same brother; And he did render him the most unnatural That lived amongst men. Oli. And well he might so do, For well I know he was unnatural. Ros. But, to Orlando: did he leave him there, Food to the suck’d and hungry lioness? Oli. Twice did he turn his back and purposed so: But kindness, nobler ever than revenge, And nature, stronger than his just occasion, Made him give battle to the lioness, Who quickly fell before him: in which hurting From miserable slumber I awaked. Cel. Are you his brother?

Ros. Was’t you he rescued? Cel. Was’t you that did so oft contrive to kill him?

Oli. ’Twas I; but 'tis not I: I do not shame To tell you what I was, since my conversion So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am. Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?

Oli. By and by. When from the first to last betwixt us two Tears our recantments had most kindly bathed, As how I came into that desert place:— In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,

Who gave me fresh array and entertainment, Committing me unto my brother’s love; Who led me instantly unto his cave, There stripp’d himself, and here upon his arm The lioness had torn some flesh away, Which all this while he had bled; and now he fainted And cried, in fainting, upon Rosalind.

Brief, I recover’d him, bound up his wound; And, after some small space, being strong at heart, He sent me hither, stranger as I am, To tell this story, that you might excuse His broken promise, and to give this napkin Dyed in his blood unto the shepherd youth That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

Ros. Swoons.

Cel. Why, how now, Ganymede! sweet Ganymede! Oli. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.

Cel. There is more in it. Oli. Cousin Ganymede.

Cel. Look, he recovers.

Ros. I would I were at home.

Cel. We'll lead you thither. I pray you, will you take him by the arm? Oli. Be of good cheer, youth: you a man you lack a man’s heart.

Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah, a body would think this was well counterfeited! I pray you, tell your brother how well I counterfeited.

Oli. This was not counterfeited: there is too great testimony in your complexion that it was a passion of earnest. Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you. Oli. Well then, take a good heart and counterfeit to be a man. Ros. So I do: but, ‘tis faith, I should have been a woman by right.

Cel. Come, you look paler and paler: pray you, draw homewards. Oli. Good sir, go with us.

Cel. That will I, for I must bear answer back How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall devise something: but, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him. Will you go?

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Scene I. The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey: patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman’s saying.

Touch. A most wicked Sir Oliver, Audrey, as vile Martext. But, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who ‘tis: he hath no interest in me in the world: here comes the man you mean.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown: by my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for; we shall be flouting we cannot hold.

Enter William.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

SCENE I.

Will. And good even to you, sir.
Touch. Good even, gentle friend. Cover thy bed, cover thy head; nay, prithee, be covered. How old are you, friend? 29

Will. Five and twenty, sir.
Touch. A ripe age. Is thy name William?
Will. William, sir.
Touch. A fair name. Worn bast in'the forest ere?
Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.
Touch. 'Thank God;' a good answer. Art rich?
Will. Faith, sir, so so.
Touch. 'So so' is good, very good, very excellent good; and yet it is not; it is but so so. Art thou wise?
Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.
Touch. Why, thou sayest well. I do now remember a saying: 'The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool.' The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby that raps were made to eat and lips to open. You to love this maid?
Will. No, sir.
Touch. Then learn this of me: to have, is to have; for it is a figure in rhetoric that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling he one doth empty the other; for all your writers do confess that: Isee; now you are not pse, for I am he.
Will. Which he, sir?
Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman. Therefore, you clown, abandon,—which is in the vulgar leave,—the society,—which in the boorish company,—of this female,—which in the common woman; which together is, abandon the society of this female, or, clown, thou perishest; r, to thy better understanding, diest; or, to wit, kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deal a poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel; will bandy with thee in faction; I will o'er-run the paths; I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways: therefore tremble, and depart.
Aud. Do, good William.
Will. God rest you merry, sir. [Exit.

Enter CORIN.

Cor. Our master and mistress seeks you: one, away, away!
Touch. Trip, Audrey! trip, Audrey! I attend, I attend. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The forest.

Enter ORLANDO AND OLIVER.

Orl. Is't possible that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that but seeing you should love her and loving you, and, wo'ing, he should grant? and will you persevere to enjoy er?

Oli. Neither call the giddiness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wo'ing, nor her sudden consenting: but say with me, I love Aliena; say with her that she loves me; consent with both that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good; for my father's house and all the revenue that was old Sir Rowland's will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Orl. You have my consent. Let your wedding be to-morrow: then will I invite the duke and all his contented followers. Go you and prepare Aliena; for look you, here comes my Rosalind.

Enter ROSALIND.

Rosal. God save you, brother.
Orl. And you, fair sister. [Exit.
Rosal. O, my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf!
Orl. It is my arm.
Rosal. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.
Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.
Rosal. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon when he showed me your handkerchief?

Orl. Ay, and greater wonders than that.
Rosal. O, I know where you are merry, 'tis true: there was never any thing so sudden but the fight of two rams and Caesar's thronal brag of 'I came, saw, and overcame:' for your brother and my sister no sooner met but they looked, no sooner looked but they loved, no sooner loved but they sighed, no sooner sighed but they asked one another the reason, no sooner knew the reason but they sought the remedy; and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage: they are in the very wrath of love and they will together; clubs cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

Rosal. Why then, tomorrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.
Rosal. I will weary you then no longer with idle talking. Know of me then, for now I speak to some purpose, that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit: I speak not this that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, in somuch I say I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three year old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her: I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow human as she is and without any danger.

Orl. Speakest thou in sober meanings?
Rosal. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician. Therefore, put you in your best array; bid your friends; for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Look, here comes a lover of mine and a lover of hers.

Ph. Youth, you have done me much un- gentleness.

To show the letter that I writ to you.

Ros. I care not if I have; it is my study
To seem despiteful and ungentle to you:
You are there followed by a faithful shepherd;
Look upon him, love him; he worships you.

Ph. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
And so am I for Phoebe.

Ph. And I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service;
And so am I for Phoebe.

Ph. And I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy,
All made of passion and all made of wishes,
All adoration, duty, and observance,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience,
† All purity, all trial, all observance;
And so am I for Phoebe.

Ph. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Ph. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Ros. Who do you speak to, 'Why blame you me to love you?'

Orl. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Ros. Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon. [To Sil.] I will help you, if I can: [To Phoebe.] I would love you, if I could. To-morrow meet me all together. [To Phoebe.] I will marry you, if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow: [To Orl.] I will satisfy you, if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow: [To Sil.] I will content you, if what pleases you content you, and you shall be married to-morrow. [To Orl.] As you love Rosalind, meet: [To Sil.] as you love Phoebe, meet: and as I love no woman, I'll meet. So fare you well: I have left you commands. 131

Sil. I'll not fail, if I live.

Ph. Nor I.

Orl. Nor I. [Exeunt.

Scene III. The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey; to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire to desire to be a woman of the world. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

First Page. Well met, honest gentleman.

Touch. By my troth, well met. Come, sit, and a song.

Sec. Page. We are for you: sit i' the middle.

First Page. Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting or saying we are horse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice?

Sec. Page. I'faith, i'faith; and both in a tune, like two gipsies on a horse.

Song.

It was a lover and his lass,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass
In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding: 21
Sweet lovers love the spring.

Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that a life was but a flower
In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino;
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very untuneable.

First Page. You are deceived, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be wi' you; and God mend your voices! Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.]

Scene IV. The forest.

Enter Duke senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not;† As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phoebe.

Ros. Patience once more, whilsts our compact is urged:
You say, if I bring in your Rosalind, You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

Ros. And you say, you will have her, when I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Ros. You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing?
Phè. That will I, should I die the hour after.
Ros. But if you do refuse to marry me,
You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?
Phè. So is the bargain.
Ros. You say, that you'll have Phèbe, if she will?
Sil. Though to have her life and death were both one thing.
Ros. I have promised to make all this matter even.
Keep your word, O duke, to give your daughter;
You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter: so
Keep your word, Phèbe, that you'll marry me,
Or else refusing me, to wed this shepherd:
Keep your word, Silvia, that you'll marry her,
If she refuse me: and from hence I go,
To make these doubts all even.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd boy
Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.
Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw Methought he was a brother to your daughter:
But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle,
Whom he reports to be a great magician,
Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jaq. There is sure, another flood toward,
And these couples are coming to the ark. Here
Comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all!

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome: this
Is the motley-minded gentleman that I have so Often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier,
He swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure;
I have flattered a lady: I have been politic with my friend,
Smooth with mine enemy; I have undone
Three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like
To have fought one.

Jaq. And how was that ta'en up?

Touch. Faith, we met, and found the quarrel
Was upon the seventh cause.

Jaq. How seventh cause? Good my lord,
Like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God 'lud you, sir; I desire you of the like.
I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country copulatives, to swear and to forswear;
According as marriage binds and blood breaks: a poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but Mine own; a poor humour of mine, sir, to take
That that no man else will: rich honesty dwells
Like a miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl
In your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and
Such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find
The quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed:—
Hear your body more seeming, Audrey:—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's

Such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find

The quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed:—

Hear your body more seeming, Audrey:—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the Retort Courteous. If I sent him word again 'it was not well cut,' he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the Quip Modest. If again 'it was not well cut,'

he disabled my judgement: this is called the Reply

Churlish. If again 'it was not well cut,' he would answer, I spake not true: this is called the Reproof Valiant. If again 'it was not well cut,'

he would say, I lied: this is called the Countercheck

Quarrelsome: and so to the Lie Circumstantial and the Lie Direct.

Jaq. And how oft did you say his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no further than the Lie

Circumstantial, nor he durst not give me the Lie

Direct; and so we measured swords and parted.

Jaq. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the book:

as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort

Courteous; the third, the Reply Churlish; the fourth, the Reproof Valiant; the fifth, the Countercheck Quarrelsome; the sixth, the Lie with Circumstance;

the seventh, the Lie Direct. All these you may avoid but the Lie Direct; and you may avoid that too, with an If. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel, but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If, as, 'If you said so, then I said so:' and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your If is the only peace-maker; much virtue in If.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing and yet a fool.

Duke S. He uses his folly like a stalking-horse and under the presentation of that he shoves his wit.

Enter Hymen, Rosalind, and Celia.

Hym. Then is there mirth in heaven,

When earthly things made even

Atone together.

Good duke, receive thy daughter:

Hymen from heaven brought her,

Yea, brought her hither,

That thou might'st join her hand with his

Whose heart within his bosom is.

Ros. [To duke] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To Orl.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true,

Why then, my love adieu!

Ros. I'll have no father, if you be not he:

I'll have no husband, if you be not he:

Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she.

Hym. Peace, ho! I bar confusion:

'Tis I must make conclusion

Of these most strange events:

Here's eight that must take hands

To join in Hymen's bands,

If truth holds true contents.

15—2
You and you no cross shall part:
You and you are heart in heart:
You to his love must accord,
Or have a woman to your lord:
You and you are sure together,
As the winter to fall weather.
Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing,
Feed yourselves with questioning;
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we meet, and these things finish.

SONG.
Wedding is great Juno’s crown:
’Tis Hymen peoples every town:
High wedlock then be honoured:
Honour, high honour and renown,
To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art to me!
Even daughter, welcome, in no less degree.
Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;
Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

Enter Jaques de Boys.

Jaq. de B. Let me have audience for a word or two:
I am the second son of old Sir Rowland,
That bring these tidings to this fair assembly.
Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day 160
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address’d a mighty power; which were on foot,
In his own conduct, purposely to take
His brother here and put him to the sword:
And to the skirts of this wild wood he came;
Where meeting with an old religious man,
After some question with him, was converted
Both from his enterprise and from the world,
His crown bequeathing to his banish’d brother,
And all their lands restored to them again 170
That were with him exiled. This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man;
Thou offer’st fairly to thy brothers’ wedding:
To one his lands withheld, and to the other
A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.
First, in this forest let us do those ends
That here were well begun and well begot:
And after, every of this happy number
That have endured shrewd days and nights with us
Shall share the good of our returned fortune, 180
According to the measure of their states.
Meantime, forget this new-fall’n dignity
And fall into our rustic revelry.

Play, music! And you, brides and bridegrooms all,
With measure heap’d in joy, to the measures fall.
Jaq. Sir, by your patience. If I heard you rightly,
The duke hath put on a religious life
And thrown into neglect the pompous court?
Jaq de B. He hath.
Jaq. To him will I: out of these convertites
There is much matter to be heard and learnt. 191
[To duke] You to your former honour I beseech;
Your patience and your virtue well deserves it:
[To Orl.] You to a love that your true faith doth merit:
[To Oli.] You to your land and love and great pleasures:
[To Sil.] You to a long and well-deserved bed:
[To Touch.] And you to wrangling; for thy loving voyage
Is but for two months victual’d. So, to your pleasures:
I am for other than for dancing measures.
Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay. 200
Jaq. To see no pastime I: what you would have I’ll stay to know at your abandon’d cave. [Exit.
Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites,
As we do trust they’ll end, in true delights,

EPilogue.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue; but it is no more unhandsome than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true that good wine needs no bush, ’tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is to conjure you; and I’ll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men—to like as much of this play as please you: and I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women—as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hates them—that between you and the women the play may please. If I were a woman I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexionions that liked me and breaths that I defied not: and, I am sure, as many, as have good beards or good faces or sweet breaths will, for my kind offer, when I make curtey, bid me farewell.

[Exeunt.]
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

A Lord.
Christopher Sly, a tinker.
Hostess, Page, Players, Huntsmen, and Servants.

Baptista, a rich gentleman of Padua.
Vincentio, an old gentleman of Pisa.
Luciento, son to Vincentio, in love with Bianca.
Petrouchio, a gentleman of Verona, a suitor to Katharina.
Gandroco.
Hortensio.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I. Before an alehouse on a heath.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Sly. I'll be thee, y' faith.
Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue!
Sly. Ye are a baggage: the Slys are no rogues;
look in the chronicles: we came in with Richard Conqueror.
Therefore paucas pallabras; let the world slide: sessa!
Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
Sly. No, not a denier. Go by, Jeronimo: go to thy cold bed, and warm thee. [Exeunt.
Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the third-borough.
Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law: I'll not budge an inch, boy:
let him come, and kindly. [Falls asleep.

Horns winded. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his train.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well your hounds:
†Brach Merriman, the poor cur is emboss'd:
And couple Clowered with the deep-mouth'd brach.
Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good
At the hedge-corner, in the coldest fault?
I would not lose the dog for twenty pound.

First Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he,
my lord;
He cried upon it at the merest loss
And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent:
Trust me, I take him for the better dog.
Lord. Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet,
I would esteem him worth a dozen such.
But sup them well and look unto them all:
To-morrow I intend to hunt again.

First Hun. I will, my lord.

Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?

Sec. Hun. He breathes, my lord. Were he not warm'd with ale,
This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly.

TRanio,
Biondello,
Servants to Lucentio.
Grumio,
Servants to Petruchio.
Curtis.
A Pedant.
Katharina, the shrew,
Daughters to Baptista.
Bianca.
Widow.

Tailor, Haberdasher, and Servants attending on Baptista and Petruchio.

SCENE: Padua, and Petruchio's country house.

Lord. O monstrous beast! how like a swine
he lies!
Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image!
Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.
What think you, if he were convey'd to bed, Wrapp'd in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers,
A most delicious banquet by his bed,
And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself?

First Hun. Believe me, lord, I think he can't choose.

Sec. Hun. It would seem strange unto him when he waked.

Lord. Even as a flattering dream or worthless fancy.

Then take him up and manage well the jest:
Carry him gently to my fairest chamber
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures:
Balm his foul head in warm distilled waters
And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet:
Procure me music ready when he wakes,
To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound;
And if he chance to speak, be ready straight
And with a low submissive reverence
Say 'What is it your honour will command?'
Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rose-water and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, the third a diaper,
And say 'Will't please your lordship cool your hands?'

Some one be ready with a costly suit
And ask him what apparel he will wear;
Another tell him of his hounds and horse,
And that his lady mourns at his disease:
Persuade him that he hath been lunatic;
†And when he says he is, say that he dreams,
For he is nothing but a mighty lord.
This do and do it kindly, gentle sirs:
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty.

First Hun. My lord, I warrant you we will play our part,

As he shall think by our true diligence
He is no less than what we say he is.
Lord. Take him up gently and to bed with him; And each one to his office when he wakes. [Some bear out Sly. A Trumpet sounds. Sirrah, go see what trumpet 'tis that sounds: [Exit Serving-man.
Belike, some noble gentleman that means, Travelling some journey, to repose him here.

Re-enter Serving-man.

How now! who is it?
Serv. An't please your honour, players That offer service to your lordship.
Lord. Bid them come near.

Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome. Players. We thank your honour. Lord. If you intend to stay with me to-night? A Player. So please your lordship to accept our duty.
Lord. With all my heart. This fellow I remember, Since once he play'd a farmer's eldest son: 'Twas where you woo'd the gentlewoman so well: I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part Was aptly fitted and naturally perform'd. A Player. I think 'twas Soto that your honour means.
Lord. 'Tis very true: thou didst it excellent. Well, you are come to me in happy time: 90 The rather for I have some sport in hand Wherein your cunning can assist me much. There is a lord who will hear you play to-night: But I am doubtful of your modesties; Lest over-eyeing of his odd behaviour, — For yet his honour never heard a play — You break into some merry passion And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs, If you should smile he grows impatient. A Player. Fear not, my lord: we can contain ourselves, Were he the veriest antic in the world. Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery, And give them friendly welcome every one: Let them want nothing that your house affords. [Exit one with the Players.
Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew my page, And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady: That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber: And call him 'madam,' do him obeisance, Tell him from me, as he will win my love, He bear himself with honourable action, Such as he hath observed in noble ladies Unto their lords, by them accomplished: Such duty to the drunkard let him do With soft low tongue and lowly courtesy, And say 'What is't your honour will command, Wherein your lady and your humble wife May show her duty and make known her love?' And then with kind embraces, tempting kisses, And with declining head into his bosom, Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd To see her noble lord restored to health, Who for this seven years hath esteem'd him No better than a poor and loathsome beggar: And if the boy have not a woman's gift To rain a shower of commanded tears, An onion will do well for such a shift, Which in a napkin being close convey'd Shall in despite enforce a watery eye. See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou canst: Anon I'll give thee more instructions. 130 [Exit a Serving-man.
I know the boy will well usurp the grace, Voice, gait and action of a gentlewoman: I long to hear him call the drunkard husband, And how my men will stay themselves from laughter When they do homage to this simple peasant. 'I'll in to counsel them; haply my presence May well abate the over-merry spleen Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exeunt.

Scene II. A bedchamber in the Lord's house.

Enter aloft Sly, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with basin and ever and other appurtenances; and Lord.

Sly. For God's sake, a pot of small ale.
First Serv. Will't please your lordship drink a cup of sack?
Sec. Serv. Will't please your honour taste of these conserves?
Third Serv. What raiment will your honour wear to day?
Sly. I am Christopher Sly; call not me 'honour' nor 'lordship;' I ne'er drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserves, give me conserves of beef: ne'er ask me what raiment I'll wear; for I have no more doublets but backs, no more stockings than legs, nor no more shoes than feet; nay, sometime more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather.
Lord. Heaven cease this idle humour in your honour! O, that a mighty man of such descent, Of such possessions and so high esteem, Should be infused with so foul a spirit! Sly. What was it, that would you make me mad? Am I not I Christopher Sly, old Sly's son of Burton-heath, by birth a pedlar, by education a cardmaker, by transmutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat ale-wife of Wincet, if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheet ale, score me up for the lyingest knave in Christendom. What! I am not bestraught: here's—Third Serv. O, this it is that makes your lady mourn!
Sec. Serv. O, this is it that makes your servants droop!
Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shuns your house, As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. O noble lord, behinth thee of thy birth, Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou canst: And banish hence these abject lowly dreams. Look how thy servants do attend on thee, Each in his office ready at thy beck. Wilt thou have music? hark! Apollo plays [Music. And twenty caged nightingales do sing: Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch
Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed
In purpose trim’d up for Semiramis,
Say thou wilt walk; we will bestrew the ground:
Will thou ride? thy horses shall be trapp’d,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.
Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the walkin answer them
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.
First Serv. Say thou wilt course; thy greyhounds are as swift
As breathed stags, ay, fleeter than the roe.
Sec. Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight.
Adonis painted by a running brook,
And Cynthia all in sedges hid,
Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind.
Lord. We’ll show thee Io as she was a maid,
And how she was beguiled and surprised,
As lively painted as the deed was done.
Third Serv. Or Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs that one shall swear she bleeds,
And at that sight shall say Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.
Lord. Thou art a lord and nothing but a lord:
Thou hast a lady far more beautiful
Than any woman in this waning age.
First Serv. And till the tears that she hath shed for thee
Like envious floods o’er-run her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world;
And yet she is inferior to none.
Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady? Or do I dream? or have I dream’d till now?
Do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak;
Smell sweet savours and I feel soft things:
Upon my life, I am a lord indeed.
And not a tinker nor Christopher Sly.
Well, bring our lady hither to our sight:
And once again, a pot o’ the smallest ale.
Sec. Serv. Will’t please your mightiness to wash your hands?
O, how we joy to see your wit restored!
That once no world but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream;
Or when you waked, so waked as if you slept.
Sly. These fifteen years! by my say, a goodly nap.
But did I never speak of all that time?
First Serv. O, yes, my lord, but very idle words:
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say ye were beaten out of door;
And rail upon the hostess of the house;
And say you would present her at the foot,
Because she brought stone jars and no seal’d quarts:
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.
Sly. Ay, the woman’s maid of the house.
Third Serv. Why, sir, you know no house
Nor no such maid,
Nor no such men as you have reckon’d up,
As Stephen Sly and old John Naps of Greece
And Peter Turph and Henry Pimpernell
And twenty more such names and men as these
Which never were nor no man ever saw.
Sly. Now Lord be thanked for my good amends!
All. Amen.
Sly. I thank thee: thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page as a lady, with attendants.
Page. How fares my noble lord?
Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enough.
Where is my wife?
Page. Here, noble lord: what is thy will with her?
Sly. Are you my wife and will not call me husband?
My men should call me ‘lord’: I am your good-man.
Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband;
I am your wife in all obedience.
Sly. I know it well. What must I call her?
Lord. Madam.
Sly. Alice madam, or Joan madam?
Lord. ‘Madam,’ and nothing else: so lords call ladies.
Sly. Madam, wife, they say that I have dream’d and slept above some fifteen years or more.
Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me,
Being all this time abandon’d from your bed.
Sly. ‘Tis much. Servants, leave me and her alone.
Madam, undress you and come now to bed.
Page. Thrice-noble lord, let me entreat of you
To pardon me yet for a night or two,
Or, if not so, until the sun be set:
For your physicians have expressly charged,
In peril to incur your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed:
I hope this reason stands for my excuse.
Sly. Ay, it stands so that I may hardly tarry so long. But I would be loath to fall into my dreams again: I will therefore tarry in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Your honour’s players, hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy:
For so your doctors hold it very meet,
Seeing too much sadness hath congeal’d your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy:
Therefore they thought it good you hear a play
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms and lengthens life.
Sly. Marry, I will, let them play it. Is not a comonity a Christmas gambold or a tumbling-trick?
Page. No, my good lord; it is more pleasing stuff.
Sly. What, household stuff?
Page. It is a kind of comedy.
Sly. Well, we’ll see it. Come, madam wife, sit by my side and let the world slip: we shall ne’er be younger.

Flourish.
ACT I.

SCENE I. Padua. A public place.

Enter Lucentio and his man Tranio.

Lu. Tranio, since for the great desire I had To see fair Padua, nursery of arts, I am arrived for fruitful Lombardy, The pleasant garden of great Italy; And by my father’s love and leave am arm’d With his good will and thy good company, My trusty servant, well approved in all, Here let us breathe and haply institute A course of learning and ingenious studies. Pisa renown’d for grave citizens Gave me my being and my father first, A merchant of great traffic through the world, Vincentio, come of the Bentovill. Vincentio’s son brought up in Florence It shall become to serve all hopes conceived, To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds: And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study, Virtue and that part of philosophy Will I apply that treats of happiness By virtue specially to be achieved. Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left And Padua come, as he that leaves A shallow plash to plunge him in the deep And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. Mi perdonato, gentle master mine, I am in all affected as yourself; Glad that you thus continue your resolve To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Only, good master, while we do admire This virtue and this moral discipline, Let’s be no stoics nor no stocks, I pray; Or so devote to Aristotle’s checks As Ovid be an outcast quite abjured: Balk logic with acquaintance that you have And practise rhetoric in your common talk; Music and poesy use to quicken you; The mathematics and the metaphysics, Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you; No profit grows where is no pleasure ta’en: In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well do I thank you and, If, Biondello, thou wert come ashore, We could at once put us in readiness, And take a lodging fit to entertain Such friends as time in Padua shall beget. But stay a while: what company is this?

Tra. Master, some show to welcome us to town.

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio. Lucentio and Tranio stand by.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther, For how I firmly am resolved you know: That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter Before I have a husband for the elder: If either of you both love Katharina, Because I know you well and love you well, Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Gre. [Aside] To cart her rather: she’s too rough for me.

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife?

Kath. I pray you, sir, is it your will To make a stale of me amongst these mates?

Hor. Mates, said I how mean you that? no mates for you, Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Kath. I faith, sir, you shall never need to fear I wis it is not half way to her heart; But if it were, doubt not her care should be To comb your noodle with a three-legg’d stool And paint your face and use you like a fool.

Hor. From all such devils, good Lord deliver us Gre. And me too, good Lord! Tra. Hush, master! here’s some good pastime toward; That wench is stark mad or wonderful froward. Luc. But in the other’s silence do I see Maid’s mild behaviour and sobriety.

Peace, Tranio! Tra. Well said, master; mum! and gaze your fill.

Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good What I have said, Bianca, get you in: And let it not displease thee, good Bianca, For I will love thee ne’er the less, my girl. Kath. A pretty peat! it is best Put finger in the eye, an she knew why.

Bian. Sister, content you in my discontent. So Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe: My books and instruments shall be my company, On them to look and practise by myself.

Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou may’st hear Minerva speak.

Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange? Sorry am I that our good will effects Bianca’s grief.

Gre. Why will you mew her up, Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell, And make her bear the penance of her tongue? Bap. Gentlemen, content ye; I am resolved: Go in, Bianca: [Exit Bianca. And for I know she taketh most delightful In music, instruments and poetry, Schoolmasters will I keep within my house, Fit to instruct her youth. If you, Hortensio, Or Signior Gremio, you, know any such, Prefer them hither; for to cunning men I will be very kind, and liberal To mine own children in good bringing up: And so farewell, Katharina, you may stay; too For I have more to commune with Bianca. [Exit Kath. Why, and I trust I may go too, may I not? What, shall I be appointed hours; as though, belike, I knew not what to take, and what to leave, ha? [Exit Gre. You may go to the devil’s dam: your gifts are so good, here’s none will hold you. Their love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out: our cake’s dough on both sides. Farewell: yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.

Hor. So will I, Signior Gremio: but a word, I pray, Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brooked parle, know now, upon advice, it toucheth us both, that we may yet again have access to our fair mistress and be happy rivals in Bianca’s love, to labour and effect one thing specially.

Gre. What’s that, I pray?
Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.

Gre. A husband! a devil.

Hor. I say, a husband.

Gre. I say, a devil. Thinkest thou, Hor-nesio, though his father be very rich, any man so very a fool to be married to hell? 199

Hor. Tush, Gremio, though it pass your patience and mine to endure your loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gre. I cannot tell; but I had as lief take her owry with this condition, to be whipped at the high cross every morning.

Hor. Faith, as you say, there's small choice a rotten apples. But come; since this bar in arrises makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband we set his youngest see for a husband, and then have we't not afresh. Whoa! Happy man be his done! He has run fastest gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio?

Gre. I am agreed; and would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her and bed her and rid the house of her! Come on.

Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio.

Tra. I pray, sir, tell me, is it possible that love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true, never thought it possible or likely; but see, while idly I stood looking on, found the effect of love in idleness; and now in plainness do confess to thee, that art to me as secret and as dear as Anna to the queen of Carthage was, Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio, 150 I achieve not this young modest girl. Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst; assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now: affection is not rated from the heart: I love have touch'd you, nought remains but so, Redime te captum quam queas minimô.

Luc. Gramercies, lad, go forward; this contents: he rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.

Tra. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid, 'erhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Luc. O yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face, such as the daughter of Agenor had, that made great Jove to humble him to her hand, when with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.

Tra. Saw you no more? mark'd you not how her sister began to scold and raise up such a storm that mortal ears might hardly endure the din?

Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move and with her breath she did perfume the air: 180 sacred and sweet was all I saw in her.

Tra. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his trance.

pray, awake, sir; if you love the maid, lend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands: her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd that till the father rid his hands of her,

Master, your love must live a maid at home; And therefore has he closely mew'd her up, Because she will not be annoy'd with suitors. Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he! But art thou not advised, he took some care 191 To get her cunning schoolmasters to instruct her?

Tra. Ay, marry, am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I have it, Tranio.

Tra. Master, for my hand, Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first.

Tra. You will be schoolmaster And undertake the teaching of the maid: That's your device.

Luc. It is: may it be done?

Tra. Not possible; for who shall bear your part, And be in Padua here Vincentio's son, 200 Keep house and ply his book, welcome his friends, Visit his countrymen, and banquet them? Luc. Basta; content thee, for I have it full. We have not yet been seen in any house, Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces For man or master; then it follows thus; Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead, Keep house and port and servants, as I should: I will some other be, some Florentine, Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa. 210 'Tis hatch'd and shall be so: Tranio, at once Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak: When Biondello comes, he waits on thee; But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

Tra. So had you need In brief, sir, with it your pleasure is, And I am tied to be obedient; For so your father charged me at our parting, 'Be serviceable to my son,' quoth he, Although I think 'twas in another sense; 220 I am content to be Lucentio, Because so well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves: And let me be a slave, to achieve that maid Whose sudden sight hath thrill'd my wounded eye. Here comes the rogue.

Enter Biondello.

Sirrah, where have you been?

Bion. Where have I been! Nay, how now! where are you? Master, has my fellow Tranio stolen your clothes? Or you stolen his? or both? pray, what's the news?

Luc. Sirrah, come hither: 'tis no time to jest, And therefore from your manners to the time. Your fellow Tranio here, to save my life, Puts my apparel and my countenance on, And I for my escape have put on his; For in a quarrel since I came ashore I kill'd a man and fear I was descried: Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes, While I make way hence to save my life: You understand me?

Bion. I, sir! ne'er a whit. 240

Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth: Tranio is changed into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him: would I were so too!
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

[Act II, Scene II]

Trav. So could I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,
That Lucienio indeed had Baptista's youngest daughter.

But, sirrah, not for my sake, but your master's,
I advise
You use your manners discreetly in all kind of companies:
When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;
But in all places else your master Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, let's go: one thing more rests,
That thyself execute, to make one among these woorers:
if thou ask me why, sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

[Exeunt.]

The presenters above speak.

First Serv. My lord, you nod; you do not mind the play.

Sly. Yes, by Saint Anne, do I. A good matter, surely: comes there any more of it?

Page. My lord, 'tis but begun.

Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady; would 'twere done!

[They sit and mark.]

SCENE II. Padua. Before Hortensio's house.

Enter Petruchio and his man Grumio.

Petr. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua, but of all
My best beloved and approved friend,
Hortensio; and I trow this is his house.

Here, sirrah Grumio; knock, I say.

Grum. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any man has rebused your worship?

Petr. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

Grum. Knock you here, sir! why, sir, what am I, sir, that I should knock you here, sir?

Petr. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.

Grum. My master is grown quarrelsome. I should knock you first,
And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Petr. Will it not be?

Faith, sirrah, an you'll not knock, I'll ring it;
I'll try how you can sol, fa, and sing it.

[He sings him by the ears.]

Grum. Help, masters, help! my master is mad.

Petr. Now, knock when I bid you, sirrah villain!

[Enter Hortensio.]

Hort. How now! what's the matter? My old friend Grumio! and my good friend Petruchio!

How do you all at Verona?

Petr. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

'Con tutto il cuore, ben trovato,' may I say.

Hort. 'Alla nostra casa ben venuto, molto honorato signor mio Petruchio.'

Rise, Grumio, rise: we will compound this quarrel.

Grum. Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he 'leges in Latin. If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service, look you, sir, he bid me knock him and rap him soundly, sir: well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so, being perhaps, for aught I see, two and thirty, a pip out?

Whom would to God I had well knock'd at first,

Then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Petr. A senseless villain! Good Hortensio,
I bade the rascal knock upon your gate
And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Grum. Knock at the gate! O heavens! Spak you not these words plain, 'Sirrah, knock me here, rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly?' And come you now with, 'knockin at the gate'?

Petr. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise ye.

Hort. Petruchio, patience; I am Grumio's pledge:
Why, this's a heavy chance 'twixt him and you
Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio.
And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale
Blows you to Padua here from old Verona?

Petr. Such wind as scatters young men through the world
To seek their fortunes farther than at home
Where small experience grows. But in a few,
Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me:
Antonio, my father, is deceased.
And I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wife and thrive as best I may:
Crows in my purse I have and goods at home,
And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hort. Petruchio, shall I then come round to thee
And wish thee to a shrewd ill-favour'd wife? 6

Thou'vest thank me but a little for my counsel:
And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich
And very rich: but thou'rt too much my friend,
And I'll not wish thee to her.

Petr. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friend as we Few words suffice: and therefore, if thou know
One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife,
As wealth is burden of my woowing dance,
Be she as foul as Florentius' love,
As old as Sibyl and as curst and shrewd
As Socrates' Xanthippe, or a worse,
She moves me not, or not removes, at least;
And I will not edge in me, were I as rough
As are the swelling Adriatic seas:
I come to wife it wealthily in Padua;
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Grum. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is: why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet or an aglet-baby; or a old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes with it.

Hort. Petruchio, since we are stepp'd thus far in,
I will continue that I broach'd in jest.
I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife
With wealth enough and young and beauteous,
Brought up as best becomes a gentlewoman:
Her only fault, and that is faults enough,
Is that she is intolerable curst
And shrewd and froward, so beyond all measure
That, were my state far worse than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Petr. Hortensio, peace! thou know'st not gold's effect:
Tell me her father's name and 'tis enough:
For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder when the clouds in autumn crack.

Hort. Her father is Baptista Minola,
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

affable and courteous gentleman: name is Katharina Minola, own'd in Padua for her scolding tongue. I know her father, though I know not her; he knew my deceased father well. I'll not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her; therefore let me be thus bold with you give you over at this first encounter, you will accompany me thither.

I pray you, sir, let him go while the last stands. O my word, an she knew him as I do, she would think scolding could do good upon him: she may perhaps call him a score knaves or so; why, that's nothing; he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll you what, sir, an she stand him but a little, will throw a figure in her face and so disfigure with it that she shall have no more eyes to withal than a cat. You know him not, sir.

Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee, in Baptista's keep my treasure is: hath the jewel of my life in hold, youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca, withholds from me and other more, to her and rivals in my love, posing it a thing impossible, those defects I have before rehearsed, ever Katharina will be wood; before this order hath Baptista ta'en, none shall have access unto Bianca Katherine the curt; not a husband.

Katherine the curt! tle for a maid of all titles the worst.

Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace, I offer me disguised in sober robes old Baptista as a schoolmaster seen in music, to instruct Bianca; so may, by this device, at least leave and leisure to make love to her unsuspected court her by herself.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the folks, how the young folks lay their heads therewith!

Enter Gremio, and Lucentio disguised.

A proper stripping and an amorous! I mend it with a largess. Take your paper too, let me have them very well perfumed: she is sweeter than perfume itself whom they go to. What will you read to her?

\textit{Peace, Grumio!} It is the rival of my love.\textit{Ruchio, stand by a while.}

A proper stripping and an amorous! I\textit{O, very well! I have perused the note.}\textit{You, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound: books of love, see that at any hand; I see you read no other lectures to her: I understand me: over and beside Baptist's liberality.} I\textit{mend it with a largess. Take your paper too, let me have them very well perfumed: she is sweeter than perfume itself whom they go to. What will you read to her?}

\textit{Whate'er I read to her, I'll plend for you for my patron, stand you so assured, firmly you yourself were in place: and perhaps with more successful words in you, unless you were a scholar, sir.}\textit{This learning, what a thing it is!}\textit{O this woodcock, what an ass it is!}\textit{Peace, sirrah!}

Hor. Grumio, mum! God save you, Signior Gremio.

Gre. And you are well met, Signior Hortensio. Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista Minola. I promised to inquire carefully About a schoolmaster for the fair Bianca: And by good fortune I have lighted well On this young man, for learning and behaviour For her turn, well read in poetry And other books, good ones, I warrant ye.

Hor. 'Tis well; and I have met a gentleman Hath promised me to help me to another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress; So shall I no whit be behind in duty To fair Bianca, so beloved of me.

Gre. Beloved of me; and that my deeds shall prove.

Gre. And that his bags shall prove.

Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time tovaunt our love: Listen to me, and if you speak me fair, I'll tell you news indifferent good for either. Here is a gentleman whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his liking. Will undertake to woo curt Katherine, Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please. Gre. So said, so done, is well.

Hortensio, have you told him all her faults? Pet. I know she is an irksome brawling scold: If that be all, masters, I hear no harm. Gre. No, say'st me so, friend? What countryman?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son: My father dead, my fortune lives for me; And I do hope good days and long to see.

Gre. O sir, such a life, with such a wife, were strange! But if you have a stomach, to't! God's name: You shall have me assisting you in all. But will you woo this wild-cat?

Pet. Why came I hither but to that intent? Think you a little din can daunt mine ears? Have I not in my time heard lions roar? Have I not heard the sea puff'd up with winds Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat? Have I not heard great ordinance in the field, And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Lou'd 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang? And do you tell me of a woman's tongue, That gives not half so great a blow to hear As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire?

Tush, tush! fear boys with bugs.

Gru. Hortensio, hark: This gentleman is happily arrived, My mind presumes, for his own good and ours.

Hor. I promised we would be contributors And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoe'er. Gre. And so we will, provided that he win her.

Gre. I would I were as sure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio brave, and Biondello.

Trn. Gentlemen, God save you. If I may be bold, Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way To the house of Signior Baptista Minola?
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT II.

SCENE I. Padua. A room in Baptista's house.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself, To make a bondmaid and a slave of me; That I disdain: but for these other gawds, Unbind my hands, I'll pull them off myself, Yea, all my raiment, to my petticcoat; Or what you will command me will I do, So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee to tell Whom thou lovest best; see thou dissemble not.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men al I never yet beheld that special face Which I could fancy more than any other.

Kath. Minion, thou liest. Is't not Hortensio? Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear I'll plead for you myself, but you shall have him.

Kath. O then, belike, you fancy riches more You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so? Nay then you jest, and now I well perceive You have but jested with me all this while: I priethee, sister Kate, untie my hands.

Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence gro this insolence? Bianca, stand aside. Poor girl! she weeps. Go ply thy needle: meddle not with her. For shame, thou hinding of a devilish spirit, Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee? When did she cross thee with a bitter word? Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I'll be venged.

Kath. What, will you not suffer me? No now I see She is your treasure, she must have a husband I must dance bare-foot on her wedding day And for your love to her lead apes in hell. Talk not to me; I will go sit and weep. Till I can find occasion of revenge. [Ex Bap. Was ever gentleman thus grieved as But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, Lucentio in the habit of mean man; Petruchio, with Hortensio as a musician; and Tranio, with Biondello bearing a lute and books.

Gremio. Good morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good morrow, neighbour Gremio. Can save you, gentlemen!

Pet. And you, good sir! Pray, have you a daughter
THE TAMING OF THE SHERW.

I'll have Katharina, fair and virtuous.

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, called Katharina.

Gre. You are too blunt; go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, Signior Gremio: give me leave.

In a gentleman of Verona, sir, at hearing of her beauty and her wit;
Affability and bashful modesty,
Wondrous qualities and mild behaviour,
So bold to show myself a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witness
That report which I so oft have heard.
And, for an entertainment, to present you with a man of mine,
In music and the mathematics,
I instruct her fully in those sciences,
Hereof I know she is not ignorant:
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:
She is Lidio, born in Mantua.

Bap. You’re welcome, sir; and he, for your good sake.

It is for my daughter Katharine this I know,
Is not for your turn, the more my grief.

Pet. I see you do not mean to part with her,
Else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not; I speak but as I find.
Hence are you, sir? what may I call your name?

Pet. Petruchio is my name; Antonio’s son,
Man well known throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well: you are welcome for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray,
Us, that are poor petitioners, speak too;
Care! you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O, pardon me, Signior Gremio; I would fain be doing.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your wooing.

Nigh, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure it.
To express the like kindness, myself, that I have been more kindly beholding to you than any,
That you turn you this wise scholar [preting Lucentio],
That hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and Other languages, as the other in music and Mathematics: his name is Cambio; pray, accept his vice.

Bap. A thousand thanks, Signior Gremio.

Come, good Cambio. [To Tranio] But, gentlemen,
Methinks you walk like a stranger: may
Be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tran. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own,
Unt, being a stranger in this city here,
Make myself a suitor to your daughter,
To Bianca, fair and virtuous,
The preferment of the eldest sister.

Gre. Liberty is all that I request,
Upon knowledge of my parentage,
May have welcome amongst the rest that who
Have free access and favour as the rest:
Toward the education of your daughters,
Restow a simple instrument,
This small packet of Greek and Latin books:
You accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name; of whence, I pray?

Tran. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa; by report
I know him well: you are very welcome, sir.
Take you the lute, and you the set of books;
You shall go see your pupils presently.

Gre. Holia, within!

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentleman
To my daughters; and tell them both,
These are their tutors: bid them use them well.

[Exit Servant, with Lucentio and Hortensio,
Biondello following.]

We will go walk a little in the orchard,
And then to dinner. You are passing welcome,
And so I pray you to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste,
And every day I cannot come to woo.

You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands and goods,
Which I have better’d rather than decreased:
Then tell me, if I get your daughter’s love,
What dowry shall I have with her to wife?

Bap. After my death the one half of my lands,
And in possession twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I’ll assure her of
Her widowhood, be it that she survive me,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever:
Let specialties be therefore drawn between us,
That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtained,
That is, her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father,
I am as peremptory as she proud-minded;
And where two raging fires meet, too hacer
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury;
Though little fire grows great with little wind,
Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all:
So to her and so she yields to me;
For I am rough and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well mayst thou woo, and happy be thy speed!
But be thou arm’d for some unhappy words.

Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds,
That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broke.

Bap. How now, my friend! why dost thou look so pale?

Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What will my daughter prove a good musician?

Hor. I think she’ll sooner prove a soldier:
Iron may hold with her, but never lutes.

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute?

Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me.

I did but tell her she mistook her frets,
And bow’d her hand to teach her fingering,
When, with a most impatient devilish spirit,
‘Frets, call you these?’ quoth she; ‘I’ll fume with them’:
And, with that word, she struck me on the head,
And through the instrument my pate made way;
And there I stood amazed for a while,
As on a pillory, looking through the lute:
While she did call me rascal fiddler
And twangling Jack; with twenty such vile terms,
As had she studied to misuse me so.

Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench;
I love her ten times more than ever I did;
O, how I long to have some chat with her!

Well, go with me and be not so discomfited:
Proceed in practice with my younger daughter;
She is apt to learn and thankful for good turns.
Signior Petruchio, will you go with us,
Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

I pray you do. [Exeunt all but Petruchio.]

Enter Katharina.

Good morrow, Kate; for that's your name, I hear.

Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:
They call me Katharine that do talk of me.

You lie in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate,
And bonny Kate and sometimes Kate the curst;
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,
Kate of Kate Hall, my super-dainty Kate,
For dainties are all Kates, and therefore, Kate,
Take of this of me, Kate of my consolation:
Hearing thy mildness praised in every town,
Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sounded,
Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs,
Myself am moved to woo thee for my wife.

Moved! in good time: let him that moved you hither
Remove you hence: I knew you at the first
You were a moveable,

Why, what's a moveable?

A join'd-stool.

Thou hast hit it: come, sit on me.

Asses are made to bear, and so are you.

Women are made to bear, and so are you.

No such jade as you, if me you mean.

Alas! good Kate, I will not burden thee;
For, knowing thee to be but young and light—

Too light for such a swain as you to catch;

And yet as heavy as my weight should be.

Should be! should—buzz!

Well ta'en, and like a buzzard.

O slow-wing'd turtle! shall a buzzard take thee?

Ay, for a turtle, as he takes a buzzard.

Come, come, you wasp; 'tis faith, you are too angry.

If I be waspish, best beware my sting.

My remedy is then, to pluck it out.

Ay, if the fool could find it where it lies.

Who knows not where a wasp does weave his sting? In his tail.

In his tongue.

Whose tongue?

Yours, if you talk of tails: and so far well.

What, with my tongue in your tail? me never again,

Good Kate; I am a gentleman.

That I'll try. [She strikes him.]

I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again.

So may you lose your arms:

If you strike me, you are no gentleman;

And if no gentleman, why then no arms.

A herald, Kate? O, put me in thy books!

What is your crest? a cockcomb?

A combless cock, so Kate will be then.

No cock of mine; you crow too like a crane.

Nay, come, Kate, come; you must look so sour.

It is my fashion, when I see a crab.

Why, here's no crab; and therefore look not sour.

There is, there is.

Then show it me.

Had I a glass, I would.

What, you mean my face?

Well aim'd of such a young one.

Now, by Saint George, I am too you for you.

Let you are wither'd.

'Tis with cares.

I care not.

Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth you seem not so.

I chafe you, if I tarry: let me go.

No, not a whit: I find you passing gent
'Twas told me you were rough and coy a while.

And now I find report a very liar;

For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing comely,

But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-tu flowers.

Thou must not frown, thou canst not look askan
Nor bite the lip, as angry wench's will,
Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk,

But thou with mildness entertain's thy wooers

With gentle conference, soft and affable.

Why does the world report that Kate doth lim
O slanderous world! Kate like the hazel-twigs
Is straight and slender and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts and sweeter than the kernels.

O, let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt.

Go, fool, and whom thou keep'st so main.

Did ever Dian so become a grove 2

As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?

O, be thou Dian, and let her be Kate;

And then let Kate be chaste and Dian sportful

Where did you study all this good speech?

It is extempore, from my mother-wit.

A witty mother! wiles else her son

Am I not wise?

Yes: keep you warm.
Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed;
id therefore, setting all this chat aside, 270 us in plain terms: your father hath consented at you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on;
id, will you, nill you, I will marry you.
sw, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;
r, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
my beauty, that doth make me like thee well,
you must be married to no man but me;
r I am he am born to tame you Kate,
id bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate unformed as other household Kate. 280 are comes your father: never make denial;
must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter BAPTISTA, GREMIO, and TRanio.

Bap. Now, Signior Petruchio, how sped you with my daughter?
Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?
were impossible I should speed amiss.
Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine!
in your dumps?
Kath. Call you me daughter now? I promise you u have show'd a tender fatherly regard,
i wish me wed to one half lunatic;
mad-cap ruffian and a swearing Jack, 290
iath thinks with oaths to face the matter out.
Pet. Father, 'tis thus: yourself and all the world,
talk'd of, have talk'd amiss of her:
she be curst, it is for policy;
she's not froward, but modest as the dove;
e is not hot, but temperate as the morn;
patience she will prove a second Grissel,
d Roman Lucrece for her chastity;
ist to conclude, we have 'greed so well together,
at upon Sunday is the wedding-day, 300
Kath. I'll see thee hang'd on Sunday first.
Gre. Hark, Petruchio; she says she'll see thee hang'd first.
Trn. Is this your speeding? nay, then, good ight our part!
Pet. Be patient, gentlemen; I choose her for myself:
she and I be pleased, what's that to you?
is bargain'd 'twixt us twain, being alone,
at she shall still be curst in company.
e you, 'tis incredible to believe ow much she loves me: O, the kindest Kate!
e hung about my neck; and kiss on kiss 310
ved so fast, protesting oath on oath,
it in a twink she won me to her love.
you are novices! 'tis a world to see,
ow tame, when men and women are alone,
meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew.
ve me thy hand, Kate: I will unto Venice,
buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day.
iwe the feast, father, and bid the guests;
is my Katharine shall be fine.
Bap. I know not what to say; but give me your hands; 320
send you joy, Petruchio! 'tis a match.
G. Trn. Amen, say we; we will be witnesses.

Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu;
I will to Venice; Sunday comes apace:
We will have rings and things and fine array;
And kiss me, Kate, we will be married o' Sunday.
[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharine severally.

Gre. Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly?
Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart.
Trn. 'Twas a commodity lay fretting by you:
'Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas. 331
Bap. The gain I seek is, quiet in the match.
Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch.
But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter:
Now is the day we long have looked for:
I am your neighbour, and was suitor first.
Trn. And I am one that love Bianca more Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.
Gre. Youngling, thou canst not love so dear
as I.
Trn. Greybeard, thy love doth freeze.
Gre. But thine doth fry. 340
Skipper, stand back: 'tis age that nourisheth.
Trn. But youth in ladies' eyes that flourisheth.
Bap. Content you, gentlemen: I will com-clude this strife:
'Tis deeds must win the prize; and he of both
That can assure my daughter greatest dower
Shall have my Bianca's love.
Say, Signior Gremio, what can you assure her?
Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city
Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Basins and ewers to lave her dainty hands; 350
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestrie;
In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpoints,
Costly apparel, tents, and canopies,
Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss'd with pearl,
Valance of Venice gold in needlework,
Pewter and brass and all things that belong
To house or housekeeping: then, at my farm
I have a hundred milch-kine to the pail,
Sixscore fat oxen standing in my stalls, 360
And all things answerable to this portion.
Myself I am struck in years, I must confess;
And if I die to-morrow, this is here,
If whilst I live she will be only mine.
Trn. That 'only' came well in. Sir, list to me:
I am your father's heir and only son:
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
I'll leave her houses three or four as good,
Within rich Pisa walls, as any one
Old Signior Gremio has in Padua; 370
Besides two thousand ducats by the year
Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.
What, have I pinch'd you, Signior Gremio?
Gre. Two thousand ducats by the year of land!
My land amounts not to so much in all:
That she shall have; besides an argosy
That now is lying in Marseilles' road;
What, have I choked you with an argosy?
Trn. Gremio, 'tis known my father hath no less Than three great argosies; besides two galliasses,
And twelve galleys: these I will assure her,
And twice as much, whate'er thou offer'st next.
Gre. Nay, I have offer'd all, I have no more;
And she can have no more;
If you like me, she shall have me and mine.
ACT III.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear; you grow too forward, sir: Have you so soon forgotten the entertainment Her sister Katharine welcomed you withal? Hor. But, wrangling pedant, this is the patroness of heavenly harmony: Then give me leave to have prerogative; And when in music we have spent an hour, Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so far To know the cause why music was ordain'd! Was it not to refresh the mind of man After his studies or his usual pain? Then give me leave to read philosophy, And while I pause, serve in your harmony. Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these braves of thine.

Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong, To strive for that which resteth in my choice: I am no breaching scholar in the schools; I'll not be tied to hours nor 'pointed times, But learn my lessons as I please myself. And, to cut off all strife, here sit we down: Take you your instrument, play you the whiles; His lecture will be done ere you have tuned. Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune? Luc. That will be never: tune your instrument. Bian. Where left we last?

Luc. Here, madam: 'Hic ibat Simois: hie est Sigeia tellus; Hic steterat Priami regia celsa sensis.'

Bian. Constructure them.

Luc. 'Hic ibat,' as I told you before, 'Simois is Lucentio, 'hie est,' son unto Vincentio Pisa, 'Sigeia tellus,' disguised thus to get you love; 'Hic steterat,' and that Lucentio the Comes a-wooing, 'Priami,' is my man Tranio regia,' bearing my port, 'celsa sensis,' that we might beguile the old pantalone.

Hor. Madam, my instrument's in tune.

Bian. 'Let's hear. O fie! the treble jars.

Luc. Spit in the hole, man, and tune again.

Bian. Now let me see if I can construe it: 'Hic ibat Simois,' I know you not, 'hie est Sigeia tellus,' I trust you not; 'Hic steterat Priami,' take heed he hear us not, 'regia,' presume not, 'celsa sensis,' despairs not.

Hor. Madam, 'tis now in tune.

Luc. But all the base.

Hor. The base is right; 'tis the base knew that jars.

[Aside] How fiery and forward our pedant is! Now, for my life, the knave doth court my love Pedascale, I'll watch you better yet.

Bian. In time I may believe, yet I mistrust Lucentio. Mistrust it not; for, sure, 'Eacides Was Ajax, call'd so from his grandfather.

Bian. I must believe my master; else, I promise you, I should be arguing still upon that doubt: But let it rest. Now, Licio, to you: Good masters, take it not unkindly, pray, That I have been thus pleasant with you both. Hor. You may go walk, and give me leave while: My lessons make no music in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formal, sir? well, I must wait.

[Aside] And watch withal; for, but I be deceived, Our fine musician growth amorous.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument To learn the order of my fingering, I must begin with rudiments of art; To teach you gamut in a briefer sort, More pleasant, pithy and effectual, Than hath been taught by any of my trade: And there it is in writing, fairly drawn.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamut long ago. Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio.

Bian. [Reads] "Gamut! I am the ground all accord, 'A re,' to plead Hortensio's passion; 'B mi,' Bianca, take him for thy lord, 'C fa ut,' that loves with all affection; 'D sol re,' one clef, two notes have I: 'E la mi,' show pity, or I die." Call you this gamut? tut, I like it not: Old fashions please me best; I am not so nice, To change true rules for old inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books And help to dress your sister's chamber up: You know to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bian. Farewell, sweet masters both; I must be gone.

[Exit Bianca and Servant]
Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant:
ethinks he looks as though he were in love:
if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble
last thy wondering eyes on every stale, 90
tizze thee that list: if once I thee ranging,
ortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

[Exit.]

ENE II. Padua. Before Baptista’s house.

Bap. [To Tranio] Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day:
at Katharine and Petruchio should be married,
Yest me we hear not of our son-in-law.
hat will be said? what mockery will it be,
want the bridegroom when the priest attends speak the ceremonial rites of marriage!
hat says Lucentio to this shame of ours!
Kath. No shame but mine: I must, forsooth, give my hand opposed against my heart into a mad-brain rudesby full of spleen; 10
ho woo’d in haste and means to wed at leisure.
old you, I, he was a frantic fool,
ring his bitter jests in blunt behaviour:
fd, to be noted for a merry man,
’ll woo a thousand, point the day of marriage,
kneekates, invite friends, and proclaim the buns;
t never means to wed where he hath woo’d.
w must the world point at poor Katharine,
d say, ‘Lo, there is Petruchio’s wife,
it would please him come and marry her!’
20
Tran. Patience, good Katharine, and Baptista too.
on my life, Petruchio means but well,
ately fortune stays him from his word:
ough he be blunt, I know him passing wise;
ough he be merry, yet withal he’s honest.
Kath. Would Katharine had never seen him though!

Exit Tranio, followed by Bianca and others.

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep;
such an injury would vex a very saint,
ich more a shrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter Bondello.

Bion. Master, master! news, old news, and news as you never heard of! 31

Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news, to hear of Petru-chio’s coming?

Bap. Is he come?

Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am and sees
there. 41

Tran. But say, what to thine old news?

Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming in a new hat an old jerkin, a pair of old breeches thrice ned, a pair of boots that have been candle-es, one buckled, another laced, an old rusty rld ta’en out of the town-armoury, with a ken hilt, and shapese; with two broken points: his horse hipped with an old mothsaddle and stirrups of no kindred; besides, possessed with the gilders and like to mose in the chine; troubled with the lampass, infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, sped with spavins, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bors, swayed in the back and shoulder-shotten;

ner-legged before and with a half-checked bit and a head-stall of sheep’s leather which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst and now repaired with knots; one six times pieced and a woman’s crupper of vulture, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in studs, and here and there pieced with packthread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir, his lackey, for all the world caparisoned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat and ‘the humour of forty fancies’ pricked in’t for a feather: a monster, a very monster in aparel, and not like a Christian footboy or a gentleman’s lackey.

Tran. ’Tis some odd humour pricks him to
this fashion;
Yet oftentimes he goes but mean-apparel’ld.

Bap. I am glad he’s come, howso’er he comes.

Bion. Why, sir, he comes not.

Bap. Didst thou not say he comes?

Bion. Who? that Petruchio came?

Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came. 80

Bion. No, sir; I say his horse comes, with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that’s all one.

Bion. Nay, by Saint Jamy, I hold you a penny,
A horse and a man
Is more than one,
And yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who’s at home?

Bap. You are welcome, sir.

Pet. And yet I come not well. 90

Bap. And yet you halt not.

Tran. Not so well apparell’d
As I wish you were.

Pet. Were it better, I should rush in thus.
But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?
How does my father? Gentles, methinks you
frown:
And wherfore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet or unusual prodigy?

Bap. Why, sir, you know this is your wed-ing-day:
First were we sad, fearing you would not come:
Now sadder, that you come so unprovided. 101
Pie, doff this habit, shame to your estate,
An eye-sore to our solemn festival!

Tran. And tell us, what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain’d you from your wife,
And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

Pet. Tediums it were to tell, and harsh to hear:
Sufficeth, I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part enforced to digress;
Which, at all more leisure, I will so excuse
As you shall well be satisfied withal.
But where is Kate? I stay too long from her:
The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.

\textit{Tra.} See not your bride in these uneventful \textit{Plots}:
Go to my chamber; put on clothes of mine.

\textit{Pet.} Not I, believe me; thus I'll visit her.

\textit{Bap.} But thus, I trust, you will not marry her.

Pet. Good sooth, even thus; therefore ha' done with words:
To me she's married, not unto my clothes:
Could I repair what she will wear in me,
As I can change these poor accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate and better for myself.
But what a fool am I to chat with you,
When I should bid good mornow to my bride,
And seal the title with a lovely kiss!

\textit{[Exeunt Petrucchio and Grumio.]}

\textit{Tra.} He hath some meaning in his mad attire:
We will persuade him, be it possible,
To put on better ere he go to church.

\textit{Bap.} I'll after him, and see the event of this.

\textit{[Exeunt Baptista, Grumio, and attendants.]}

\textit{Tra.} But to her love concerneth us to add
Her father's liking: which to bring to pass,
As I before imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man,—whate'er he be,
It skills not much, we'll fit him to our turn,—
And he shall be Vincentio of Pisa:
And make assurance here in Padua
Of greater sums than I have promised.
So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

\textit{Luc.} Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,
'Twere good, methinks, to steal our marriage;
Which once perform'd, let all the world say no,
I'll keep mine own, despite of all the world.

\textit{Tra.} That by degrees we mean to look into,
And watch our vantage in this business:
We'll over-reach the greybeard, Gremio,
The narrow-prying father, Mine,
The quaint musician, amorous Licio;
All for my master's sake, Lucentio.

\textit{Re-enter Grumio.}

Signior Gremio, came you from the church?

\textit{Gre.} As willingly as e'er I came from school.

\textit{Tra.} And is the bride and bridegroom coming home?

\textit{Gre.} A bridgroom say you? 'tis a groom indeed,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find.

\textit{Tra.} Curster than she? why, 'tis impossible.

\textit{Gre.} Why, he's a devil, a devil, a very fiend, \textit{Tra.} Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.

\textit{Gre.} Tut, she's a lamb, a dove, a fool to him! I'll tell you, Sir Lucentio: when the priest

\textit{160} Should ask, if Katharine should be his wife,

"Ay, by gogs-wouns," quoth he; and swore so loud,
That, all-amazed, the priest let fall the book;
And, as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridgroom took him such a cuff
That down fell priest and book and book and priest:

Now take them up, quoth he, 'if any list.'

\textit{Tra.} What said the wench when he rose again

\textit{Gre.} Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd

And swore.

As if the vicar meant to cozen him.
But after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine: 'A health!' quoth he, as if He had been aboard, carousing to his mates
After a storm; quaff'd off the muscadel
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason
But that his beard grew thin and hungerly
And seem'd to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack
That at the parting all the church did echo:
And I seeing this came thence for very shame;
And after me, I know, the rout is coming.
Such a mad marriage never was before:
Hark, hark! I hear the minstrels play.

\textit{[Music]}

\textit{Re-enter Petrucchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista, Hortensio, Grumio, and Train.}

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains:

I know you think to dine with me to-day,
And have prepared great store of wedding cheer
But so it is, my haste doth call me hence;
And therefore here I meant to take my leave.

\textit{Bap.} Is't possible you will away to-night?

Pet. I must away thence, before night come
Make it no wonder; if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay.
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me;
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

\textit{Tra.} Let us entreat you stay till after dinner

Pet. It may not be.

\textit{Gre.} Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

\textit{Kath.} Let me entreat you.

Pet. I am content.

\textit{Kath.} Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

\textit{Kath.} Now, if you love me, stay.

Pet. Grumio, my horse

Gru. Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eaten the horses.

\textit{Kath.} Nay, then,
Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day;

No, nor to-morrow, not till I please myself.
The door is open, sir; there lies your way:
You may be jogging whiles your boots are green
For me, I'll not be gone till I please myself; "Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly.

\textit{Pet.} O Kate, content thee; prithee, be no angry.

\textit{Kath.} I will be angry; what hast thou to do

Father, be quiet: he shall stay my leisure.

\textit{Gre.} Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to work.

\textit{Kath.} Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner

I see a woman may be made a fool,
If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.
THE TAMING OF THE SHEEW.

Scene II.

Obey the bride, you that attend on her; Go to the feast, revel and domineer,
Carouse full measure to her maidenhead, Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves: But for my bonny Kate, she must with me. Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret; I will be master of what is mine own: She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house, My household stuff, my field, my barn, My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing; And here she stands, touch her whoever dare; I'll bring mine action on the proudest he That stops my way in Padua. Grumio, Draw forth thy weapon, we are beset with thieves; Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate: I'll buckler thee against a million. [Exeunt Petrucho, Katharina, and Grumio.

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones. Gre. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing. Tra. Of all mad matches never was the like. Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister? Bian. That, being mad herself, she's madly mated. Gre. I warrant him, Petrucho is Kated. [Exeunt Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridegroom wants For to supply the places at the table, you know there wants no junkets at the feast. Lucentio, you shall supply the bridegroom's place; And let Bianca take her sister's room. Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it? Bap. She shall, Lucentio. Come, gentlemen, let's go. [Exeunt. ACT IV.

Scene I. Petrucho's country house.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. Fie, fie on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all foul ways! Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so rayed? was ever man so wrote on? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm them. Now, were I a little pot and soon hot, my very lips might object to my heart; my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me: but I, with blowing fire he, shall warm myself; for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Fools, ho! Curtis. Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that calls so coldly?

Gru. A piece of ice: if thou doubt it, thou art a fool; slant from my shoulder to my heel with no greater a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis. Curt. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio? Gru. O, ay, Curtis, ay: and therefore fire, re; cast on no water. Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported?

Gru. She was, good Curtis, before this frost: but, thou knowest, winter tames man, woman and beast; for it hath tamed my old master and my new mistress and myself, fellow Curtis. Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast. Gru. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand, she being now at hand, thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office? Curt. I prithee, good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world? Gru. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine; and therefore fire: do thy duty, and have thy duty; for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death. 40 Curt. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio, the news. Gru. Why, 'Jack, boy! ho! boy!' and as much news as will aw. Curt. Come, you are so full of cony-catching! Gru. Why, therefore fire; for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewn, cobwebs swept; the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order? Curt. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news. Gru. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out. Curt. How? Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale. 60 Curt. Let's ha't, good Grumio. Curt. Lend thine ear. Curt. Here. Gru. There. [Strikes him. Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale. Gru. And therefore 'tis called a sensible tale: and this cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Imprimis, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress.— 70 Curt. Both of one horse? Gru. What's that to thee? Curt. Why, a horse. Gru. Tell thou the tale; but hadst thou not crossed me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoled, how he left her with the horse upon her, how he beat me because her horse stumbled, how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me, how he swore, how she prayed, that never prayed before, how I cried, how the horses ran away, how her bride was burst, how I lost my crupper, with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Curt. By this reckoning he is more shrew than she. Gru. Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find when he comes home. But what talk I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, 10—2
Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop and the rest:
let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed and their garters of an indifferent knit: let them curtsey with their left legs and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?

_Curt._ They are.

_Gru._ Call them forth.

_Curt._ Do you hear, ho? you must meet my master to countenance my mistress.

_Gru._ Why, she hath a face of her own.

_Curt._ Who knows not that?

_Gru._ Thou, it seems, that calls for company to countenance her.

_Curt._ I call them forth to credit her.

_Gru._ Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

_Enter four or five Serving-men.

_Nath._ Welcome home, Grumio!

_Phil._ How now, Grumio!

_Tos._ What, Grumio!

_Nich._ Fellow Grumio!

_Nath._ How now, old lad?

_Gru._ Welcome, you;—how now, you;—what,
you;—fellow, you;—and thus much for greeting.
Now, my spruce companions, is all ready,
and all things neat.

_Nath._ All things is ready. How near is our master?

_Gru._ E'en at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not—Cock's passion, silence! I hear my master.

_Enter Petruchio and Katharina._

_Pet._ Where be these knaves? What, no man at door

To hold my stirrup nor to take my horse!
Where is Nathanial, Gregory, Philip?

_All Serv._ Here, here, sir; here, sir.

_Pet._ Here, sir! here, sir! here, sir! here, sir!
you logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms!
What, no attendance? no regard? no duty?
Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

_Gru._ Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.

_Pet._ You peasant swain! you whoreson malthorse drudge!

Did I not bid thee meet me in the park,
And bring along these rascal knaves with thee?

_Gru._ Nathanial's coat, sir, was not fully made,
And Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' the heel;

There was no link to colour Peter's hat,
And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing:

There were none fine but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory;

The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly:
Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.

_Pet._ Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in.

[Exeunt Servants.

_Singing_ Where is the life that late I led—
Where are those—Sit down, Kate, and welcome.—
Soul, soud, soud, soud!

_Re-enter Servants with supper._

Why, when, I say? Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.

Off with my boots, you rogues! you villains, then?

[ Singe_ It was the friar of orders grey,
As he forth walked on his way:—
Out, you rogue! you pluck my foot awry:
Take that, and mend the plucking off the other.

[Strikes him.

_Be merry, Kate. Some water, here; what, ho!
Where's my spaniel Troilus? Sirrah, get you hence,
And bid my cousin Ferdinand come hither:
One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.

Where are my slippers? Shall I have some water?

_Enter one with water._

Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily.
You whoreson villain! will you let it fall?

[Strikes him._

_Kath._ Patience, I pray you; 'twas a fault unwilling.

_Pet._ A whoreson beetle-headed, flap-eard knave!

Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stoma-ach.

Will you give thanks, sweet Kate; or else shall I?
What's this? mutton?

_First Serv._ Ay.

_Pet._ Who brought it? I.

_Pet._ 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat.
What does are these? Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all:

[Throws the meat, &c. about the stage.

You heedless jolthead and unmanner'd slaves!
What, do you grumble? I'll be with you straight.

_Kath._ I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet:

The meat was well, if you were so contented._

_Pet._ I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away;
And I expressly am forbid to touch it,
For it engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'were that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow 'shall be mended,
And, for this night, we'll fast for company:

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

[Exeunt._

_Re-enter Servants severally._

_Nath._ Peter, didst ever see the like?

_Peter._ He kills her in her own humour.

_Re-enter CURTIS._

_Gru._ Where is he?

_Curt._ In her chamber, making a sermon of continency to her;
And rails, and swears, and rates, that she, poor
soul,

Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak,
And sits as one new-risen from a dream.

_Away, away! for he is coming hither._

[Exeunt._
Re-enter Petruelio.

Petr. Thus have I politly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully.
My falcon now is sharp and passing empty;
And till she stoop she must not be full-gorged,
For then she never looks upon her lure.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come and know her keeper's call,
That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites
That bate and beat and will not be obedient.
She eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat; 210
Last night she slept not, nor to-night shall she not.

As with the meat, some undeserved fault
I'll find about the making of the bed:
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:
Ay, and amid this hurly I intend
That all is done in reverent care of her;
And in conclusion she shall watch all night:
And if she chance to nod I'll rail and bawl!
And with the clamour keep her still awake.

This is a way to kill a wife with kindness;
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour.

He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak: 'tis charity to show. [Exit.

Scene II. Padua. Before Baptista's house.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.

Tra. Is't possible, friend Licio, that Mistress Bianca
Doth fancy any other but Lucentio?

Her. Sir, to satisfy you in what I have said,
Stand by and mark the manner of his teaching.

Enter Bianca and Lucentio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profit you in what you read?

Bian. What, master, read you? first resolve me that.

Luc. I read that I profess, the Art to Love.

Bian. And may you prove, sir, master of your art!

Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart!

Hor. Quick procedes, marry! Now, tell me, I pray,
You that durst swear that your mistress Bianca
Loved none in the world so well as Lucentio.

Tra. O despiteful love! unconstant woman-kind!
I tell thee, Licio, this is wonderful.

Hor. Mistake no more: I am not Licio,
Not a musician, as I seem to be;
But one that scorn to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion!

Know, sir, that I am call'd Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca:
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness,
I will with you, if you be so contented,
Forswear Bianca and her love for ever.

Hor. See, how they kiss and court! Signior Lucentio,
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow
Never to woo her more, but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry with her though she would entreat:

Fie on her! see, how beastly she doth court him!

Hor. Would all the world but he had quite forsworn!

For me, that I may surely keep mine oath,
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which hath as long loved me
As I have loved this proud disdainful haggard.
And so farewell, Signior Lucentio.

Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks,
Shall win my love: and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before. [Exit.

Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace
As 'longeth to a lover's blessed case!

Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love,
And have forsworn you with Hortensio.

Bian. Tranio, you jest: but have you both forsworn me?

Tra. Mistress, we have.

Luc. Then we are rid of Licio.

Tra. I' faith, he'll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be woo'd and wedded in a day.

Bian. God give him joy!

Tra. Ay, and he'll tame her.

Bian. He says so, Tranio.

Tra. Faith, he is gone unto the taming-school.

Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistress, and Petruelio is the master;
That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long,
To tame a shrew and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. O master, master, I have watch'd so long
That I am dog-weary; but at last I spied an ancient angel coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Biondello?

Bion. Master, a mercatante, or a pedant,
I know not what; but formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tra. If he be crenulous and trust my tale,
I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio,
And give assurance to Baptista Minola,
As if he were the right Vincentio.

Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exeunt Lucentio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

Tra. And you, sir! you are welcome.
Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two:
But then up farther, and as far as Rome;
And so to Tripoli, if God lend me life.

Tra. What countryman, I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua, sir? marry, God forbid!
And come to Padua, careless of your life?
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW. [Act IV.

Ped. My life, sir! how, I pray? for that goes hard. 80

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua.
To come to Padua. Know you not the cause?
Your ships are stay'd at Venice, and the duke,
For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him,
Hath publish'd and proclam'd it openly:
'Tis marvel, but that you are but newly come,
You might have heard it else proclam'd about.
Ped. Alas! sir, it is worse for me than so;
For I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence and must here deliver them. 90

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy,
This will I do, and this I will advise you:
First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?
Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa I have often been,
Pisa renowned for grave citizens.

Tra. Among them know you one Vincentio?
Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him;
A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you. 100

Bion. [Aside] As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tra. 'Tis to save your life in this extremity,
This favour will I do you for his sake;
And think it not the worst of all your fortunes
That you are like to Sir Vincentio.
His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in my house you shall be friendly lodged:
Look that you take upon you as you should;
You understand me, sir: so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city: 110
If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.
Ped. O sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me to make the matter good.
This by the way, I let you understand:
My father is here look'd for every day,
To pass assurance of a dower in marriage
'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here:
In all these circumstances I'll instruct you:
Go with me to clothe you as becomes you. 120

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. A room in Petruchio's house.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Gru. No, no, forsooth; I dare not for my life.

Kath. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears:
What, did he marry me to flamm me?
Beggars, that come unto my father's door,
Upon entreaty have a present alms;
If not, elsewhere they meet with charity:
But I, who never knew how to entreat,
Nor never needed that I should entreat,
Am starved for meat, giddy for lack of sleep,
With oaths kept waking and with brawling fed: 10
And that which spites me more than all these wants,
He does it under name of perfect love;
As who should say, if I should sleep or eat,
'Twere deadly sickness or else present death.
I prithee go and get me some repast,
I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Gru. What say you to a neat's foot?

Kath. 'Tis passing good: I prithee let me have it.

Gru. I fear it is too cholerick a meat.
How say you to a fat tripe finely broil'd?

Kath. I like it well: good Grumio, fetch it me.

Gru. I cannot tell; I fear 'tis cholerick.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?

Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon.

Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Kath. Why then, the beef, and let the mustard rest.

Gru. Nay then, I will not: you shall have the mustard,
Or else you get no beef of Grumio.

Kath. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Gru. Why then, the mustard without the beef.

Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave, [Beats him.

That feed'st me with the very name of meat:
Sorrow on thee and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery!
Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio and Hortensio with meat.

Pet. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all am'rt?

Kath. Mistress, what cheer?

Pet. Faith, as cold as can be.

Kath. Pluck up thy spirits; look cheerfully upon me.

Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am to dress thy meat myself and bring it thee: 40
I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.
What, not a word? Nay, then thou lovest it not;
And all my pains is sorted to no proof.
Here, take away this dish.

Kath. I pray you, let it stand.

Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks;
And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.

Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame.

Come, Mistress Kate, I'll bear you company.

Pet. [Aside] Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st me.

Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!
Kate, eat apace: and now, my honey love,
Will we return unto thy father's house
And revel it as bravely as the best.
With silken coats and caps and golden rings,
With ruffs and cuffs and fardingales and things;
With scarfs and fans and double change of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads and all this knavery.
What, hast thou dined? The tailor stays thy leisure,
To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

[Exeunt.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments;
Lay forth the gown.

Enter Haberdasher.

What news with you, sir?

Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bepeak.

Pet. Why, this was moulded on a porringer;
A velvet dish: fie, fie! 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why, 'tis a cockle or a walnut-shell,
A knock, a tock, a trick, a baby's cap.
Away with it! come, let me have a bigger.

Kath. I'll have no bigger: this doth fit the time,
And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.

Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too,
THE TAMING OF THE SHERW.

Pet. Read it.
Gr. The note lies in th' throat, if he say I said so.
Tal. [Reads] 'Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown.'
Gr. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread: I said a gown.
Tal. [Reads] 'With a small compassed cape.'
Gr. I confess the cape.
Tal. [Reads] 'With a trunk sleeve;' Gr. I confess two sleeves.
Tal. [Reads] 'The sleeves curiously cut.'
Pet. Ay, there's the villain.
Gr. Error 'tis the bill, sir; error 'tis the bill. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out and sewed up again; and that I'll prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.
Tal. This is true that I say: an I had thee in place where, thou shouldst know it. 151
Gr. I am for thee straight: take thou the bill, give me thy mete-yard, and spare not me.
Hor. God-a-mercy, Grumio! then he shall have no odds.
Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not for me.
Gr. You are i' the right, sir: 'tis for my mistress.
Pet. Go, take it up unto thy master's use.
Gr. Villain, not for thy life: take up my mistress' gown for thy master's use! 161
Pet. Why, sir, what's your conceit in that?
Gr. O, sir, the conceit is deeper than you think for:
Take up my mistress' gown to his master's use! O, fie, fie, fie!
Pet. [Aside] Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor paid.
Go take it hence; be gone, and say no more.
Hor. Tailor, I'll pay thee for thy gown to-morrow:
Take no unkindness of his hasty words:
Away! I say; commend me to thy master. 170
[Exit Tailor.
Pet. Well, come, my Kate; we will unto your father's Even in these honest mean habiliments:
Our purses shall be proud, our garments poor;
For 'tis the mind that makes the body rich;
And as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peareth in the meanest habit.
What is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful?
Or is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye? 180
O, no, good Kate; neither art thou the worse
For this poor furniture and mean array.
If thou account'st it shame, lay it on me;
And therefore frolic: we will henceforth, To feast and sport us at thy father's house.
Go, call my men, and let us straight to him;
And bring our horses unto Long-lane end;
There will we mount, and thither walk on foot.
Let's see; I think 'tis now some seven o'clock,
And well we may come there by dinner-time. 190
Kath. I dare assure you, sir, 'tis almost two;
And 'twill be supper-time ere you come there.
Pet. It shall be seven ere I go to horse:
Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do,
You are still crossing it. Sirs, let't alone:
I will not go to-day; and ere I do,
It shall be what o'clock I say it is.
Hor. [Aside] Why, so this gallant will command the sun.

[Exeunt.]

Scene IV. Padua. Before Baptista's house.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant dressed like Vincentio.

Tra. Sir, this is the house: please it you that I call?
Ped. Ay, what else? and but I be deceived
Signior Baptista may remember me,
Near twenty years ago, in Genoa,
Where we were lodgers at the Pegasus.

Tra. 'Tis well; and hold your own, in any case,
With such austerity as 'longeth to a father.

Ped. I warrant you.

Enter Biondello.

But, sir, here comes your boy;
'Twere good he were school'd.

Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah Biondello,
Now do your duty throughly, I advise you: 11
Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.

Bion. Tut, fear not me.

Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

Bion. I told him that your father was at Venice,
And that you look'd for him this day in Padua.

Tra. Thou'rt a tall fellow: hold thee that to drink.

Here comes Baptista; set your countenance, sir.

Enter Baptista and Lucentio.

Signior Baptista, you are happily met.

[To the Pedant] Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of:
I pray you, stand, good father to me now,
Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft, son!

Sir, by your leave: having come to Padua
To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio
May have displeasure with a weighty cause
Of love between your daughter and himself:
And, for the good report I hear of you
And for the love he beareth to your daughter
And to her, to stay him not too long,
I am content, in a good father's care,
To have him match'd; and if you please to like
No worse than I, upon some agreement
Me shall you find ready and willing
With one consent to have her so bestow'd;
For curious I cannot be with you,
Signior Baptista, of whom I fear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say:
You match'd and your shortness please me well.
Right true it is, your son Lucentio here
Doth love my daughter and she loveth him,
Or both ensemble deeply their affection:
And therefore, if you say no more than this,
That like a father you will deal with him
And pass my daughter a sufficient dower,
The match is made, and all is done:
Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Tra. I thank you, sir. Where then do you know best
We be affied and such assurance ta'en
As shall with either part's agreement stand? 90

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know,
Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants:
Besides, old Gremio is hearkening still;
And happily we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, an it like you:
There doth my father lie; and there, this night,
We'll pass the business privately and well.
Send for your daughter by your servant here;
My boy shall fetch the scrivenner-presently.

The worst is this, that, at so slender warning, 100
You are like to have a thin and slender pittance

Bap. It likes me well. Biondello, hie you home
And bid Bianca make her ready straight;
And, if you will, tell what hath happened,
Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.

Bion. I pray the gods she may with all my heart!

Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone.

[Exit Bion.]

Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way? Welcome, one mess is like to be your cheer: 120
Come, sir; we will better it in Pisa.

Bap. I follow you.

[Exeunt Tranio, Pedant, and Baptista.]

Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. Cambio!

Luc. What sayest thou, Biondello?
Bion. You saw my master wink and laug upon you?

Luc. Biondello, what of that?

Bion. Faith, nothing; but has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.

Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.

Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.

Luc. And what of him?

Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.

Luc. And then?

Bion. The old priest of Saint Luke's church is at your command at all hours.

Luc. And what of all this?

Bion. I cannot tell; expect they are business about a counterfeit assurance: take you assurance of her, 'Cum privilegio ad imprimendum solum:
the church; take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses:
If this be not that you look for, I have no more
to say,
But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

Luc. Hearkest thou, Biondello?

Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench mar ried in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir and so, adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix. 135

[Exit Luc.]

Bion. I may, and will, if she be so contented
She will be pleased; then wherefore should I doubt
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her:
It shall go hard if Cambio go without her. 140

[Exit]
Scene V. A public road.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Hortensio, and Servants.

Petr. Come on, i' God's name; once more to-ward our father's, good Lord, how bright and Goodly shines the moon! Kath. The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now. Petr. I say it is the moon that shines so bright. Kath. I know it is the sun that shines so bright. Petr. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself, shall be moon, or star, or what I list, ere I journey to your father's house. o on, and fetch our horses back again. Vermon cross'd and cross'd; nothing but cross'd! Her. Say as he says, or we shall never go. Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far, but be it moon, or sun, or what you please: n if you please to call it a rush-candle, henceforth I vow it shall be so for me. Petr. I say it is the moon. Kath. I know it is the moon. Petr. Nay, then you lie: it is the blessed sun. Kath. Then, God be blessed, it is the blessed sun: if sun it is not, when you say it is not; nd the moon changes even as your mind; ut that you will have it named, even that it is; nd so it shall be so for Katharine. Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won. Petr. Well, forward, forward! thus the bowl should run, nd not unluckily against the bias. ut, soft! company is coming here. Enter Vincentio.

'o Vincentio! Good morrow, gentle mistress: where away? ell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too, ast thou beheld a fresher gentlemewoman? uch war of white and red within her cheeks! 30 thars do spangle heaven with such beauty, s those two eyes become that heavenly face? air lovely maid, once more good day to thee. sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake. Hor. A' will make the man mad, to make a oman of him. Kath. Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet, hither away, or where is thy abode? nppy the parents of so fair a child: npper the man, whom favourable stars fit thee for his lovely bed-fellow! Petr. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not mad: his is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd, nd not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes, hat have been so bedazzled with the sun ha out everything I look on seemeth green: ow I perceive thou art a reverend father; ardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking. Petr. Do, good old grandsire; and withal make known Which way thou travellest: if along with us, We shall be joyful of thy company. Vin. Fair sir, and you my merry mistress, That with your strange encounter much amazed me, My name is call'd Vincentio; my dwelling Pisa; And bound I am to Padua; there to visit A son of mine, which long I have not seen. Petr. What is his name? Vin. Lucentio, gentle sir. Petr. Happily met: the happier for thy son. And now by law, as well as reverend age, 60 I may entitle thee my loving father: The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman, Thy son by this hath married. Wonder not, Nor be not grieved: she is of good esteem, Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth; Beside, so qualified as may beseech The spouse of any noble gentleman. Let me embrace with old Vincentio, And wander we to see thy honest son, Who will of thy arrival be full joyous. 70 Vin. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure, Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest Upon the company you overtake? Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is. Petr. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof; For our first merriment hath made thee jealous. Hor. Well, Petruchio, this has put me in heart. Have to my widow! and if she be froward, Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward. [Exit.

ACT V.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello: but they may chance to need thee at home; therefore leave us. Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your back; and then come back to my master's as soon as I can. [Exit Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello. Gre. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, Grumio, with Attendants.

Pet. Sir. here's the door, this is Lucentio's house: My father's bears more toward the market-place; Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir. Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go: I think I shall command your welcome here, And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward. [Knocks. Gre. They're busy within; you were best knock louder.

Pedant looks out of the window.

Ped. What's he that knocks as he would beat down the gate?
Vin. Is Signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you your son was well beloved in Padua. Do you hear, sir? To leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell Signior Lucentio that his father is come from Pisa and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest; his father is come from Padua and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. [To Vincentio] Why, how now, gentleman! why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain: I believe a'means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together: God send 'em good shipping! But who is here? mine old master Vincentio! now we are undone and brought to nothing.

Bion. I hope I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue. What, have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you! no, sir; I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir: see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Is't so, indeed? [Beats Biondello.

Ped. Help, help, help! here's a madman will murder me.

[Exit 61

Ped. Help, son! help, Signior Baptista!

[Exit from above.

Pet. Prithee, Kate, let's stand aside and see the end of this controversy. [They retire.

Re-enter Pedant below; Tranio, Baptista, and Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are you that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir! nay, what are you, sir? O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a capotain hat! O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman but your habit, but your words show you a madman. Why, sir, what 'cerns it you if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father! O villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake, sir, you mistake, sir. Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name! as if I knew not his name, I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, Signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O, he hath murdered him! Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke's name. O, my son, my son! Tell me thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer.

Enter one with an Officer.

Carry this mad knave to the gaol. Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the gaol!

Gre. Stay, officer: he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Tell not, Signior Gremio: I say he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, Signior Baptista, lest you be cony-catch'd in this business: I dare swear that is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou darest.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wert best say that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be Signior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard! to the gaol with him!

Vin. Thus strangers may be haled and abused.

O monstrous villain!

Re-enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Bion. O! we are spoiled and—yonder he is deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. [Kneeling] Pardon, sweet father.

Vin. Lives my sweet son.

Bion. [Exeunt Biondello, Tranio, and Pedant: as fast as may be]

Bian. Pardon, dear father.

Bap. How hast thou offended

Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, Right son to the right Vincentio.

That have by marriage made thy daughter mine While counterfeit suppos'd blear'd thine eyne.

Gre. Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!

Vin. Where is that damned villain Tranio, That faced and braved me in this matter so?

Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is changed into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca's love Made me exchange my state with Tranio, While he did bear my countenance in the town; And happily I have arrived at the last Unto the wished haven of my bliss.

What Tranio did, myself enforced him to; Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the gaol.
THE TAMING OF THE SREWW.

Pet. Very well mended. Kiss him for that, good widow.
Kath. 'He that is giddy thinks the world turns round.'
I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.
Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew,
Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe:
And now you know my meaning. 30
Kath. A very mean meaning:
Wid. Right, I mean you.
Kath. And I am mean indeed, respecting
you.
Pet. To her, Kate!
Hor. To her, widow!
Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.
Hor. That's my office.
Pet. Spoke like an officer: ha' to thee, lad!
[Drinks to Hortensio.
Baph. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?
Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.
Bian. Head, and butt! an hasty-witted body Would say your head and butt were head and horn.
Vin. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd
you?
Bian. Ay, but not frightened; therefore I'll sleep again.
Pet. Nay, that you shall not: since you have begun,
Have at you for a bitter jest or two!
Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush;
And then pursue me as you draw your bow.
You are welcome all.
[Exeunt Bianca, Katharina, and Widow.
Pet. She hath prevented me. Here, Signior
Tranio,
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not;
Therefore a health to all that shot and miss'd. 51
Tra. O, sir, Lucentio slip'd me like his greyhound,
Which runs himself and catches for his master.
Pet. A good swift simile, but something cur-riish.
Tra. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself:
'Tis thought your deer does hold you at a bay.
Baph. O ho, Petruchio! Tranio hits you
now.
Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.
Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you
here?
Pet. A' has a little gall'd me, I confess; 60
And, as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it main'd you two outright.
Baph. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,
I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.
Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore for assurance
Let's each one send unto his wife:
And he whose wife is most obedient
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.
Hor. Content. What is the wager?
Luc. Twenty crowns. 70
Pet. Twenty crowns!
I'll venture so much of my hawk or hound,
But twice ten times so much upon my wife.
Luc.  A hundred then.
Hor.  That will I.
Post.  A match! 'tis done.

Go, Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.
Bion.  I go.
[Exit.

Bap.  Sir, I'll be your half, Bianca comes.
Luc.  I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter Biondello.

How now! what news?
Bion.  Sir, my mistress sends you word 80
That she is busy and she cannot come.
Post.  How! she is busy and she cannot come!
Is that an answer?
Gre.  Ay, and a kind one too:
Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.
Pet.  I hope, better.
Hor.  Sirrah Biondello, go and entreat my wife
To come to me forthwith.
Pet.  O, ho! entreat her!
Nay, then she must needs come.
Hor.  I am afraid, sir,
Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Biondello.

Now, where's my wife?
Bion.  She says you have some goodly jest in hand:
She will not come; she bids you come to her.
Pet.  Worse and worse; she will not come!
O vile!
Intolerable, not to be endured!
Sirrah Grumio, go to your mistress:
Say, I command her come to me.
[Exit Grumio.
Hor.  I know her answer.
Pet.  What?
Hor.  She will not.
Pet.  The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.
Bap.  Now, by my hollidame, here comes Katharina!

Re-enter Katharina.

Kath.  What is your will, sir, that you send 100
for me?
Pet.  Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?
Kath.  They sit conferring by the parlour fire.
Pet.  Go, fetch them hither: if they deny to come,
Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands:
Away, I say, and bring them hither straight.
[Exit Katharina.

Luc.  Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.
Hor.  And so it is: I wonder what it bodes.
Pet.  Marry, peace it bodes, and love and quiet life,
And awful rule and right supremacy;
And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy?
Bap.  Now, fair befall thee, good Petruchio!
The wager thou hast won; and I will add
Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns;
Another dowry to another daughter,
For she is changed, as she had never been.
Pet.  Nay, I will win my wager better yet
And show more sign of her obedience,
Her new-built virtue and obedience.
See where she comes and brings your froward wife
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.

Re-enter Katharina, with Bianca and Widow.
Katharine, that cap of yours becomes you not.
Off with that bauble, throw it under-foot.
Wid.  Lord, let me never have a cause to see
Till I be brought to such a silly pass!
Bian.  Fie! what a foolish duty call you that!
Luc.  I would your duty were as foolish to
The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,
Hath cost me an hundred crowns since s-per-time.
Bian.  The more fool you, for laying my duty.
Pet.  Katharine, I charge thee, tell the strong women
What duty they do owe their lords and husband Wid.  Come, come, you're mocking: we have no telling.
Pet.  Come on, I say; and first begin with Kath.  Fie, fie! unknit that threatening unk brow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor;
It bloats thy beauty as frosts do bite the meads
Confounds thy fame as whirlwinds shake finds
And in no sense is meet or amiable.
A woman moved is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeing, thick, bereft of beauty;
And while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for th
And for thy maintenance commits his body
To painful labour both by sea and land,
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure a safe;
And craves no other tribute at thy hands
But love, fair looks and true obedience;
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such duty as the subject owes the prince
Even such a woman oweth to her husband;
And when she is froward, peevish, sullen, sour
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a foul contending rebel
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?
I am ashamed that women are so simple
To offer war where they should kneel for peace
Or seek for rule, supremacy and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love and obey.
Why are our bodies soft and weak and smooth
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world,
But yet our soft conditions and our hearts
Should well agree with our external parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable worms!
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,
heart as great, my reason haply more,
yandy word for word and frown for frown;
now I see our lances are but straws,
strength as weak, our weakness past compare, seeing to be most which we indeed least are,

n'vail your stomachs, for it is no boot,
place your hands below your husband's foot:
ken of which duty, if he please,
hand is ready; may it do him ease.

't. Why, there's a wencl! Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

uc. Well, go thy ways, old lad; for thou shalt ha't.

Vin. 'Tis a good hearing when children are toward.
Luc. But a harsh hearing when women are froward.
Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed.
We three are married, but you two are sped.

[To Luc.] 'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;
And, being a winner, God give you good night!

[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharina.
Hor. Now, go thy ways; thou hast tamed a curst shrew.
Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tamed so.

[Exeunt.}

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

KING OF FRANCE.
Duke of Florence.
Bertram, Count of Rousillon.
Lafeu, an old lord.
Parolles, a follower of Bertram.
Steward, servants to the Countess of Clown.
A Page.

Countess of Rousillon, mother to Bertram.

HELENA, a gentlewoman protected by Parolles.
An old Widow of Florence.
Diana, daughter to the Widow.
VIOLENTA, neighbours and friends to MARIANA, Widow.

Lords, Officers, Soldiers, &c., French and Florentine.

SCENE: Rousillon; Paris; Florence; Marseilles.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Rousillon. The Count’s palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafeu, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I in going, madam, weep o’er my father’s death anew: but I must attend his majesty’s command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam; you, sir, a father: he that so generally is at all times good must of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty’s amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father,—O, that ‘had’! how sad a passage ‘tis!—whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the king’s sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king’s disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mourningly: he was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Would this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord, and I questioned to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which makes fair greater; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with it; they are virtues and traits too: in her they are the better for their simplicity: she derives her honesty and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. ’Tis the best brine a maiden can sow on her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart but the tyranny her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheer No more of this, Helena; go to, no more; let it be rather thought you affect a sorrow than have it.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that?

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram, and succeed thy father.

In manners, as in shape! thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness Share with thine birthright! Love all, trust a few Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use, and keep thy friend Under thy own life’s key: be check’d for silence But never tax’d for speech. What heaven more will, That thee may furnish and my prayers plac down, Fall on thy head! Farewell, my lord; ‘Tis an unseason’d courtier; good my lord, Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best

That shall attend his love.
Hec. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't; 't is against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, to accuse your mothers; which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin; virginity murders itself; and should be burned in highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not; you cannot choose but lose by 't: out with 't! within ten year it will make itself ten, which is a goody increase; and the principal itself not much the worse: away with 't!

Hec. How might one dó, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: marry, ill, to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with 't while 'tis vendible; answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion: richly suited, but unsuitable; just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which wear not: Your grace is better in your pie and your porridge than in your cheek: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears, it looks ill, it eats drily; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet 'tis a withered pear: will you any thing with it?

Hec. 'Tis not my virginity yet....

There shall your master have a thousand loves,
A mother and a mistress and a friend, 181
A phoenix, captain and an enemy,
A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,
A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear;
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord dulce,
His faith, his sweet disaster; with a world
Of pretty, fond, adoptive christendoms,
That blinking Cupid gossips. Now shall he—
I know not what he shall. God send him well!
The court's a learning place, and he is one— 191

Par. What one, I faith?

Hec. That I wish well. 'Tis pity—

Par. What's pity?

Hec. That wishing well had not a body in't,
Which might be felt; that we, the poorer born,
Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And show what we alone must think, which never Returns us thanks. 200

\begin{center}{Enter Parolles.}\end{center}

g'd One that goes with him: I love him for his sake; 110
d yet I know him a notorious liar, ink him a great way fool, solely a coward;
these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
at they take place, when virtue's steely bones ok bleak! the cold wind: withal, full oft we see
'd wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

\textbf{Par.} Save you, fair queen?

Hec. And you, monarch?

\textbf{Par.} No.

Hec. And no.

\textbf{Par.} Are you meditating on virginity?

Hec. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in;
I let me ask you a question. Man is enemy virginity; how may we barricado it against him?

\textbf{Par.} Keep him out.

Hec. But he assails; and our virginity, though in, the defence yet is weak: unfool to us as warlike resistance.

\textbf{Par.} There is none: man, sitting down before
, will undermine you and blow you up. 130

Hec. Bless our poor virginity from underminers blowers up! Is there no military policy, how gins might blow up men?

\textbf{Par.} Virginity being blown down, man will clicker be blown up: marry, in blowing him in again, with the breach yourselves made, lose your city. It is not politic in the com-nwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss virginity is rational increase and there was ever virgin got till virginity was first lost. That a were made of is metal to make virgins.
virginity by being once lost may be ten times and by being ever kept, it is ever lost: 'tis too
d a companion; away with 't!

\begin{center}{Enter Page.}\end{center}

\textbf{Page.} Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you. 181

\textbf{Par.} Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.

\textbf{Hec.} Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

\textbf{Par.} Under Mars.

\textbf{Hec.} I especially think, under Mars.

\textbf{Par.} Why under Mars?

\textbf{Hec.} The wars have so kept you under that you must needs be born under Mars.
Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go so much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety: but the composition that your valour and fear makes in you is a virtue of a good wing, and like the wear well. 219

Par. I am so full of business, I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the which, my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast not, remember thy friends: get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee: so, farewell. [Exit. 230

Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope, only doth backward pull
Our slow designs when we ourselves are dull.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
† The mightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes and kiss like native things.
Impossible be strange attempts to those.
That weigh their pains in sense and do suppose † What hath been cannot be: who ever strove
To show her merit, that did miss her love?
The king's disease—my project may deceive me,
But my intents are fix'd and will not leave me.
[Exit. 239

SCENE II. Paris. The King's palace.

FLOURISH of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by the
Have fought with equal fortune and continue
A braving war.

First Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible; we here receive it
A certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria,
With caution that the Florentine will move us
For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business and would seem
To have us make denial.

First Lord. His love and wisdom,
Approved so to your majesty, may plead
F or ampest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes:
Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.

Sec. Lord. It well may serve
A nursery to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here?

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEU, and PAROLLES.

First Lord. It is the Count Rousillon, my good lord,

Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face,
Frank nature, rather curious than in haste,
Hath well composed thee. Thy father's noble parts
Mayst thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness
Now.

As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership! He did look far Into the service of the time and was Discipled of the bravest; he lasted long;
But on us both did haggis age steal on
And wore us out of act. It much repairs me
To talk of your good father. In his youth
He had the wit which I can well observe
To-day in our young lords; but they may jest
Till their own scorn return to them unnod
Ere they can hide their levity in honour:
† So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
Would nor his pride or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awakened them, and his honour,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him;
He used as creatures of another place
And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility.
† In their poor praise he humbled. 'Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them no
But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir,
Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;
So in approv'd lives not his epitaph
As in your royal speech.

King. Would I were with him! He would always say—
Methinks I hear him now; his plausive words
He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them, To grow there and to bear,—'Let me not live,'
This his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,
When it was out,—'Let me not live,' quoth he,
'After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses (All but new things disdain; whose judgements are Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies
Expire before their fashions. This he wish'd:
I after him do after him wish too,
Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home,
I quickly were dissolved from my hive,
To give some labourers room.

Sec. Lord. You are loved, sir
They that least lend it you shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know't. How long is't count,
Since the physician at your father's died? 7
He was much famed.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord

King. If he were living, I would try him yet
Lend me an arm; the rest have worn me out
With several applications: nature and sickness
Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count;
My son's no dearer.

Ber. Thank your majesty.

[Exeunt. Flourish]
SCENE III. Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear; what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even our content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we wound our modesty and make foul the clearness of our servants, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you one, sirrah: the complaints I have heard of you do not all believe: 'tis my slowness that I do not; for I know you lack not folly to commit and, have ability enough to make such bawries yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam, 'tis not so well that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned: but, I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the world, Isabel the woman and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good will in this case.

Count. In what case?

Clo. In Isabel's case and nine own. Service is a heritage; and I think I shall never have the easing of God till I have issue o' my body; for I say barnes are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it; I am even on the flesh; and he must needs go to the devil driven.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, and you all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out o' friends, madam; and I hope have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You're shallow, madam, in great friends; the knaves come to do that for me which I awerry of. He that earns my land spares my am and gives me leave to in the crop; if I be a cuckold, he's my drudge: he that comforts my life is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he adds my flesh my blood and lover my flesh at blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. Men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charon the puritan and old Poyssam the papist, how-me'er their hearts are severed in religion, their beds are both one; they may jowl horns together, like any deer 't the herd.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and duminous knife?

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat,
Which men full true shall find;

Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir; I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you; of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her; Helen, I mean.

Clo. Was this fair face the cause, quoth she,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?

Fend done, done fond,
Was this King Priam's joy?

With that she sighed as she stood,
With that she sighed as she stood,
And gave this sentence then;

Among nine bad if one be good,
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam; which is a purifying o' the song: would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman, if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth a'! An we might have a good woman born but one every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere a' pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you.

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the survice of humility over the black gown of a big heart. I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.

Enter the Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her than is paid, and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than I think she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; Love no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level; Dian no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight surprised, without rescue in the first assault or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow that 'ere I heard virgin exclaim in: which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal; sithence, in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly; keep it to yourself; many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance that I could neither believe nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: stall this in your bosom; and thank you for your honest care: I will speak with you further anon.

[Exit Steward.
Enter Helena.

Count.

Even so it was with me when I was young:

If ever we are nature's, these are ours; this torn

Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong;

Our blood to us, this to our blood is born;

It is the show and seal of nature's truth,

Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth:

By our remembrances of days foregone,

Such were our faults, or then we thought them

none.

Her eye is sick on't: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother:

Why not a mother? When I said 'a mother,'

Methought you saw a serpent: what's in 'mother,'

That you start at? I say, I am your mother;

And put you in the catalogue of those

That were enomwed mine: 'tis often seen 150

Adoption strives with nature and choice breeds

A native slip to us from foreign seeds;

You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan,

Yet I express to you a mother's care:

God's mercy, maiden! does it curd thy blood?

To say I am thy mother? What's the matter,

That this distemper'd messenger of wet,

The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye?

Why not that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam: 160

The Count Rouillon cannot be my brother:

I am from humble, he from honour'd name;

No note upon my parents, his all noble:

My master, my dear lord he is; and I

His servant live, and will his vassal die:

He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam; would you were,

So that my lord your son were not my brother,—

Indeed my mother! or were you both our mothers,

I care no more for than I do for heaven, 170

So I were not his sister. Can't no other,

But, your daughter, he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law;

God shield you mean it not! daughter and mother

So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again?

My fear hath catch'd your fondness: now I see

The mystery of your loneliness, and find

Your salt tears' head: now to all sense 'tis gross

You love my son; invention is ashamed,

Against the proclamation of thy passion. 180

To say thou dost not: therefore tell me true;

But tell me then, 'tis so; for, look, thy cheeks

Confess it, th' one to th' other; and thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours

That in their kind they speak it: only sin

And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue,

That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so?

If it be so, you have wound a goodly crew;

If it be not, forswear't: hove'er, I charge thee,

As heaven shall work in me for thine avail, 190

To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?
ACT II.

SCENE I. Paris. The King's palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King, attended with divers young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; Bertram, and Parolles.

King. Farewell, young lords; these warlike principles Do not throw from you: and you, my lords, farewell: Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain, all The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received, And is enough for both.

First Lord. 'Tis our hope, sir, After well enter'd soldiers, to return And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart Will not confess he owes the malady That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords; Whether I live or die, be you the sons Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy,— Those bated that inherit but the fall Of the last monarchy,—see that you come Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when The bravest quenched shrinks, find what you seek, That fame may cry you loud: I say, farewell.

Sec. Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!

King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them: They say, our French lack language to deny, If they demand: beware of being captives, Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell. Come hither to me. [Exit attended.

First Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!

Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.

Sec. Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!

Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.

Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with 'Too young' and 'the next year' and 'tis too early.'

Par. An thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock, Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry, Till honour be bought up and no sword worn

But one to dance with! By heaven, I'll steal away.

First Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par. Commit it, count.

Sec. Lord. I am your accessory; and so, farewell.

Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

First Lord. Farewell, captain.

Sec. Lord. Sweet Monsieur Parolles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin. Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals: you shall find in the regiment of the Spinii one Captain Spurius, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek; it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live; and observe his reports for me.

First Lord. We shall, noble captain.

[Exit Lords.

Par. Mars dote on you for his novices! what will ye do?

Ber. Stay: the king.

Re-enter King. Bertram and Parolles retire.

Par. [To Ber.] Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu: be more expressive to them: for they wear themselves in the cap of the time, there do muster true gait, cat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed: after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.

[Exeunt Bertram and Parolles.

Enter LAFEU.

Laf. [Kneeling] Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.

King. I'll fee thee to stand up.

Laf. Then here's a man stands, that has brought his pardon. I would you had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy, And that at my bidding you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate, And ask'd thee mercy for't.

Laf. Good faith, across: but, my good lord, 'tis thus:

Will you be cured of your infernality?

King. No.

Laf. O, will you eat no grapes, my royal fox? Yes, but you will my noble grapes, an if My royal fox could reach them: I have seen a medicine That's able to breathe life into a stone, Quick'en a rock, and make you dance canary With spritely fire and motion; whose simple touch Is powerful to arouse King Pepin, nay, To give great Charlemain a pen in's hand

And write to her a love-line.

King. What 'her' is this?

Laf. Why, Doctor She: my lord, there's one arrived,

17—2
If you will see her: now, by my faith and honour, If seriously I may convey my thoughts In this my light deliverance, I have spoke With one that, in her sex, her years, profession, Wisdom and constancy, hath amazed me more Than I dare blame my weakness: will you see her For that is her demand, and know her business? That done, laugh well at me, my Lafeu.

King. Now, good Lafeu, 90 Bring in the admiration; that with we three May spend our wonder too, or take off thine By wondering how thou took'st it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you, [Exit.

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter Lafeu, with Helena.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways; This is his majesty; say your mind to him: A traitor you do look like; but such traitors His majesty seldom fears: I am Cressid's uncle, That dare leave two together; fare you well. 190

King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us?

Hel. Ay, my good lord.

Gerard de Narbon was my father; In what he did profess, well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him; Knowing him is enough. On's bed of death Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one, Which, as the deadliest issue of his practice, And of his old experience the only darling, He bade me store up, as a triple eye, Safer than mine own two, more dear; I have: And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd With what malignant cause wherein the honour Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power, I come to tender it and my appliance With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden; But may not be so credulous of cure, When our most learned doctors leave us and The congregated college have concluded That labouring art can never ransom nature From her inestible estate: I say we must not So stain our judgement, or corrupt our hope, To prostitute our past-cure malady To empirics, or to disperse so Our great self and our credit to esteem A senseless help when help past sense we deem.

Hel. My duty then shall pay me for my pains: I will no more enforce mine office on you; Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd so grateful: Thou thought'st to help me; and such thanks I give As one near death to those that wish him live: But what at full I know, thou know'st no part, I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do can do no hurt to try, Since you set up your rest against remedy. He that of greatest works is finisher Oft does them by the weakest minister: So holy writ in babes hath judgement shown, When judges have been babes; great floods have flown From simple sources, and great seas have dried When miracles have by the greatest been denied. O expectation fails and most oft there Where most it promises, and oft it hits Where hope is coldest and despair most fits.

King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind maid; Thy pains not used must by thyself be paid: Proffers not took reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is hard: It is not so with Him that all things knows As'tis with us that square our guess by shows; But most it is presumption in us when The help of heaven we count the act of men. Dear sir, to my endevours give consent; Or if not, make an experiment, I am not an impostor that proclaim Myself against the level of mine aim; But know I think and think I know most sure My art is not past power nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? within what space Hopes thou my cure?

Hel. The great'st grace lending grace, Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring, Ere twice in mark and occidental damp Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp, Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass, What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly, Health shall live free and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence What darest thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence, A spoiler's boldness, a divulged shame Traded by odious ballads: my maiden's name Sear'd otherwise; nay, worse—if worse—extended With vilest torture let my life be ended.

King. Methinks in thee some blessed spirit doth speak His powerful sound within an organ weak: And what impossibility would slay In common sense, sense saves another way. Thy life is dear; for all that life can rate Worth name of life in thee hath estimate, Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, all That happiness and prime can happy call: Thou this to hazard needs must intimidate Skill infinite or monstrous desperate. Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try, That ministers thine own death if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or falch in propriety Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die, And well deserved: not helping, death's my fee; But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly Conscience all power to the will I command:
SCENE I.

ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

261

Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
My low and humble name to propagate.
With any branch or image of thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises ob-seved,

Thy will by my performance shall be served:
So make the choice of thy own time, for I,
Thy resolved patient, on thee still rely.
More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know could not be more to trust,
From whence thou camest, how tended on:
but rest

Unquestion’d welcome and undoubted blest.
Give me some help here, ho! If thou proceed
As high as word, my deed shall match thy meed.
[Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II. Ronsillon. The Count’s palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught: I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court:
he that cannot make a leg, put off’s cap, kiss his hand and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, no, nor; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court; but for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that’s a bountiful answer that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber’s chair that fits all but-tocks, the pin-buttock, the quach-buttock, the brown buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten goats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffeta punt, as Tib’s rush for Tom’s forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the cuckold to his horn, as a scolding queen to a wrangling knave, as the nun’s lip to the friar’s mouth, nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it: here it is, and all that belongs to’t. Ask me if I am a courtier:
it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could: I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir! There’s a simple putting off.
More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Nay, put me to’t, I warrant
you.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir! spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, ‘O Lord, sir!’ at your whipping, and ‘spare not me?’ Indeed your ‘O Lord, sir!’ is very sequent to your whipping: you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to’t.

Clo. I ne’er had worse luck in my life in my ‘O Lord, sir!’ I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time,

To entertain’t so merrily with a fool.

Clo. O Lord, sir! why, there’s serves well again.

Count. An end, sir; to your business. Give Helen this,

And urge her to a present answer back:
Commend me to my kinsmen and my son:
This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you: you understand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully: I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE III. Paris. The King’s palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

Laf. They say miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar, things supernatural and causless. Hence is it that we make trifles of terrors, ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.

Par. Why, ‘tis the rarest argument of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so ‘tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,—

Par. So I say.

Laf. Both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Par. So I say.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—

Par. Right; so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incurable,—

Par. Why, there ‘tis; so say I too.

Laf. Not to be helped,—

Par. Right; as ‘twere, a man assured of a—

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.

Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in—what do ye call
there?

Laf. A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.

Par. That’s it; I would have said the very same.

Laf. Why, your dolphin is not luster: ‘fore me, I speak in respect—

Par. Nay, ’tis strange, ’tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he’s of a most facinerious spirit that will not acknowledge it to be the—
Laf. Very hand of heaven.
Par. Ay, so I say.
Laf. In a most weak—[pausing] and debile minister, great power, great transcendence: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—[pausing] generally thankful.
Par. I would have said it; you say well.
Here comes the king.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.
Lafeu and Paroles retire.
Laf. Lustig, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head: why, he's able to lead her a coranto.
Par. Mort du vinagre! is not this Helen? so
Laf. 'Fore God, I think so.
King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.
Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side; And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receive The confirmation of my promised gift, Which but attends thy naming.

Enter three or four Lords.
Fair maid, send forth thine eye; this youthful parcel
Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing,
O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice
I have to use: thy frank election make;
Thou hast power to choose, and they none to for-sake.
Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress
Fall, when Love please! marry, to each, but one!
Laf. I'll give bay Curtal and his furniture,
My heart no more were broken than these boys',
And writ as little beard:
King. Peruse them well;
Not one of those but had a noble father.
Hel. Gentlemen,
Heaven hath through me restored the king to health.
All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.
Hel. I am a simple maid, and therein wealthiest,
That I protest I simply am a maid.
Please it your majesty. I have done already:
The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me,
'Ve blush that thou shouldst choose; but, be refused,
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever;
We'll ne'er come there again,'
King. Make choice; and, see,
Who shuns thy love shuns all his love in me.
Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream. 'Sir, will you hear my suit?
First Lord. And grant it.
Hel. Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute.
Laf. I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-ace for my life.

Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies:
Love make your fortunes twenty times above
Her that so wishes and her humble love!
Sec. Lord. No better, if you please.
Hel. My wish receive, 90
With great Love grant! and so, I take my leave.
Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped; or I would send them to the Turk, to make emusuchs of.
Hel. Be not afraid that I your hand should take;
I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed
Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!
Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English;
The French ne'er got'em. 101
Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.
First Lord. Fair one, I think not so.
Laf. There's one grape yet: I am sure thy father drunk wine: but if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.
Hel. [To Bertram] I dare not say I take you; but I give Me at my service, ever whilst I live, 110
Into your guiding power. This is the man.
King. Why, then, young Bertram, take her;
she's thy wife.
Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.
King. Know'st thou not, Bertram,
What she has done for me?
Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why, I should marry her.
King. Thou know'st she has raised me from thy sickly bed.
Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Must answer for your raising? I know her well:
She had her breeding at my father's charge. 121
A poor physician's daughter my wife! Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!
King. 'Tis only title thou disdains't in her,
which I can build up. Strange it is that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty. If she be
All that is virtuous, save what thou dislikest,
A poor physician's daughter, thou dislikest 130
Of virtue for the name: but do not so:
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
Where great additions swell's, and virtue none,
It is a dropped honour. Good alone
Is good without a name. Vileness is so:
The property by what it is should go,
Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair:
In these to nature she's immediate heir,
And these breed honour: that is honour's scorn,
Which challenges itself as honour's born 141
And is not like the sire: honours thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers: the mere word's a slave
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.

Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinances, to be a pretty wise fellow; thou didst make tolerable rent of thy travel; it might pass; yet the scarfs and the banners about thee did mannishly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a turth. I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not; yet art thou good for nothing but taking up; and that thou'rt scarce worth.

Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,—

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee. Give me thy hand.

Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.

Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.

Laf. Yes, good faith; very dram of it; and I will not hate thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' the contrary. If ever thou'lt be'st bound in thy scarf and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say in the default, he is a man I know.

Laf. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.

Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal; for doing I am past: as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave.

[Exit.]

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord! Well, I must be patient; there is no fettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he were double and double-bred. I'll have no more pity of his age than I would have of— I'll beat him, an if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter LAFEU.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married; there's news for you; you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good lord; whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is that's thy master. Why dost thou garner up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee: I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.
Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords and honourable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you. [Exit. 281]

Par. Good, very good; it is so then: good, very good; let it be concealed awhile.

Re-enter BERTRAM.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What's the matter, sweet-heart?

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn, I will not bed her.

Par. What, what, sweet-heart?

Ber. O my Parolles, they have married me!

Par. To the Tuscan wars, and never bed her. 290

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the import is, I know not yet.

Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy, to the wars!

He wears his honour in a box unseen, That hius his kicky-wicky here at home, Spending his manly marrow in her arms, Which should sustain the bound and high curvet Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions 300 France is a stable; we that dwell in't fades; Therefore, to the wars!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house, Acquaint my mother with my hate to her, And wherefore I am fled; write to the king That which I durst not speak: his present gift Shall furnish me to those Italian fields, Where noble fellows strike: war is no strife To the dark house and the detested wife.

Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee? art sure?

Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.

I'll send her straight away: to-morrow I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.

Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it. 'Tis hard: A young man married is a man that's marr'd: Therefore away, and leave her bravely; go: The king has done you wrong: but, hush, 'tis so.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. Paris. The King's palace.

Enter HELENA and CLOWN.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: is she well?

Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she's very well and wants nothing i' the world; but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what does she ail, that she's not very well?

Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things.

Hel. What two things?

Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly; the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on: and to keep them on, have them still. O, my knave, how does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles and I her money, I would she did as you say.

Par. Why, I say nothing.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many A man's tongue shakes out his master's undying; to say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title; which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away! thou'rt a knave.

Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou'rt a knave; that's, before me thou'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool; I have found thee.

Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir? or was it you that taught me to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, i' faith, and well fed. Madam, my lord will go away to-night; A very serious business calls on him. The great prerogative and rite of love, Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge; But puts it off to a compell'd restraint: Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets, Which they distil now in the curbed time, To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. What's his will else?

Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king, And make this haste as your own good purpose. 50 Strengthen'd with what apology you think May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands he?

Par. That, having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.

Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you. [Exit Parolles.]

Come, sirrah. [Exeunt.

Scene V. Paris. The King's palace.

Enter LA斐U and BERTRAM.

Laf. But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approbation. You have it from his own deliverance. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goes not true: I took this lark for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I not yet find in my heart to repent. Here he me: I pray you, make us friends; I will rise the amity.

Enter Parolles.

Par. [To Bertram] These things shall be he, sir.
Laf. Pray you, sir, who’s his tailor?
Par. Sir?
Laf. O, I know him well, I; sir; he, sir, ’s a old workman, a very good tailor.
Ber. [Aside to Par.] Is she gone to the king?
Par. She is.
Ber. Will she away to-night?
Par. As you ’ll have her.
Ber. I have writ my letters, casked my pleasure,
ven order for our horses; and to-night,
hen I should take possession of the bride,
der ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is something at the Ter end of a dinner; but one that lies three rds and uses a known truth to pass a thousand ving, should be once heard and thrice
ien. God save you, captain.
Ber. Is there any unkindness between my and you, monsieur?
Par. I know not how I have deserved to run my lord’s displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into t, boots spurs and all, like him that leaped into the ard; and out of it you ’ll run again, rather in suffer question for your residence.
Ber. It may be you have mistaken him, my d.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took at’s prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and ve of me, there can be no kernel in this ut; the soul of this man is his clothes.
ast him not in matter of heavy consequence; I ve kept of them tame, and know their natures.
well, monsieur: I have spoken better of you an you have or will to deserve at my hand;
e we must do good against evil.
[Exit.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.
Ber. I think so.
Par. Why, do you not know him?
Ber. Yes, I do know him well, and common speech es him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you, ke with the king and have procured his leave
c present parting; only he desires he private speech with you.
Par. I shall obey his will.
Hel. You must not marvel, Helen, at my course, hich holds not colour with the time, nor does mination and required office my particular. Prepared I was not uch a business; therefore am I found much unsettled: this drives me to entreat you t present you take your way for home;
ther need than ask why I entreat you; for my respects are better than they seem d my appointments have in them a need ater than shows itself at the first view

To you that know them not. This to my mother:

’Twill be two days ere I shall see you, so leave you to your wisdom.
Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant.
Ber. Come, come, no more of that.
Hel. And ever shall
With true observance seek to eke out that Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail’d
To equal my great fortune.
Ber. Let that go: 81
My haste is very great: farewell; he home.
Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.
Ber. Well, what would you say?
Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,
Nor dare I say ’tis mine, and yet it is:
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.
Ber. What would you have?
Hel. Something; and scarce so much: nothing,
indeed.
I would not tell you what I would, my lord:
Faith; yes;
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.
Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horses.
Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my
lord.
Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur?
Farewell. [Exit Helena.
Go thou toward home; where I will never come
Whilst I can shake my sword or hear the drum.
Away, and for our flight.
Par. Bravely, coragio! [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended;
two Frenchmen, with a troop of soldiers.
Duke. So that from point to point now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war,
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth
And more thirsts after.
First Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace’s part; black and fearful
On the oppressor.
Duke. Therefore we marvel much our cousin
France
Would in so just a business shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.
Sec. Lord. Good my lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yield,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a council frames
By self-unable motion: therefore dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in my uncertain grounds to fail
As often as I guess’d.
Duke. Be it his pleasure.
First Lord. But I am sure the younger of our nature,
That surfeit on their case, will day by day
Come here for physic.
Duke. Welcome shall they be:
Scene II. Rouillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her. Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you? Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot and sing; mend the ruff and sing; ask questions and sing; pick his teeth and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter. Clo. I have no time to read; since I was at court, our old king and our Isbels o' the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o' the court: the brains of my Cupid's knocked out, and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here? Clo. E'en that you have there. [Exit. 20

Count. [Reads] I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the 'not' eternal. You shall hear I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.
Your unfortunate son,

Bertram.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king:
To pluck his indignation on thy head
By the misprising of a maid too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within between two soldiers and my young lady!

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing to't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come will tell you more: for my part, I only hear your son was run away. [Exit.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

Sec. Gent. Do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience. Pray you, gentlemen, I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,

That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can woman me unto't: where is my son, I pray
you?

Sec. Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve a
duke of Florence:
We met him thitherward; for thence we came.
And, after some dispatch in hand at court,
Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam; here's no passport.

[Reads] When thou canst get the ring upon my finger which never shall come off, and show it to a child begotten of thy body that I am father to, then call me husband; but in such a 'then' write a 'never.'

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

First Gent. Ay, madam.

And for the contents' sake are sorry for our pair.

Count. I prithee, lady, have a better cheer.
If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety: he was my son;
But I do wash his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my child. Towards Florence he's.

Sec. Gent. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier.

Sec. Gent. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe 'tis,
The duke will lay upon him all the honour
That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither;

First Gent. Ay, madam, with the swift wing of speed.

Hel. [Reads] Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.

'Tis bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

First Gent. 'Tis but the boldness of his heart;
Happily, which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have a wife!

There's nothing here that is too good for him
But only she; and she deserves a lord
That twain such rude boys might tend upon,
And call her hourly mistress. Who was with
him?

First Gent. A servant only, and a genteel
Which I have sometime known.

Count. Paroles, was it not?

First Gent. Ay, my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement.

First Gent. Indeed, good lady,
The fellow has a deal of that too much,
Which holds him much to have.

Count. You're welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him that his sword can never win
The honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you
Written to bear along.

Sec. Gent. We serve you, madam,
In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our counties.

Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and Gentlemen.

Hel. 'Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.']
ing in France, until he has no wife! shall have none, Rouillon, none in France: hast thou all again. Poor lord! is 't I drive thee from thy country and expose t e tender limbs of thine to the event e none-sparing war? and is it I drive thee from the sportive court, where thou shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark 110isky muskets? O you leaden messengers, ride upon the violent speed of fire, with false aim; move the still-peering air, sings with piercing; do not touch my lord. ever shoots at him, I set him there; ever charges on his forward breast, the caftiff that do hold him to; though I kill him not, I am the cause leath was so effect'd: better 'twere the ravin lion when he roar'd 120 sharp constraint of hunger; better 'twere all the miseries which nature owes mine at once. No, come thou home, Rouillon, the honour but of danger wins a scar, it loses all: I will be gone; eing here it is that holds thee hence: I stay here to do 't? no, no, although air of paradise did fan the house angels offic'd all: I will be gone, pitiful rumour may report my flight, 130 isolate thin ear. Come, night; end, day! with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.

The general of our horse thou art; and we, in our hope, lay our best love and credency thy promising fortune.

Sir, it is rge too heavy for my strength, but yet strive to bear it for your worthy sake e extreme edge of hazard. he. Then go thou forth; fortune play upon thy prosperous helm, auspicious mistress! This very day, Mars, I put myself into thy file: me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove of thy drum, hater of love. [Exeunt. 11

IV. Rouillon. The Count's palace. Enter Countess and Steward.

Alas! and would you take the letter of her? you not know she would do as she has done, adding me a letter? Read it again.

[Screed]

Saint Jaques' pilgrim, thither gone: bittious love hath so in me offended, barefoot plod I the cold ground upon, haunt vow my faults to have amended. write, that from the bloody course of war dearest master, your dear son, may he:

Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far 10 His name with zealous favour sanctify: His taken labours bid him me forgive; I, his despightful Juno, sent him forth From courtly friends, with camping foes to live, Where death and danger dogs the heels of worth: He is too good and fair for death and me; Whom I myself embrace, to set him free. Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mild- est words! Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much, As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her, 20 I could have well diverted her intents, Which thus she hath prevented. Pardon me, madam: If I had given you this at over-night, She might have been o'erta'n; and yet she writes, Pursuit would be but vain. [Exeunt. Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive, Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear, And loves to grant, remove him from the wrath Of greatest justice. Write, write, Rinaldo, To this unworthy husband of his wife; Let every word weigh heavy of her worth That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief, Though little he do feel it, set down sharply. Dispatch the most convenient messenger: When haply he shall hear that she is gone, He will return; and hope I may that she, Hearing so much, will speed her foot again, Led hither by pure love: which of them both Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sense To make distinction: provide this messenger: My heart is heavy and mine age is weak; Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak. [Exeunt.

Scene V. Florence. Without the walls. A bucket after off.

Enter an old Widow of Florence, DIANA, VIO- LENTA, and MARIANA, with other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight. Dia. They say the French count has done most honourable service. Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. [Bucket.] We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets. 9 Mar. Come, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name; and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion. Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl. Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so ter- rible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are lied with the twigs that threaten them. I hope I need not to advise you further; but I hope your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

Dio. You shall not need to fear me. Wid. I hope so.

Enter Helena, disguised like a Pilgrim.

Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house: thither they send one another: I'll question her. God save you, pilgrim! whether you are bound?

Hel. To Saint Jaques le Grand. Where do the palmer's lodge, I do beseech you? Wid. At the Saint Frances here beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way? Wid. Ay, marry, 'tis. [A March afar.] Hark! you come this way. If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, but till the troops come by, you will conduct you where you shall be lodged; the rather, for I think I know your hostess as ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself? Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim. Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours that has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you.

Dio. The Count Rousillon: know you such a one?

Hel. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him: his face I know not.

Dio. What'some'er he is, he's bravely taken here. He stole from France, as 'tis reported, for the king had married him against his liking; think you it is so?

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady.

Dio. There is a gentleman that serves the count reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name? 60

Dio. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. O, I believe with him, in argument of praise, or to the worth of the great count himself, she is too mean to have her name repeated; all her deserving is a reserved honesty, and that I have not heard examined.

Dio. Alas, poor lady! 'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife of a detesting lord.

Wid. I warrant, good creature, wheresoe'er she is, her heart weighs sadly: this young maid might do her 70 a shrewd turn, if she pleased.

Hel. How do you mean? May be the amorous count solicits her in the unlawful purpose.

Wid. He does indeed; and breaks with all that can in such a suit corrupt the tender honour of a maid; but she is arm'd for him and keeps her guard in honestest defence.

Mar. The gods forbid else!

Wid. So, now they come:

Drum and Colours.

Enter Bertram, Parolles, and the whole army.

That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son; That, Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dio. He;

That with the plume: 'tis a most gallant fellow I would he loved his wife: if he were honest he were much goodlier: is't not a handsomely gentleman?

Hel. I like him well.

Dio. 'Tis pity he is not honest: yond's the same knave that leads him to these places: were I his lady I would poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he?

Dio. That jacks-anapes with scarfs: which melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt it the battle.

Par. Lose our drum! well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something he has spied us.

Wid. Marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier.

[Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, and army. Wid. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, will bring you Where you shall host: of enjoin'd penitents There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques but Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you: Please it this matron and this gentle maid to that with us to-night, the charge and thou shalt be for me; and, to require you further, I will bestow some precepts of this virgin Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly.

[Exeunt.]

Scene VI. Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram and the two French Lords.

Sec. Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to let him have his way.

First Lord. If your lordship find him hindling, hold me no more in your respect.

Sec. Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived him?

Sec. Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine direct knowledge, without any malice, but speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most noted coward, an infinite and endless liar, an honest villain-breaker, the owner of no one good grace worthy your lordship's entertainment.

First Lord. It were fit you knew him; I reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath he might at some great and trusty business main danger fall you.
Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it?
Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord: but the attempt I vow.
Ber. I know thou'rt valiant; and, to the possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee. Farewell.
Par. I love not many words. [Exit.
Sec. Lord. No more than a fish loves water. Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done;damns himself to do and dares better be damned than to do't?
First Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do: certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favour and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.
Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this that so seriously he does address himself unto?
Sec. Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention and clap upon you two or three probable lies: but we have almost embossed him: you shall see his fall to-night; for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.
First Lord. We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafeu: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.
Sec. Lord. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.
Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.
Sec. Lord. As't please your lordship: I'll leave you. [Exit.
Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you the last I spoke of.
First Lord. But you say she's honest.
Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once.
And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, By this same coxcomb that we have the wind, Tokens and letters which she did re-send; And this is all I have done. She's a fair creature: Will you go see her?
First Lord. With all my heart, my lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. Florence. The Widow's house.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you further, But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.
Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well born, Nothing acquainted with these businesses; And would not put my reputation now In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you.
First, give me trust, the count he is my husband, And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken Is so from word to word: and then you cannot, By the good aid that I of you shall borrow, [Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have show'd me that which well approves
You're great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold, and let me buy your friendly help thus far, which I will over-pay and pay again when I have found it. The count he wooes your daughter, lays down his wanton siege before her beauty, resolved to carry her: let her in fine consent, as we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it. Now his important blood will nought deny that she'll demand: a ring the county wears, that downward hath succeeded in his house from son to son, some four or five descents since the first father wore it: this ring he holds in most rich choice; yet in his idle fire, to buy his will, it would not seem too dear, how' er repented after.

Wid. Now I see the bottom of your purpose. Hel. You see it lawful, then: it is no more, but that your daughter, ere she seems as won, desires this ring; appoints him an encounter; in fine, delivers me to fill the time, herself most chastely absent: after this, to marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns to what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded: instruct my daughter how she shall persevere, that time and place with this deceit so lawful may prove coherent. Every night he comes with musics of all sorts and songs composed to her unworthiness: it nothing steads us to chide him from our eaves; for he persists as if his life lay on 't.

Sec. Lord. Is it possible he should know he is, and be that he is? Par. I would the cutting of my garm would serve the turn, or the breaking of Spanish sword.

Sec. Lord. We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to it was in stratagem.

Sec. Lord. Twould not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I stripped.

Sec. Lord. Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the dow of the citadel—

Sec. Lord. How deep?

Par. Thirty fathom.

Sec. Lord. Three great oaths would so make that be believed.

Par. I would I had any drum of the enem I would swear I recovered it.

Sec. Lord. You shall hear one anon.

Par. A drum now of the enemy's—[Alarum exit Sec. Lord. Throca movousus, cargo, ca cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villianda par co cargo.

Par. O, ransom, ransom! do not hide mine

[They seize and Blindfold First Sold. Boskos thronuldos boskos.

Par. I know you are the Muskos' regime: And I shall lose my life for want of language if there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me: I'll discover that which shall undo the Florentin.

First Sold. Boskos vauvado: I unders thee, and can speak thy tongue. Kereblybe, sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen points are at thy bosom.

Sec. Lord. Oscorbidulches volivorc.

First Sold. The general is content to spare id, hoodwink'd as thou art, will lead thee on go , gather from thee: haply thou mayst inform methinks to save thy life.

Par. O, let me live!

id all the secrets of our camp I'll show,
'irst, their purposes; nay, I'll speak that igh you will wonder at.

First Sold. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damn me.

First Sold. Acorio linta.

[Exit, with Paroles guarded. A short alarum within.

Sec. Lord. Go, tell the Count Rouillon, and my brother,

c have caught the woodcock, and will keep him
ruffid 100
I do we hear from them.

Sec. Sold. Captain, I will.

Sec. Lord. A' will betray us all unto ourselves:
form on that.

Sec. Sold. So I will, sir.

Sec. Lord. Till then I'll keep him dark and safely lock'd.

[Exit.}

SCENE II. Florence. The Widow's house.

Enter BERTRAM and DIANA.

Ber. They told me that your name was Font-tibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess; d worth it, with addition! But, far soul, your fine frame hath love no quality?
he quick fire of youth light not your mind,
a are no maiden, but a monument:
ien you are dead, you should be such a one
you are now, for you are cold and stern;
'ow you should be as your mother was ien your sweet self was got.

Dia. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

Dia. No: mother did but duty; such, my lord, you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more I' that;
rifthee, do not strive against my vows:
as compell'd to her; but I love thee, love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever all rights of religion.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us
we serve; but when you have our roses, are but once, and to prick ourselves
d mock us with our bareness

Ber. How have I sworn! 20
Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that makes the truth,
the plain single vow that is vow'd true.
not is not holy, that we swear not by,
take the High'st to witness: then, pray you,
tell me,
should swear by God's great attributes,
vest dearly, would you believe my oaths, en I did love you ill? This has no holding, swear by whom I protest to love,
at I will work against him: therefore your oaths

Are words and poor conditions, but unseal'd, 30
At least in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it;
Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy;
And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts
That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,
But give thyself unto my sick desires,
Who then recover: say thou art mine, and ever
My love as it begins shall so persevere.

Dia. I'll see that men make ropes in such a scare
That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power 40
To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honour 'longing to our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honour's such a ring:
My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose: thus your own proper wisdom
Brings in the champion Honour on my part,
Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring:
My house, mine honour, ye, my life, be thine,
And I'll be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber-window:
I'll order take my mother shall not hear.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed,
Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me:
My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them.

When back again this ring shall be deliver'd: 60
And on your finger in the night I'll put Another ring, that what in time proceeds
May token to the future our past deeds.

Dia. It, till then; then, fail not. You have won
A wife of me, though there my hope be done.

Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

[Exit.]

Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven and me!

You may so in the end.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in's heart; she says all men 70
Have the like oaths: he had sworn to marry me
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid, Marry that will, I live and die a maid:
Only in this disguise I think 'tis no sin
To cozen him that would unjustly win.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The Florentine camp.

Enter the two French Lords and some two or three Soldiers.

First Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?

Sec. Lord. I have delivered it an hour since:
there is something in't that stings his nature; for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.
First Lord. He has much worthy blame laid upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.
Sec. Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.
First Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.
Sec. Lord. He hath perverted a young gentleman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; and this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour: he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.
First Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion! as we are ourselves, what things are we!
Sec. Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'flows himself.
First Lord. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night?
Sec. Lord. Not till after midnight; for he is dieted to his hour.
First Lord. That approaches apace; I would gladly have him see his company anatomized, that he might take a measure of his own judgements, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.
Sec. Lord. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.
First Lord. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?
Sec. Lord. I hear there is an overture of peace.
First Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.
Sec. Lord. What will Count Roussillon do then? will he be higher, or return again into France?
First Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.
Sec. Lord. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.
First Lord. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house; her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking with most austere sanctimony she accomplished; and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.
Sec. Lord. How is this justified?
First Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters, which makes her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say is come, was faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place.
Sec. Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?
First Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.
Sec. Lord. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.

First Lord. How mightily sometimes make comforts of our losses!
Sec. Lord. And how mightily some other times we drown our gain in tears! The grand dignity that his valour hath here acquired for us shall at home be encountered with a shame ample.
First Lord. The web of our life is of a ming yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would proud, if our faults whipped them not; and crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues.

Enter a Messenger.

How now! where's your master? Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir; whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lords will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.
Sec. Lord. They shall be more than need there, if they were more than they can. First Lord. They cannot be too sweet for king's tartsness. Here's his lordship now.

Enter BERTRAM.

How now, my lord! is't not after midnight? Ber. I have to-night dispatched sixteen busses, a month's length a-piece, by an abasement of success: I have congiuded with the duke, do my adieu with his nearest; buried a woman mourning for her; wrote to my lady mother I returning; entertained my convoy; and betwixt these main parcels of dispatch effected many nice needs; the last was the greatest, but this have not ended yet.
Sec. Lord. If the business be of any difficulty and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.
Ber. I mean, the business is not ended, fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall have this dialogue between the fool and soldier? Come, bring forth this counter module, has received me, like a double-mean prophet.
Sec. Lord. Bring him forth: has sat i' stocks all night, poor gallant knave.
Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved in usurping his spurs so long. How does carry himself?
Sec. Lord. I have told your lordship alrea the stocks carry him. But to answer you as would be understood; he weeps like a woman that had shed her milk: he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friend and soldier: Come, bring forth this counter module, has received me, like a double-mean prophet.
Sec. Lord. Bring him forth: has sat i' stocks all night, poor gallant knave.
Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved in usurping his spurs so long. How does carry himself?
Sec. Lord. I have told your lordship already the stocks carry him. But to answer you as would be understood; he weeps like a woman that had shed her milk: he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friend and soldier: Come, bring forth this counter module, has received me, like a double-mean prophet.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved in usurping his spurs so long. How does carry himself?
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

First Sold. He calls for the tortures; what if you say without 'em?
Par. I will confess what I know without con-

First Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
Par. Do: I'll take the sacrament on't, how

Ber. All's one to him. What a past-saving

First Lord. He's very near the truth in this.
Par. But I con him no thanks for't, in the

Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say:
First Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I say true,—or thereabouts, set down, for I'll ask truth.
First Sold. When that's set down.
First Lord. He's very near the truth in this.
Par. But I con him no thanks for't, in the

Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say:
First Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. I humbly thank you, sir: a truth's a th, the rogues are marvellous poor.
First Sold. [Reads] 'Demand of him, of what length they are a-foot.' What say you to that?
Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this sent hour, I will tell true. Let me see:
ario, a hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many;
rumbus, so many; Jaques, so many; Guil tian, smo, Lodowick, and Gratii, two hundred and

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the intergatories: demand them singly.
First Sold. Do you know this Captain
Dumain?
Par. I know him: a' was a botcher's 'prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the shrieve's fool with child,—a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay.
Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands;
though I know his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.
First Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's camp?
Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.
First Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.
First Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine; and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' the band: I think I have his letter in my pocket.
First Sold. Why then, we'll search.
Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it is there, or it is upon a file with the duke's other letters in my tent.
First Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper: shall I read it to you?
Par. I do not know if it be it or no.
Ber. Our interpreter does it well.
First Lord. Excellently.
First Sold. [Reads] 'Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold,'—
Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one Count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but for all that very ruttsih: I pray you, sir, put it up again.
First Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.
Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whole to virginity and devours up all the fry it finds.
Ber. Damnable both-sides rogue!
First Sold. [Reads] 'When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;
After he scores, he never pays the score:
Half won is match well made; match, and well
make it;
He ne'er pays after-debts, take it before;
And say a soldier, Dian, told thee this;
Men are to mell with, boys are not to kiss:
For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,
Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.
Thine, as he vowed to thee in thine ear, 260
Parolles.'
Ber. He shall be whipped through the army with this rhyme in's forehead.
Sec. Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir,
the manifold linguist and the armipotent soldier.
Ber. A I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.
First Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.
Par. My life, sir, in any case: not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many,
I would repent out the remainder of nature: let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 't the stocks, or any where, so I may live.

First Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this Captain Dumain: you have answered to his reputation with the duke and to his valour: what is his honesty?

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister: for rapes and ravishments he parleys Nelson: he professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking 'em he is stronger than Hercules: he will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool: drunkenness is his best virtue, for he will be swine-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

First Lord. I begin to love him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honesty?

Par. A pox upon him for, he's more and more a cat.

First Sold. What say you to his expediency in war?

Par. Faith, sir, has led the drum before the English tragedians; to belle him, I will not, and more of his soldiership I know not; except, in that country he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the working of files: I would do the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certain.

First Lord. He hath out-villain'd villany so far, that the rarity redeems him.

Ber. A pox on him, he's a cat still.

First Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not to ask you if gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a quart d'eau he will sell the fee-simpel of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.

First Sold. What's his brother, the other Captain Dumain?

Sec. Lord. Why does he ask him of me?

First Sold. What's he?

Par. Even a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil: he excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is; in a retreat he outruns any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the cramp.

First Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, Count Roussonil.

First Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

Par. [Aside] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?

First Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use therefore you must die. Come, headman, with his head:

Par. O Lord, sir, let me live, or let me save my death!

First Sold. That shall you, and take you leave of all your friends. [Unblinding him]

So, look about you: know you any here?

Ber. Good morrow, noble captain. 3

Sec. Lord. God bless you, Captain Parolle.

First Lord. God save you, noble captain.

Sec. Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafet? I am for France.

First Lord. Good captain, will you give me copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalf of the Count Rousillon? and I were not a very coward I'd compel it of you: but fare you well.

[Exeunt Bertram and Lord] 3

First Sold. You are undone, captain, all but your scarf; that has a knot on yet.

Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot.

First Sold. If you could find out a count where but women were that had received so much Fare ye well, sir; I am for France too: we sh. speak of you there.

[Exit, with Soldier]

Par. Yetam I thankfull: if my heart were great 'Twould burst at this. Captain I'll be no mor: But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft As captain shall: simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a bard, Let him fear this, for it will come to pass That every bragget shall be found an ass. Rust! sword! cool! clothes! and, Parolles, live Safest in shame! being fool'd, by fooleery throw There's place and means for every man alive. I'll after them.

SCENE IV. Florence. The Widow's house.

Enter HELENA, Widow, and DIANA. 7

Hel. That you may well perceive I have no wrong'd you.

One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall be my surety; 'tis whore 's time need Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneel: Time was, I did him a desired office, Dear almost as his life; which gratitude Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep for And answer, thanks! I duly am inform'd His grace is at Marseilles; to which place We have convenient convoy. You must know I am supposed dead: the army breaking, My husband hies him home; where, heaven aind And by the leave of my good lord the king, We'll be before our welcome.

Wid. Gentle madam, You never had a servant to whose trust Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor you, mistress; Ever a friend whose thoughts more truly laboured To recompense your love; doubt not but here He brought me up to be your daughter's dow From as it hath fated her to be my motive And helper to a husband. But, O strange men That can such sweet use make of what they have When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts Defiles the pitchy night: so lust doth play

[Act 3, Scene 3]
I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world; let his nobility remain in his court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some that humble themselves may; but the many will be too chill and tender, and they'll be for the flowery way that leads to the broad gate and the great fire.

Go thy ways, I begin to be aweary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be jades' tricks; which are their own right by the law of nature.

A shrewd knave and an unhappy.

So he is. My lord that's gone made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no pace, but runs where he will.

I like him well; 'tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady's death and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I moved the king my master to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose: his highness hath promised me to do it; and, to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?

With very much content, my lord; and I wish it happily effected.

His highness comes post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he numbered thirty: he will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.

It rejoices me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my son will be here to-night: I shall beseech your lordship to remain with me till they meet together.

Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.

You need but plead your honourable privilege.

Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but I thank my God it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

O madam, yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on's face: whether there be a scar under 't or no, the velvet knows; but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet: his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honour; so belike is that.

But it is your carbonadoed face.

Let us go see your son, I pray you: I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Faith, there's a dozen of 'em, with delicate fine hats and most courteous feathers, which bow the head and nod at every man.

Scene V. Roussillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess, LAFEC, and CLO. CLO. No, no, no, your son was misled with a dupp-caffets fellow there, whom his villainous saffron could have made all the unbaked and doughy oath of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here: home, more advanced by the king than by that d-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

CLO. I would I had not known him; it was a death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever nature had praise for creating. If she had writhed my flesh, and cost me the dearest oans of a mother, I could not have owed her a core rooted love.

CLO. Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady: a may pick a thousand salads ere we light on another herb.

CLO. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet-marjoram, the salad, or rather, the herb of grace.

CLO. They are not herbs, you knave; they are sea-herbs. CLO. I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I not much skill in grass.

CLO. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a save or a fool?

CLO. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a save at a man's.

CLO. Your distinction?

CLO. I would cozen the man of his wife and do service.

CLO. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

CLO. And I would give his wife my bubble, to do her service.

CLO. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both save and fool.

CLO. At your service.

CLO. No, no, no.

CLO. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can as great a prince as you are.

CLO. Who's that? a Frenchman? 40

CLO. Faith, sir, 'tis an English name; but fisher is more hotter in France than there.

CLO. What prince is that?

CLO. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince darkness; alias, the devil.

CLO. Hold thee, there's my purse: I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of; serve him still.
ACT V.

SCENE I. Marseilles. A street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting day and night Must wear your spirits low; we cannot help it: But since you have made the days and nights as one, To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs, Be bold you do so grow in my requital As nothing can unroot you. In happy time;

Enter a Gentleman.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear, If he would spend his power. God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen From the report that goes upon your goodness; And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues, for the which I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the king, And aid me with that store of power you have To come into his presence.

Gent. The king's not here.

Hel. Not here, sir!

Gent. Not, indeed: He hence removed last night and with more haste Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains!

Hel. All's well that ends well yet, Though time seem so adverse and means unfit. I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Roussillon; Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir, Since you are like to see the king before me, Command the paper to his gracious hand, Which I presume shall render you no blame But rather make you thank your pains for it. I will come after you with what good speed Our means will make us means.

Gent. This I'll do for you.

Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thank'd, Whate'er falls more. We must to horse again. Go, go, provide. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Roussillon. Before the Count's palace.

Enter Clown, and Parolles, following.

Par. Good Monsieur Lavache, give my Lord Lafue this letter: I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir, muddied in fortune's mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering. Parolles, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir; I spake but by a metaphor.
But first I beg my pardon, the young lord
Did to his majesty, his mother and his lady
Great offence of note: but to himself
Which greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of richest eyes, whose words all ears took captive,
Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve
Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost
Makes the remembrance dear. Well, call him
hither;
We are reconciled, and the first view shall kill
All repetition: let him not ask our pardon;
The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper than oblivion we do bury
The incensing relics of it: let him approach,
A stranger, no offender; and inform us
'so 'tis our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit.]

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me
That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season,
For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail in me at once: but to the brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth;
The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repented, dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is well;
Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
The inaudible and noiseless foot of Time
Steals ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege, at first stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue
Where the impression of mine eye infixed,
Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
Which warp'd the line of every other favour;
Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stolen;
Extended or contracted all proportions
Of most hideous object: thence it came
That she whom all men praised and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have loved, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excused:
That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away from the great compt: but love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence, rying, 'That's good that's gone.' Our rash faults
Take trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them until we know their grave:
Displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends and after weep their dust:

[Our own love waking cries to see what's done,
While shame full late sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin:
The main consents are had; and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day.

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless!
Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cesse!

Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my house's name
Must be digested, give a favour from you
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,
That she may quickly come. [Bertram gives a ring.] By my old beard,
And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead,
Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,
The last that e'er I took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine
eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to't.
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessity to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Had you that craft, to reave her
Of what should she keep her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,
Howe'er it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,
I have seen her wear it; and she reck'd it
At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceived, my lord; she never saw it:
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapped in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it: noble she was, and thought
I stood engaged: but when I had subscribed
To mine own fortune and informed her fully
I could not answer in that course of honour
As she had made the overture, she ceased
In heavy satisfaction and would never Receive the ring again.

King. Plutus himself,
That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature's mystery more science
Than I have in this ring: 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's,
Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with yourself,
Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her: she cal'd the saints to surety
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour;
And makest conjectural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove That thou art so inhuman, 'twill not prove so—
And yet I know not: thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead: which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring. Take him away. 120

[Guards seize Bertram.]

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little. Away with him! We'll sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easily
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit, guarded.

King. I am wrap'd in dismal thoughts.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not:
Here's a petition from a Florentine, 130
Who hath for four or five removes come short
To tend it herself. I undertook it,
Vainquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant, who by this I know
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads] Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blushed to say it, he won me. Now is the Count Rousillon a widower: his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice: grant it me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

Diana Capilet.

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for this: I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee,
Laf., 150
To bring forth this discovery. Seek these suitors:
Go speedily and bring again the count.
I am afraid the life of Helen, lady,
Was fouldly snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Re-enter Bertram, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, sith wives are monsters
to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.

Enter Widow and Diana.

What woman's that?

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capilet:
My suit, as I do understand, you know, 160
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, count; do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can nor will deny
But that I know them: do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife?

Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine; 170
You give away heaven's vows, and those are
mine:
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so emboldened yours,
That she which marries you must marry me,
Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation comes too short for my daughter; you are no husband for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature, Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: let your highness
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour 180
Than for to think that I would sink it here.

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend
Till your deeds gain them: fairer prove your honour
Than in my thought it lies.

Dia. Good my lord,
Ask him upon his oath, if he does think
He had not my virginity,
And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price:
Do not believe him. O, behold this ring,
Whose high respect and rich validity
Did lack a parallel; yet for all that
He gave it to a commoner o' the camp,
If I be one.

Count. He blushes, and 'tis it:
Of six preceding ancestors, that gem,
Conferr'd by testament to the sequent issue,
Hath it been owed and worn. This is his wife;
That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. Methought you said
You saw one here in court could witness it. 200
Dia. I did, my lord, but loath am I to produce
So bad an instrument: his name's Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if he be.

King. Find him, and bring him hither.

[Exit an Attendant.

Ber. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd;
Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth.
Am I or that or this for what he'll utter,
That will speak any thing?

King. She hath that ring of yours.

Ber. I think she has: certain it is I liked her,
And boarded her in the wanton way of youth: 211
She knew her distance and did angle for me,
Maddening my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy's course
Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine,
Her infinite cunning, with her modern grace,
Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring;
And I had that which any inferior might
At market-price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient: 220
You, that have turn'd off a first so noble wife,
Enter Parolles.

Ber. My lord, I do confess the ring was hers.

Par. You boggle shrewdly; every feather starts you.

Ber. The man you speak of?

Par. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge you, not fearing the displeasure of your master, hich on your just proceeding I’ll keep off, if him and by this woman here what know you?

Par. So please your majesty, my master hath an honourable gentleman; tricks he hath done him, which gentlemen have.

King. Come, come, to the purpose: did he love this woman?

Par. Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.

King. As thou art a knave, and no knave, hat an equivocal companion is this!

Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a weighty orator.

Dia. Do you know he promised me marriage?

Par. Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest?

Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, I red her: for indeed he was mad for her, and ked of Satan and of Limbo and of Furies and know not what: yet I was in that credit with am at that time that I knew of their going to d, and of other motions, as promising her marri, and things which would derive me ill will speak of; therefore I will not speak what I ow.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless u canst say they are married: but thou art too c in thy evidence; therefore stand aside. 270 and for your ring, you say, was yours?

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

King. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither.

King. Where did you find it, then?

Dia. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways, How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

Dia. This ring was mine; I gave it his first wife. 280

Dia. It might be yours or hers, for aught I know.

King. Take her away; I do not like her now; To prison with her: and away with him.

Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring, Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dia. I'll put in bail, my liege.

King. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By love, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty: He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to't; I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life; I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

King. She does abuse our ears: to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail. Stay, royal sir: [Exit Widow.

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this lord, Who hath abused me, as he knows himself, Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him: He knows himself my bed he hath defiled: 301 And at that time he got his wife with child: Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick: So there's my riddle: one that's dead is quick: And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with HELENA.

King. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord;
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both. O, pardon!

Hel. O my good lord, when I was like this maid, 310
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring;
And, look you, here's your letter; this it says:
'When from my finger you can get this ring
And are by me with child,' &c. This is done:
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

Hel. If it appear not plain and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce step between me and you!
O my dear mother, do I see you living? 320

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions; I shall weep anon:

[To Parolles] Good Tom Drum, lend me a handkercher: so,
I thank thee; wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee: Let thy courtesies alone, they are scurvy ones. King. Let us from point to point this story know, To make the even truth in pleasure flow. [To Diana] If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower, Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower; For I can guess that by thy honest aid Thou kept'st a wife herself, thyself a maid. Of that and all the progress, more or less, Resolvedly more leisure shall express:

All yet seems well; and if it end so meet, The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet. [Flourish.]

EPILOGUE.

King. The king's a beggar, now the play done: All is well ended, if this suit be won, That you express content; which we will pay, With strife to please you, day exceeding day: Ours be your patience then, and yours our part Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts

[Exeunt.]*

Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and other Attendants.

Scene: A city in Illyria, and the sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I. The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Curio, and other Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on; let me excess of it, that, surfeiting, e appetite may sicken, and so die, at strain again! it had a dying fall: it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound, at breathes upon a bank of violets, aling and giving odour! Enough; no more: is not so sweet now as it was before. spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou, at, notwithstanding thy capacity coveth as the sea, nought enters there, what validity and pitch soever, falls into abatement and low price, en in a minute: so full of shapes is fancy at it alone is high fantastical.

Curio. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke. What, Curio?

Curio. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have: when mine eyes did see Olivia first, thought she purged the air of pestilence! at instant was I turn'd into a hart; d my desires, like fell and cruel hounds, since pursue me.

Enter Valentine.

How now! what news from her?

Valentine. So please my lord, I might not be admitted; t from her handmaid do return this answer: c element itself, till seven years' heat, all not behold her face at ample view; t, like a cloissness, she will veiled walk d water once a day her chamber round th eye-offending brine: all this to season brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh d lasting in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she that hath a heart of that fine frame

To pay this debt of love but to a brother, How will she love, when the rich golden shaft Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else That live in her; when liver, brain and heart, These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd Her sweet perfections with one self king! Away before me to sweet beds of flowers: Love-thoughts lie rich when canopied with bowers.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The sea-coast.

Enter Viola, a Captain, and Sailors.

Viola. What country, friends, is this?
Cap. This is Illyria, lady.

Viola. And what should I do in Illyria?

My brother he is in Elysium. Perchance he is not drown'd: what think you, sailors?

Cap. It is perchance that you yourself were saved.

Viola. O my poor brother! and so perchance may he be.

Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with chance, Assure yourself, after our ship did split, When you and those poor number saved with you Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother, the Most provident in peril, bind himself, Courage and hope both teaching him the practice, To a strong mast that lived upon the sea; Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back, I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves So long as I could see.

Viola. For saying so, there's gold: Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope, Whereto thy speech serves for authority, The like of him. Know'st thou this country?

Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born.

Not three hours' travel from this very place.

Viola. Who governs here?

Cap. A noble duke, in nature as in name.

Viola. What is his name?

Cap. Orsino.
Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him.
He was a bachelor then.
Cap. And so is now, or was so very late; 30
For but a month ago I went from hence,
And then 'twas fresh in murmur,—as, you know,
What great ones do the less will prattle of,—
That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.
Vio. What's she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since, then leaving her
In the protection of his son, her brother,
Who shortly also died; for whose dear love,
They say, she hath abjured the company 40
And sight of men.
Vio. O that I served that lady
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is!
Cap. That were hard to compass;
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the duke's.
Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward charactar.
I prithee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
Conceal me what I am, and be my aid.
For such disguise as haply shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke:
Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him:
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing
And speak to him in many sorts of music
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap to time I will commit;
Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.
Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be:
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.
Vio. I thank thee: lead me on. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. OLIVIA'S house.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.
Mar. By my troth, Sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights: your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.
Sir To. Why, let her except, before excepted.
Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order. 9
Sir To. Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than I am: these clothes are good enough to drink in; and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.
Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here to be her wooster.
Sir To. Who, Sir Andrew Aguecheek?
Mar. Ay, he.
Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.
Mar. What's that to the purpose? 21
Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels a subscribing to the corruptors that say so of him. Who are they?
Mar. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.
Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece I'll drink to her as long as there is a passage my throat and drink in Illyria: he's a coward and a coyness that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. Who wench! Castilian vulgo! For here comes Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir Andrew Aguecheek.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! how now, Sir To Belch!
Sir To. Sweet Sir Andrew!
Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.
Mar. And you too, sir.
Sir To. Accost, Sir Andrew, accost.
Sir And. What's that?
Sir To. My niece's chambermaid.
Sir And. Good Mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.
Mar. My name is Mary, sir.
Sir And. Good Mistress Mary Accost,—
Sir To. You mistake, knight: 'accost' is from her, board her, woo her, assail her.
Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning 'accost'?
Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.
Sir To. An thou let part so, Sir And would thou mightest never draw sword again.
Sir And. An you part so, mistress, I would might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?
Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.
Sir And. Marry, but you shall have; and here's my hand.

Sir To. Why, I think so: I am not such a ass but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?
Mar. A dry jest, sir.
Sir And. Are you full of them?
Sir To. Sir, I have them at my fingers' end, marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren. [Exit.
Sir And. Never in your life, I think: unless you see canary put me down. Methinks some times I have no more wit than a Christian or a
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Marry man has: but I am a great eater of beef
I believe that does harm to my wit. 91
To. No question.
ir And. An I thought that, 'I'd forswear it.
ride home to-morrow, Sir Toby.
ir To. Pourquoi, my dear knight?
ir And. What is 'pourquoi'? do or not do?
uld I had bestowed that time in the tongues
I have in fencing, dancing and bear-baiting:
ul I but followed the arts!
ir To. Then hadst thou an excellent head
air.
ir And. Why, would that have mended my ir To. Past question; for thou seest it will curl by nature.
ir And. But it becomes me well enough,
't not?
ir To. Excellent; it hangs like flux on a iff; and I hope to see a housewife take thee her legs and spin it off. 110 ir And. Faith, 'I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby ir To. Wherefore are these things hid?
ir To. Wherefore are these things a gift?
ir To. And I think I have the back-trick ly strong as any man in Illyria.
ir To. What shall we do else? were we not under Taurus?
ir And. Taurus! That's sides and heart.
ir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let see thee caper: ha! higher; ha, ha! excel-l!

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?
Duke. Stand you a while aloof. Cesario,
Thou know'st no less but all: I have unclasp'd
To thee the book even of my secret soul:
Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her doors,
And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow
Till thou have audience.
Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?
Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love,
Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith:
It shall become thee well to act my woes;
She will attend it better in thy youth
Than in a nuncio's of more grave aspect.
Vio. I think not so, my lord.
Duke. Dear lad, believe it;
For they shall yet belie thy happy years,
That say thou art a man: Dianas lip
Is like no more smooth and rubious; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound,
And all is semblative a woman's part.
I know thy constellation is right apt
For this affair. Some four or five attend him;
All, if you will; for I myself am best
When least in company. Prosper well in this,
And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord,
To call his fortunes thine.
Vio. I'll do my best
To woo your lady: [Aside] yet, a barful strife!
Who'er I woo, myself would be his wife.

SCENE V. OLIVIA'S HOUSE.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.
Clo. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colours.
Mar. Make that good.
Clo. He shall see none to fear.
Mar. A good lenten answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born; of 'I fear no colours.'
Clo. Where, good Mistress Mary?
Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.
Clo. Well, God give them wisdom that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.
Mar. Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent; or, to be turned away, is not that as good as a hanging to you? 19
Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let summer bear it out.
Mar. You are resolute, then?
Clo. Not so, neither; but I am resolved on two points.
Mar. That if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.
Clo. Apro, in good faith; very apro, Well, go thy way; if Sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.
Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o'that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely, you were best. [Exit.
Clo. Wit, an't be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? 'Better a witty fool than a foolish wit.'

Enter Lady Olivia with Malvolio.

God bless thee, lady! 60
Oli. Take the fool away.
Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.
Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.
Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry: bid the dishonest man mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the bother mend him. Any thing that's mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve; so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calami ty, so beauty's a flower. The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.
Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you. 65
Clo. Misprision in the highest degree! Lady, cucullus non facit monachum; that's as much to say as I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.
Oli. Can you do it?
Clo. Dexteriously, good madonna.
Oli. Make your proof.
Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna: good my mouse of virtue, answer me.
Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll bide your proof.
Clo. Good madonna, why mournest thou? 70
Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.
Clo. I think his soul is in hell, madonna.
Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.
Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven. Take away the fool, gentlemen.
Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and shall do till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.
Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass word for twopence that you are no fool.
Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?
Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes deligh such a barren rascal: I saw him put down other day with an ordinary fool that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out his guard already; unless you laugh and mini occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I t these wise men, that crow so at these set kind fools, no better than the fools' zanies.
Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, taste with a distempered appetite. To be gross, guilless and of free disposition, is to those things for bird-bolts that you deem cann bullets: there is no slander in an allowed f though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing a known discreet man, though he do nothing reprove.
Clo. Now Mercury endure thee with least for thou speakest well of fools!

Re-enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a gentleman much desires to speak with you. 120
Oli. From the Count Orsino, is it?
Mar. I know not, madam: 'tis a fair yo man, and well attended.
Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?
Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.
Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks thing but madman: fie on him! [Exit Mar Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the co I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to miss it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you see, how your fooling grows old, and people dishkr Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, thy eldest son should be a fool; whose skull j cram with brains! for,—here he comes,—on thy kin has a most weak pie maker.

Enter Sir Toby.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk. What is at the gate, cousin?
Sir To. A gentleman.
Oli. A gentleman! what gentleman?
Sir To. 'Tis a gentleman here—a plague these pickle-herring! How now, sot!
Clo. Good Sir Toby!
Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come early by this lurchary?
Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery. Then at the gate.
Oli. Ay, marry, what is he?
Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it's all of [Exit.

Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool?
Clo. Like a drowned man, a fool and a man: one draught above heat makes him a for the second mads him; and a third drowns him.
Oli. Go thou and seek the coward, and him sit o' my cox; for he's in the third degree drink, he's drowned: go, look after him.
Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman.
Re-enter MALVOLIO.
a. Madam, yond young fellow swears he speak with you. I told him you were sick; akes on him to understand so much, and there comes to speak with you. I told him you aslees; he seems to have a foreknowledge that too, and therefore comes to speak with.
What is to be said to him, lady? he's furti against any denial.
i. Tell him he shall not speak with me.
a. Has been told so; and he says, he'll d at your door like a sheriff's post, and be the sorcerer to a bench, but he'll speak with you.
What kind o' man is he?
ai. Why, of mankind. 160
ai. What manner of man?
ai. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with will or no.
i. Of what personage and years is he?
a. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a cod, or a coiling when 'tis almost an apple: with him in standing between, between boy and . He is very well-favoured and he speaks shrewdly; one would think his mother's were scarce out of him.
72. Let him approach: call in my gentle-
ai. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit.
Re-enter MARIA.
i. Give me your veil: come, throw it o'er my face.
I once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA, and Attendants.
i. The honourable lady of the house, which e?
i. Speak to me; I shall answer for her.
r will?
280 i. Most radiant, exquisite and unmatchedbeauty,—I pray you, tell me if this be the
the house, for I never saw her: I would ath to cast away my speech, for besides that excellently well penned, I have taken great so con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no
I am very compitable, even to the least ner usage.
i. Whence came you, sir? 289
i. I can say litter more than I have studied, that question's out of my part. Good gentle give me modest assurance if you be the lady house, that I may proceed in my speech.
i. Are you a comedian?
i. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play.
you the lady of the house?
i. If I do not usurp myself, I am.
i. Most certain, if you are she, you do p yourself; for what is yours to bestow is yers to reserve. But this is from my com-ion: I will on with my speech in your praise, then show you the heart of my message.
i. Come to what is important in't: I forgive the praise.
i. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and poetical.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates, and allowed your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber; I am to hull here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no o verture of war, no taxation of homage: I hold the olive in my hand; my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you?
what would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appeared in me have I learned from my master's entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead; to your ears, divinity, to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exeunt Maria and Attendants.] Now, sir, what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet lady,—

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oli. In his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oli. O, I have read it: it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your text; but we will draw the curtain and show you the picture. Look you, sir, such a one I was this present: 'tis not well done? [Unveiling.

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruellest she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave
And leave the world no copy.

Oli. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labelled to my will: as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see you what you are, you are too proud:
But, if you were the devil, you are fair.

My lord and master loves you: O, such love
Could be but recompensed, though you were crown'd

The nonpareil of beauty!
Oli. How does he love me?
Vio. With adorations, fertile tears,
With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.
Oli. Your lord does know my mind; I cannot love him:
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
In voices well divulged, free, learned and valiant;
And in dimension and the shape of nature 280
A gracious person: but yet I cannot love him;
He might have took his answer long ago.
Vio. If I did love you in my master's flame,
With such a suffering, such a deadly life,
In your denial I would find no sense;
I would not understand it.
Oli. Why, what would you?
Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantons of contemned love
And sing them loud even in the dead of night;
Halloo your name to the reverberate hills
And make the babbling gossip of the air 291
Cry out 'Olivia'! O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth,
But you should pity me!
Oli. You might do much.

What is your parentage?

Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman.

Oli. Get you to your lord:
I cannot love him: let him send no more;
Unless, perchance, you come to me again,
300
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:
I thank you for your pains: spend this for me.

Vio. I am no fool'd post, lady; keep your purse:
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint that you shall love;
And let your fervour, like my master's, be Placed in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty.
[Exit.

Oli. 'What is your parentage?'
'Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman,' I'll be sworn thou art;
310
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions and spirit,
Do give thee five-fold blazon: not too fast: soft, soft!
Unless the master were the man. How now!
Even so quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks I feel this youth's perfections
With an invisible and subtle stealth
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.
What ho, Malvolio!

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service.

Oli. Run after that same peevish messenger,
The county's man: he left this ring behind him,
Would I or not: tell him I'll none of it. 321

Desire him not to flatter with his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes; I am not for him:
If that the youth will come this way to-morrow,
I'll give him reasons for 't: he is he, Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Oli. I do know not what, and fear to find
Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind.
Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be, and be this so.
[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I. The sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no. My stars shadily over me: the malignity of my fate might perhaps distress you; therefore I shall cry of you your leave that I may bear my evils aloof: it were a bad recompense for your love, to any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you whither you bound.

Seb. No, sooth, sir: my determinate voya is mere extravagancy. But I perceive in you excellent a touch of modesty, that you will extort from me what I am willing to keep therefore it charges me in manners the rather express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Rodrigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messalina whom I know you have heard of. He left behi himself and a sister, both born in an hour: the heavens had been pleased, would we had ended! but you, sir, altered that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she was resembled me, was yet of many accounted beful: but, though I could not with such eudial wonder overfar believe that, yet thus far I would boldly publish her; she bore a mind that en could not but call fair. She is drowned alread sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertaiment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done that is, kill him whom you have recovered, des it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is ft of kindness, and I am yet so near the manners my mother, that upon the least occasion my mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the Count Orsino's court: farewell.
[Exe.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go wi the!
I have many enemies in Orsino's court, Else would I very shortly see thee there. But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go.
[Exe.

SCENE II. A street.

Enter Viola, Malvolio following.

Mal. Were you not even now with the Counte Olivia?
Vio. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir; you might have saved me my pains, to have taken away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: and one thing more, the TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir And. Excellent! why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song. Sir To. Come on; there is sixpence for you: let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me too: if one knight give a—

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay: I care not for good life. Clo. [Sings]

O mistress mine, where are you roaming? O, stay and hear; your true love's coming;

That can sing both high and low;

Trip no further, pretty sweeting;

Journeys end in lovers meeting,

Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, i' faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. [Sings]

What is love? 'tis not hereafter;

Present mirth hath present laughter;

What's to come is still unsure:

In delay there lies no plenty;

Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,

Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, i' faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulce in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance indeed? shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By'lordy, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be, 'Thou knave.'

Clo. 'Hold thy peace, thou knave,' knight? I shall be constrained in't to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins 'Hold thy peace.'

Clo. I shall never begin if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, i' faith. Come, begin.

[Catch sung.]

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a caterwauling do you keep here?

If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a Catalian, we are politicians, Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey, and 'Three merry men be we.' Am not I consanguineous? am I not of her blood? Tillyvally. Lady! [Sings]

'There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady!'

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough if he be disposed, and so do I too: he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. [Sings] 'O, the twelfth day of December,'—

Mar. 'For the love o' God, peace!'
Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your cozzers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches.

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she harbours you as her kinman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. 'Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.'

Mal. Is't even so?

Sir To. 'But I will never die.'

Clo. 'His eyes do show his days are almost done.'

Mar. Nay, good Sir Toby.

Clo. 'I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.'

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for to-night: since the youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him; if I do not pull him into a wayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed: I know I can do it.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of puritan.

Sir And. O, if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog!

Sir To. What, for being a puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a puritan that he is, or any thing constantly, but a time-pleaser; an afflicted ass, that cons state without book and utters in great swaths: the best persuaded of himself crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, this is his grounds of faith that all that look on love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obstinate epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, complexion, he shall find himself most feebly personated. I can write very like my lady's niece: on a forgotten matter we can hardly mistake in distinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.

Sir And. I have 't in my nose too.

Sir To. He shall think, by the letters thou wilt drop, that they come from my nieces and that she's in love with him.

Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of a colour.

Sir And. And your horse now would make him an ass.

Mar. Ass, I doubt not.

Sir And. O, 'twill be admirable!

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know physic will work with him. I will plant you there and let the fool make a third, where he shall the letter: observe his construction of it this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell.

Sir To. Good night, Penthesilea.

Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench.

Sir To. She's a beagle, true-bred, and one that adores me: what o' that?

Sir And. I was adored once too.

Sir To. Let's to bed, knight. Thou hast need send for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a fool way out.

Sir To. Send for money, knight: if thou hast not i' the end, call me cut.

Sir And. If I do not, never trust me, take how you will.

Sir To. Come, come, I'll go burn some sad tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight, come, knight.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Volia, Curio, and others.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song, That old and antique song we heard last night. Methought it did relieve my passion much, More than light airs and recollected terms Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times: Come; but one verse.

Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship that should sing it.

Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord; a fool that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune to whiles.

Come hither, boy: if ever thou shalt love,
the sweet pangs of it remember me;

r such as I am all true lovers are,

A and skittish in all motions else,

[When the constant image of the creature at is beloved. How dost thou like this tune? Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat]

Duke. Thou dost speak masterly:

[life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye

sh stay'd under some favour it loves:

th it not, boy? Vio. A little, by your favour. ]

Duke. What kind of woman is't?

Vio. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years, I faith? Vio. About your years, my lord.

Duke. Too old, by heaven: let still the woman take elder than herself: so wears she to him,

sway she level in her husband's heart:

'boy, however we do praise ourselves,

fancies are more giddy and unform,

re longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,

an women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself, thy affection cannot hold the bent;

women are as roses, whose fair flower

once display'd, doth fall that very hour.

Vio. And so they are: alas, that they are so;

die, even when they to perfection grow!

[Re-enter Curio and Clown. ]

Duke. O, fellow, come, the song we had last night, ek it, Cesario, it is old and plain;

spinsters and the knitters in the sun

the free maids that weave their thread with bones

use to chant it; it is silly sooth, dailies with the innocence of love,

the old age.

[Music. ]

Song.

Come away, come away, death,

And in sad cypress let me be laid;

Fly away, fly away, breath;

I am slain by a fair cruel maid.

My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,

O, prepare it!

My part of death, no one so true

Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet,

On my black coffin let there be strown;

Not a friend, not a friend greet

My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:

A thousand thousand sighs to save,

Lay me, O, where

Sad true lover never find my grave,

To weep there!

Vio. There’s for thy pains.

No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing,

Duke. I’ll pay thy pleasure then.

Vio. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.

Vio. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opal. I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing and their intent every where; for that’s it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell.

Vio. Let all the rest give place.

[Curio and Attendants retire. ]

Once more, Cesario, Get thee to yond same sovereign cruelty: Tell her, my love, more noble than the world, Prizes not quantity of dirty lands; The parts that fortune hath bestowed on her, Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune; But 'tis that miracle and queen of gems That nature pranks her in attracts my soul,

Vio. But if she cannot love you, sir?

Duke. I cannot be so answered.

Vio. Sooth, but you must.

Say that some lady, as perhaps there is,

Hath for your love as great a pang of heart

As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;

You tell her so; must she not then be answer’d?

Duke. There is no woman's sides

Can bide the beating of so strong a passion

As love doth give my heart; no woman's heart

So big, to hold so much; they lack retention.

Alas, their love may be call'd appetite,

No motion of the liver, but the palate,

That suffer sufeit, cloyment and revolt;

But mine is all as hungry as the sea,

And can digest as much: make no compare

Between that love a woman can bear me

And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know —

Duke. What dost thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:

In faith, they are as true of heart as we.

My father had a daughter loved a man,

As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,

I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?

Vio. A blank, my lord. She never told her love,

But let concealment, like a worm i’ the bud,

Feed on her damask cheek: she pined in thought,

And with a green and yellow melancholy

She sat like patience on a monument,

Smiling at grief. Was not this love indeed?

We men may say more, swear more: but indeed

Our shows are more than will; for still we prove

Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?

Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house.

And all the brothers too; and yet I know not.

Sir, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.

To her in haste; give her this jewel; say,

My love can give no place, bide no denny.
SCENE V. OLIVIA'S GARDEN.

Enter SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, and FABIAN.

SIR TOBY. Come thy ways, Signior Fabian.

FAB. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scrape of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

SIR TOBY. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?

FAB. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out o'avour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.

SIR TOBY. To anger him we'll have the bear again; and we will fool him black and blue: shall we not, Sir Andrew?

SIR ANDREW. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

SIR TOBY. Here comes the little villain.

Enter MARGARET.

How now, my metal of India?

MARIA. Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun practising behaviour to his own shadow this half hour: observe him, for the love of mockery; for I know this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! Lie thou there [throws down a letter]; for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.

[Exit.

Enter MALVOLIO.

MALVOLIO. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me: and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't?

SIR TOBY. Here's an overweening rogue!

FAB. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

SIR ANDREW. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue!

SIR TOBY. Peace, I say.

MALVOLIO. To be Count Malvolio!

SIR TOBY. Ah, rogue!

SIR ANDREW. Pistol him, pistol him.

SIR TOBY. Peace, peace!

MALVOLIO. There is example for't: the lady of the Strachys married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

SIR ANDREW. Fie on him, Jezebel!

FAB. O, peace! now he's deeply in: look how imagination blows him.

MALVOLIO. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state,—

SIR TOBY. O, for a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye!

MALVOLIO. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from a daybed, where I have left Olivia sleeping,—

SIR TOBY. Fire and brimstone!

FAB. O, peace, peace!

MALVOLIO. And then to have the humour of state; and after a demure travel of regard, telling them I know my place as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinsman Toby,—

SIR TOBY. Bolts and shackles!

FAB. O peace, peace, peace I now, now.

MALVOLIO. Seven of my people, with an obedient sort, make out for him: I frown the while; an perchance wind up my watch, or play with my some rich jewel. Toby approaches; courtesy there to me,—

SIR TOBY. Shall this fellow live?

FAB. Though our silence be drawn from cars, yet peace.

MALVOLIO. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard,

SIR TOBY. And does not Toby take you a blo o' the lips then?

MALVOLIO. Saying, 'Cousin Toby, my fortune having cast me on your niece give me this pro genre of speech—'

SIR TOBY. What, what?

MALVOLIO. 'You must amend your drunkenness.'

SIR TOBY. Out, scab!

FAB. Nay, patience, or we break the sine

MALVOLIO. I. Besides, you waste the treasure of you time with a foolish knight—'

SIR ANDREW. That's me, I warrant you.

MALVOLIO. 'One Sir Andrew—'

SIR ANDREW. I knew 'twas I; for many doo me fool.

MALVOLIO. What employment have we here?

[Taking up the letter.

FAB. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

SIR TOBY. O, peace! and the spirit of human

MALVOLIO. By my life, this is my lady's hand these be her very C's, her U's and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

SIR ANDREW. Her C's, her U's and her T's; what mean that?

MALVOLIO. [Reads] 'To the unknown beloved, thou and my good wishes:'—her very phrases!—in your leave, wax. Soft! and the impressure by Lucifer, with which she uses to seal: 'to my lady. To whom should this be?

FAB. This wins him, liver and all.

MALVOLIO. [Reads] 'Jove knows I love:

But who?

Lips, do not move;

No man must know.'

No man must know.' What follows? the numbers altered! 'No man must know:' if the numbers altered! 'No man must know:' if the

SIR ANDREW. Marry, hang thee, brock!

MALVOLIO. [Reads] I may command where I adore;

But silence, like a Lucrece knife,

With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore;

M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.

FAB. A fustian riddle!

MALVOLIO. [Reads] Excellent wench, say I.

MALVOLIO. 'M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.' No but, take out me see, let me see, let me see.

FAB. What dish o' poison has she dressed him?

SIR ANDREW. To and with what wing the star checks at it!

MALVOLIO. 'I may command where I adore.' Where she may command me: I serve her; she is Scene V.

Twelfth Night; or, What You Will.

A pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And ask no other dowry with her but such another jest.

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Re-enter Maria.

Sir To. Will thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either.

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and become thy bond-slave?

Sir And. I' faith, or I either.

Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that when the image of it leaves him he must run mad.

Mar. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vitea with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady; he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors, and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt.

If you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit!

Sir And. I'll make one too.

[Exeunt.

Act III.

Scene I. Olivia's garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music: dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. N' sir, I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou mayst say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or, the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir. To see this age! A sentence is but a cheverel glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

Vio. Nay, that's certain; they that dally nicely with words may quickly make them wanton.

Clo. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name's a word; and to dally with that word might make my sister wanton. But indeed words are very rascals since bonds disgraced them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clo. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.
Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow and carest for nothing.

Cle. Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

Cle. No, indeed, sir; the Lady Olivia has no folly: she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands as pitchards are to herring; the husband's the bigger: I am indeed not her fool, but her corruptor of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.

Cle. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun, it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

Cle. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard!

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee, I am almost sick for one; [Aside] though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Cle. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together and put to use.

Cle. I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Vio. I understand you, sir; 'tis well begged.

Cle. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who you are and what you would be out of my wellkin, I might say 'element, but the word is over-worn.

[Exit.

Vio. This fellow is wise enough to play the fools:
And to do that well craves a kind of wit:
He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of persons, and the time,
And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. This is a practice
As full of labour as a wise man's art:
For folly that he wisely shows is fit:
But wise men, folly-fall'n, quite taint their wit.

Enter SIR TOBY, and SIR ANDREW.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Vio. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

Sir And. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.

Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyage.

Sir To. Taste your legs, sir; put them to motion.

Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter.

Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance. But we are prevented.
SCENE I. OLIVIA'S HOUSE.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

Sir And. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom, give thy son.

Fab. You must needs yield your reason, Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more ours to the count's serving-man than ever she did upon me; I saw 't in the orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? I mean that.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her yard you.

Sir And. 'Slight, will you make an ass o' me? Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sit upon the heads of judgement and reason.

Sir To. And they have been grand-jurymen before Noah was a sailor.

Fab. She did show favour to the youth in his sight only to exasperate you, to awake your mouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and mestone in your liver. You should then have costed her; and with some excellent jests, fire from the mint, you should have bANGED the uth into dumness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was balked: the double gilt this opportunity you let time wash off; and you now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; were you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some dable attempt either of valour or policy.

Sir And. An't be any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.

Sir To. Why, then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places: my niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curst and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent and full of invention: taunt him with the license of ink: if thou thou'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lines as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down; go, about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter: about it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee in the cubiculo: go.

[Exeunt Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, Sir Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad, some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not deliver it.

Sir To. Never trust me, then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. And for Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Mar. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegade; for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered.

Mar. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school i' the church. I have dogged him, like his murderer. He does oblige every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him: he does smile his face into more lines than is in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies: you have not seen such a thing as 'tis. I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile and take't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A STREET.

Enter Sebastian and Antonio.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you; but, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.
Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire,
More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth;
And not all love to see you, though so much
As might have drawn one to a longer voyage,
But jealousy what might befall your travel,
Being skillless in these parts; which to a stranger,
Untouched, and unadvised, often prove
10 Rough and unperspectable: my willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuance.

Seb. My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make but thanks,
† And thanks; and ever . . . oft good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncourtly pay:
But, were my worth as is my conscience firm,
You should find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go see the relics of this town?
Ant. To-morrow, sir: best first go see your lodging.
Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night:
I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame
That do renown this city.

Ant. Would you 'd pardon me;
I do not without danger walk these streets:
Once, in a sea-fight, 'gainst the count his galleys
I did some service; of such note indeed,
That were ye taken here it would scarce be answered.

Seb. Belike you slew great number of his people.
Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody
nature;
Albeit the quality of the time and quarrel
Might well have given us bloody argument.
It might have since been answer'd in repaying
What we took from them; which, for traffic's sake,
Most of our city did: only myself stood out;
For which, if I be lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear.
Seb. Do not then walk too open.
Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse.

In the south suburbs, at the Elephant,
Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet,
While you beguile the time and feed your knowledge
With viewing of the town: there shall you have me.

Seb. Why I your purse?
Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase; and your store,
I think, is not for idle markets, sir.
Seb. I'll be your purse-bearer and leave you
For an hour.
Ant. To the Elephant.
Seb. I do remember. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. OLIVIA'S GARDEN.

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

Oli. I have sent after him: he says he'll come:
How shall I feast him? what bestow of him?
For youth is bought more oft than begg'd or borrow'd.
I speak too loud.
Where is Malvolio? he is sad and civil,
And suits well for a servant with my fortunes:
Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is, sure, possessed, madam.
Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?
Mar. No, madam, he does nothing but smile;
your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come; for, sure, the man is tainted in his wits.
Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.]
I am as mad as he,
If sad and merry madness equal be.

Re-enter MARIA, with MALVOLIO.

How now, Malvolio!
Mal. Sweet lady, ho, ho.
Oli. Smilest thou?
I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.
Mal. Sad, lady! I could be sad: this does make some obstruction in the blood, this crossgartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is,
* 'Please one, and please all.'
Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?
Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.
Mal. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?
Mal. To bed! ay, sweet-heart, and I'll come to thee.
Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so and kiss thy hand so oft?
Mar. How do you, Malvolio?
Mal. At your request! yes; nightingale answer daws.
Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculou boldness before my lady?
Mal. 'Be not afraid of greatness': 'twas well writ.
Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?
Mal. 'Some are born great,'—
Oli. Ha! Mal. 'Some achieve greatness,'—
Oli. What sayest thou?
Mal. 'And some have greatness thrust upon them.'
Oli. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings,—
Oli. Thy yellow stockings!
Mal. 'And wished to see thee cross-gartered.
Oli. Cross-gartered!
Mal. 'Go to, thou art made, if thou desires be so;—
Oli. Am I made?
Mal. 'If not, let me see thee a servant still.'
Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

Enter SERVANT.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the Count Orsino's is returned: I could hardly get him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.
Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit SERVANT.
Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him: I would no have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.
[Exeunt OLIVIA and MARIA.
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Mal. O, ho! do you come near me now? no room man than Sir Toby to look to me! This scurs directly with the letter: she sends him purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; she incites me to that in the letter. 'Cast humble slouch,' says she; 'be opposite with chimney, surly with servants; let thy tongue go with arguments of state; put thyself into trick of singularity;' and consequently sets on the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverend rig, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir note, and so forth. I have limed her; but it is 's doing, and Jove make me thankful! And she went away now. 'Let this fellow be ked to; ' fellow! not Malvolio, nor after my pee, but fellow. Why, every thing adhers ether, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe stance—What can be said? Nothing that be can come between me and the full prospect my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of it, and he is to be thanked.

Enter Maria with Sir Toby and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of heaven? If all the devils of hell be drawn in, and Legjon himself possessed him, yet I'll ak to him.

Mar. Here he is, here he is. How isn't with t, sir? how isn't with you, man?

Mal. Go off; I discard you: let me enjoy my vate; go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within! I did not? I tell you? Sir Toby, my lady ys you have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?

Sir To. Go to, go to; peace, peace; we must 4 gently with him: let me alone. How do i, Malvolio? how isn't with you? What, man! the devil: consider, he's an enemy to man-

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. Go, you, an you speak ill of the devil,

Mal. He takes it at heart! Pray God, he be not pitch'd!

Mal. Carry his water to the wise women.

Mar. Marry, and it shall be done to-morrow

Mal. How now, mistress?

O Lord!

Sir To. Frightee, hold thy peace; this is not way: do you not see you move him? let me as with him.

Mal. No way but gentleness; gently: fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my buckawoc! how t thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What,

Mal. I'lis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit

Mal. Get him to say his prayers, good Sir ry, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx!

Mal. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of

Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element; you shall know more hereafter.

[Exit.

Sir To. Is't possible?

Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I 4 could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the in-fec of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air and taint.

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad indeed.

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad: we may carry it thus, for our pleasure and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time we will bring the device to the bar and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

Sir And. Here's the challenge, read it: I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fab. Is't so saucy?

Sir And. Ay, is't, I warrant him: do but read it.

Sir To. Give me. [Reads] 'Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow.'

Fab. Good, and valiant.

Sir To. [Reads] 'Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for.'

Fab. A good note; that keeps you from the blow of the law.

Sir To. [Reads] 'Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for.'

Fab. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense-

Sir To. [Reads] 'I will waylay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me,'—

Fab. Good.

Sir To. [Reads] 'Thou killst me like a rogue and a villain.'

Fab. Still you keep o' the windy side of the law; good.

Sir To. [Reads] 'Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy, ANDREW AGUECHEER.'

If this letter move him not, his legs cannot: I'll give't him.

Mar. You may have very fit occasion for thee: he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir To. Go, Sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard like a bum-baily: so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and, as thou drawest, swear horrible: for it comes to pass oft that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away!

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing.

Sir To. Now will not I deliver his letter: for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less: therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour; and drive the gentleman, as I know his youth will aptly receive it, into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury and impetuousity. This will so fright them both that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Re-enter OLIVIA, with VIOLA.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece: give them way till he take leave, and presently after
him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge. 220

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone
And laid mine honour too uncharily out:
There's something in me that reproves my fault;
But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof.

Vio. With the same 'haviour that your passion bears

On my master's grief.

Oli. Here, wear this jewel for me, 'tis my picture;
Refuse it not; it hath no tongue to vex you;
And I beseech you come again to-morrow. 230

What shall you ask of me that I'll deny,
That honour saved may upon asking give?
Vio. Nothing but this; your true love for my master.

Oli. How with mine honour may I give him
that
Which I have given to you?

Vio. Well, come again to-morrow: fare thee
well: 240

A fiend like thee might bear my soul to hell.

[Exit.

Re-enter SIR TOBY and FABIAN.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee.

Vio. And you, sir. 239

Sir To. That defence thou hast, betake thee to't: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy interceptor, full of despite, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard-end: dismount thy tuck, be yare in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skilful and deadly.

Vio. You mistake, sir; I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me; my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwise, I assure you:
therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill and wrath can furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is knight, dubbed with unhatched rapier and on carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl; souls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre. Hot nob, is his word; give't or take't.

Vio. I will return again into the house an desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter:
I have heard of some kind of men that put quire
rels purposely on others, to taste their value belike this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives ite out of a very competent injury: therefore, go you on and give him his desire. Back you sha not to the house, unless you undertake that wit me which with as much safety you might assure him: therefore, on, or strip your sword star naked; for meddle you must, that's certain, of forswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivil as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know the knight what my offence to him is: it is some thing of negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay by you this gentleman till my return. 235

[Exeunt.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitration; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria.
Will you walk towards him? I will make you peace with him if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't:
am one that had rather go with sir priest than knight: I care not who knows so much of mettle. 250

[Exeunt. 251

Re-enter SIR TOBY, with SIR ANDREW.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a firago. I had a pass with him rapier, scabbard and all, and he gives me the stuf in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable and on the answer, he pays you as surely as you feel hit the ground they step on. They say he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Plague on't, an I thought he had been valiant and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him.
Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Caplet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion: stand here and make a good show on't: this shall end with the perdition of souls. [Aside] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter FABIAN and VIOLA.

[To Fab.] I have his horse to take up the qua rel: I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; an Enter Antonio.

Ant. Will you deny me now? Is't possible that my deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, Least that it make me so unsound a man As to upbraid you with those kindnesse That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none; Nor know I you by voice or any feature: I hate ingratitude more in a man Than lying, vanity, babbling, drunkenness, Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O heavens themselves!

Sec. Off. Come, sir, I pray you, go.

Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here I snatch'd one half out of the jaws of death, Relieved him with such sanctity of love, And to his image, which me thought did promise Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

First Off. What's that to us? The time goes by: away! Ant. But O how vile an idol proves this god! Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. In nature there's no blemish but the mind: None can be call'd deform'd but the unkind: Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous evil Are empty trunks o'erfliourish'd by the devil.

First Off. The man grows mad: away with him! Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exit with Officers. Vio. Methinks his words do from such passion fly, That he believes himself: so do not I. Prove true, imagination, O, prove true, That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you! Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian: we'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage saws.

Vio. He named Sebastian: I my brother know Yet living in my glass; even such and so In favour was my brother, and he went Still in this fashion, colour, ornament, For him I imitate: O, if it prove, Tempests are kind and salt waves fresh in love. [Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again and beat him.

Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir And. An I do not.— [Exit. 430

Fab. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money 'twill be nothing yet. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before Olivia's house.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?
Seb. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not Master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither. Nothing that is so is so.

Seb. I prithee, vent thy folly somewhere else. Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! he has heard that word of some great man and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. I prithee now, ungird thy strangeness and tell me what I shall vent to my lady: shall I vent to her that thou art coming?

Seb. I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me:
There's money for thee: if you tarry longer, 20
I shall give worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand. These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good report—after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir Andrew, Sir Toby, and Fabian.

Sir And. Now, sir, have I met you again? there's for you.

Seb. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there.

Are all the people mad?

Sir To. Hold, sir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your coats for two pence. [Exit.
Sir To. Come on, sir; hold.

Sir And. Nay, let him alone: I'll go another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand. 40
Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go.
Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well shaffed; come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?
If thou darest tempt me further, draw thy sword.
Sir To. What, what? Nay, then I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.

Enter Oliva.

Oli. Hold, Toby; on thy life I charge thee, hold!

Sir To. Madam!

Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch, 50
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd! out of my sight!
Be not offended, dear Cesario.

Rudesby, be gone!
[Exit Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.]

I prithee, gentle friend,
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent;
Against my peace. Go with me to my house,
And hear how there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby 60
Mayst smile at this: thou shalt not choose but go:
Do not deny. Beshrew his soul for me,

He started one poor heart of mine in thee.

Seb. What relish is in this? how runs the stream
Or fain mad, or else this is a dream?

Let fancy still my sense in Lethe steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep!

Oli. Nay, come, I prithee; would thou 'd be ruled by me!

Seb. Madam, I will.

Oli. O, say so, and so be! [Exit.

Scene II. Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I prithee, put on this gown an' this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Toby; the curate: do it quickly; I'll call Sir Toby whilst.
[Exit.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in't; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor less enough to be thought a good student; but to say an honest man and a good housekeeper god as fairly as to say a careful man and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby and Maria.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, master Parson.

Clo. Bonos dies, Sir Toby: for, as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink very wittily said to a niece of King Gorbus; 'That that is is;' so I, being master Parson, as master Parson; for, what is 'that' but 'that' and 'is' but 'is'?

Sir To. To him, Sir Topas.

Clo. What, ho, I say! peace in this prison!

Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.

Mal. [Within] Who calls there?

Sir To. Sir Topas the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

Mal. Sir Topas, Sir Topas, good Sir Topas go to my lady.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man! talkest thou nothing but ladies!
Sir To. Sir Toby, well said, master Parson.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged; good Sir Topas, do not think I am mad: the have laid me here in hideous darkness.

Clo. Fie, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of the gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy: sayest thou that house is dark?

Mal. As hell, Sir Topas.

Clo. Why, it hath bay windows transparent,
As barricades, and the clearstores toward the south north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

Mal. I am not mad, Sir Topas: I say to thee this house is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou earnest; I say, there is darkness but ignorance; in which thou art most puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.

Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and say, there was never man thus abused. I am more mad than you are: make the trial of it any constant question.
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me, I do feel’t and see’t; And though ’tis wonder that enwraps me thus, Yet ’tis not madness. Where’s Antonio, then? I could not find him at the Elephant: Yet there he was; and there I found this credit, That he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service; For though my soul disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes And wrangle with my reason that persuades me To any other trust but that I am mad Or else the lady’s mad: yet, if ’twere so, She could not sway her house, command her followers, Take and give back affairs and their dispatch With such a smooth, discreet and stable bearing As I perceive she does: there’s something in’t That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter Olivia and Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well, Now go with me and with this holy man Into the chantry by: there, before him, And underneath that consecrated roof, Plight me the full assurance of your faith; That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace. He shall conceal it Whiles you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth. What do you say? Seb. I’ll follow this good man, and go with you; And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine, That they may fairly note this act of mine!

[Exeunt.]
ACT V.

SCENE I. Before Olivia's house.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou loveth me, let me see his letter.

Clo. Good Master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Clo. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. This is, to give a dog, and in recom pense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?
Clo. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings. 10

Duke. I know thee well: how dost thou, my good fellow?

Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my fœs and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

Clo. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

Clo. Marry, sir, they praise me and make an ass of me; now my fœs tell me plainly I am an ass: so that by my fœs, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused: so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why then, the worse for my friends and the better for my fœs.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me: there's gold. 31

Clo. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Clo. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner, to be a double-dealer: there's another.

Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of Saint Bennet, sir, may put you in mind; one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness; but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit.

Via. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmeard As black as Vulcan in the smoke of war: A bawbling vessel was he captain of, For shallow draught and bulk unprizably; With which such scathful grapple did he make With the most noble bottom of our fleet, That very envy and the tongue of loss Cried Shame and honour on him. What's this matter?

First Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio That took the Phenix and her fraught from Candy;

And this is he that did the Tiger board. When your young nephew Titus lost his leg: Here in the streets, desperate of shame and sta In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Via. He did me kindness, sir, drew my side;

But in conclusion put strange speech upon me: I know not what 'twas but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water this What foolish boldness brought thee to the mercies, Whom thou, in terms so bloody and so dear, Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir, Be pleased that I shake off these names y give me: Antonio never yet was thief or pirate, Though I confess, on base and ground enough Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither That most ingrateful boy there by your side, From the rude sea's enraged and foamy mouth Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was: His head I gave him, and did thereto add My love, without retention or restraint, All his in dedication; for his sake Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drove to defend him when he was beset: Where being apprehended, his false cunning, Not meaning to partake with me in danger, Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance And grew a twenty years removed thing While one would wink; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use Not half an hour before.

Via. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Ant. To-day, my lord; and for three mon before, No interm, not a minute's vacancy, Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess; now her foot walks on earth.

But for thee, fellow; fellow, thy words are me Zestless: Three months this youth hath tended upon me, But more of that anon. Take him aside. Oli. What would my lord, but that he me not have, Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable? Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Via. Madam!

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Oli. What do you say, Cesario? Good my lord,—

Via. My lord would speak; my duty hushes it.

Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord, It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear As howling after music.
Duke. Still so cruel?

Oli. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. Will 'tis by peradventure? you uncivil lady, whose ingrate and unauspicious altar soul the faithfull'st offerings hath breathed out at e'er devotion tender'd! What shall I do?

Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall become him.

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it,
To the Egyptian thief at point of death, If I love what—a savage jealous
At sometime savours nobly. But hear me this: Ece to non-regardance cast my faith, and that I partly know the instrument At screws me from my true place in your favour, Ve you the marble-breasted tyrant still; If this your minion, whom I know you love; And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly, Will I tear out of that cruel eye, Here he sits crowned in his master's spite, Me, boy, with me; my thoughts are ripe in mischief: I sacrifice the lamb that I do love, Spirit a raven's heart within a dove. Vio. And I, most jocund, apt and willingly, Do you rest, a thousand deaths would die. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I loveore than I love these eyes, more than my life, ore, by all mores, than e'er I shall love wife. I do feign, you witnesses above Nish my life for tainting of my love!

Oli. Ay me, detested! how am I beguiled! Vio. Who does beguile you? who does you wrong?

Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? is it so long? Il forth the holy father.

Duke. Come, away!

Oli. Ay, husband: can he that deny? Vio. Her husband, sirrah!

Oli. No, my lord, not I.

Vio. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear At makes thee strange thy propriety: ar not, Cesario; take thy fortunes up; That thou know'st thou art, and then thou art great as that thou fear'st.

Enter Priest.

O, welcome, father! ther, I charge thee, by thy reverence, Are to unfold, though lately we intended keep in darkness what occasion now: Veals before 'tis ripe, what thou dost know oth newly pass'd between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love, as'mid by mutual joinder of your hands, tested by the holy close of lips, strengthened by interchanging of your rings; all the ceremony of this compact al'd in my function, by my testimony: I, when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave have travell'd but two hours.

Duke. O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be?

When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case? Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow, That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet Where thou and I henceforth may never meet. Vio. My lord, I do protest—

Oli. O, do not swear! Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon! Send one presently to Sir Toby.

Oli. What's the matter?

Sir And. He has broke my head across and has given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too: for the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

Oli. Who has done this, Sir Andrew?

Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario:

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario?

Sir And. 'Od's lifings, here he is! You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.

Vio. Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you:

You drew your sword upon me without cause; But I bespake you fair, and hurt you not.

Sir And. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb.

Enter Sir Toby and Clown.

Here comes Sir Toby halting: you shall hear more: but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Duke. How now, gentleman! how is't with you?

Sir To. That's all one: has hurt me, and there's the end on't. Sot, didst see Dick surgeon, sot?

Clo. O, he's drunk, Sir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were set at eight i' the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue, and a passy measures panyn: I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

Sir And. I'll help you, Sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

Sir To. Will you help? an ass-head and a coxcomb and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull! Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to. [Exeunt Clown, Fabian, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman;

But, had it been the brother of my blood, I must have done no less with wit and safety. You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you:

Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons.

A natural perspective, that is and is not!

Seb. Antonio, O my dear Antonio!
Oli. How now! art thou mad?

Cló. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at his staves' end as well as a man in his case may do; he has here writ a letter to you; I should have given 't you to-day morning, but as a madman's epistle are no gospels, so it skills not much when they are delivered.

Oli. Open 't, and read it.

Cló. Look then to be well edified when a fool delivers the madman. [Reads] 'By the Lord madam,'—

Oli. How now! art thou mad?

Cló. No, madam, I do but read madness: your ladyship will have it as it ought to be; you must allow Vox.

Oli. Frithee, read 't thy right wits.

Cló. So do I, madonna; but to read his right wits is to read thus: therefore perpend, my process, and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, sirrah. [To Fabian]

Fab. [Reads] By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness and given your drunk cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on with the which I doubt not but to do myself right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of a speak out of my injury.

The madly-used Malvolio

Oli. Did he write this?

Cló. Ay, madam.

Duke. This savours not much of distraction.

Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian; bring him hither.

[Exit Fabian]

My lord, so please you, these things furth thought on,

To think me as well a sister as a wife,
One day shall crown the alliance on't, so please you,
Here at my house and at my proper cost.

Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrance your offer.

[To Viola] Your master quits you; and for your service done him,
So much against the mettle of your sex,

[So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,]
And since you call'd me master for so long,
Here is my hand: you shall from this time be
Your master's mistress.

Oli. A sister! you are she.

Re-enter Fabian, with Malvolio.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Oli. Ay, my lord, this sam How now, Malvolio!

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong.

Notorious wrong.

Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that letter.
I must not deny that it is your hand;
it is from it, if you can, in hand or phrase:
say 'tis not your seal, not your invention:
I can say none of this: well, grant it then
I tell me, in the modesty of honour, you have given me such clear lights of
favour,
I come smiling and cross-garter'd to you,
on yellow stockings and to frown
Sir Toby and the lighter people;
I, acting this in an obedient hope,
you have suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
p't in a dark house, visited by the priest,
I made the most notorious geck and gull at your invention play'd on? tell me why.
Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
hugh, I confess, much like the character:
out of question 'tis Maria's hand.
I now do bethink me, it was she stold me thou wast mad; then camest in smiling,
in such forms which here were presupposed on thee in the letter. Prithhee, be content:
practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon
thee;
when we know the grounds and authors of it, shall be both the plaintiff and the judge thine own cause.

Good madam, hear me speak,
let no quarrel nor no brawl to come nt the condition of this present hour, ich I wonder'd at. In hope it shall not, st freely I confess, myself and Toby this device against Malvolio here, in some stubborn and un courteous parts had conceived against him: Maria writ letter at Sir Toby's great importance;
recompense whereof he hath married her.
w with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
y rather pluck on laughter than revenge;
hat the injuries be justly weigh'd
it have on both sides pass'd.'d.
Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!

Clo. Why, 'some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrown upon them.' I was one, sir, in this interlude; one Sir Topas, sir; but that's all one. 'By the Lord, fool, I am not mad.' But do you remember?
'Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal?
an you smile not, he's gagged:' and thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.
Mal. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you.

[Exit.

Oli. He hath been most notoriously abused.
Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace:
He hath not told us of the captain yet:
When that is known and golden time converts,
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls. Meantime, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence. Cesario, come;
For so you shall be, while you are a man;
But when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress and his fancy's queen.

[Exit all, except Clown.

Clo. [Sings]
When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ho, &c.
'Gainst knaves and thieves men shut their gate,
For the rain, &c.

But when I came, alas! to wife,
With hey, ho, &c.
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain, &c.

But when I came unto my beds,
With hey, ho, &c.
With toss-pots still had drunken heads,
For the rain, &c.

A great while ago the world begun,
With hey, ho, &c.
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day.

[Exit.

SCENE: Sicilia, and Bohemia.

ACT I.

Scene I. Antechamber in Leontes' palace.

Enter CAMILLO and ARCHIDAMUS.

ARCH. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion wherein our services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

CAM. I think, this coming summer, the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

ARCH. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us we will be justified in our loves; for indeed—
CAM. Beseech you,—

ARCH. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say. We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

CAM. You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely.

ARCH. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

CAM. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities and royal necessities made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attended with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seemed to be together, though absent, shoon hands, as over a vast, and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

ARCH. I think there is not in the world either malice or matter to alter it. You have an

THE WINTER'S TALE.

Leoni. We'll part the time between's then; and in that
From gaining say.

Pol. Press me not, beseech you, so;
here is no tongue that moves, none, none i' the world,
so soon as yours could win me: so it should now, Here there necessity in your request, although I were needful I denied it. My affairs to even drag me homeward: which to hinder were in your love a whip to me; my stay
'ou a charge and trouble: to save both,
arewell, our brother.

Leon. Tongue-tied our queen? speak you.

Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace until
'ou had drawn oaths from him not to stay.

You, sir,
charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are sure 30 ill in Bohemia's well; this satisfaction by-gone day proclaimed: say this to him,
it's beat from his best ward.

Leon. Well said, Hermione. Her.
To tell, he longs to see his son, were strong:
but let him say so then, and let him go;
but let him swear so, and he shall not stay,
'lell thwack him hence with disgusts.

Let of your royal presence I'll adventure
the borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
'ou take my lord, I'll give him my com-
'ou let him there a month behind the gest
'rex'd for's parting: yet, good deed, Leontes, love thee not a jar o' the clock behind
What lady-she her lord. You'll stay?

Pol. No, madam.

Her. Nay, but you will?

Pol. I may not, verily.

Her. Verily!
'ou put me off with limber vows; but I,
how though you would seek to unsphere the stars with oaths,
'ould yet say 'Sir, no going.' Verily,
'ou shall not go: a lady's 'Verily' s potent as a lord's. Will you go yet?
'me you to keep me as a prisoner,
lot like a guest; so you shall pay your fees when you depart, and save your thanks. How say you?

My prisoner? or my guest? by your deed
'Verily,'
me of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest, then, madam:
'ou be your prisoner should import offending;
which is for me less easy to commit than you to punish.

Her. Not your gaoler, then, your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you if my lord's tricks and yours when you were boys:
'ou were pretty lوردings then?

Pol. We were, fair queen, wo lads that thought there was no more behind such a day to-norrow as to-day, and to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord
he verier wag o' the two?

Pol. We were as twin'd lambs that did frisk
'the sun,
THE WINTER'S TALE. [Act IV.]

Mam. Ay, my good lord.
Leon. I' fecks! So why, that's my bawcock. What, hast smutch'd thy nose?
They say it is a copy out of mine. Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain:
And yet the steer, the heifer and the calf
Are all call'd neat—Still virgining.
Upon his palm!—How now, you wanton calf!
Art thou my calf?
Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord.
Leon. Thou want'st a rough push and the shoots that I have,
To be full like me: yet they say we are Almost as like as eggs; women say so,
That will say any thing: but were they false
As o'er-dyed blacks, as wind, as waters, false
As dice are to be wish'd by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine, yet were it true
To say this boy were like me. Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye: sweet villain!
My dear'st! my collop! Can thy dam?—may't be?
Affection! thy intention stabs the centre;
Thou dost make possible things not so held,
Communicast with dreams;—how can this be?
With what's unreal thou coactive art,
And fellow'st nothing; then 'tis very credent
Thou mayst co-join with something; and thou dost,
And that beyond commission, and I find it,
And that to the infection of my brains
And hardening of my brows.
Pol. What means Sicilia?
Her. He something seems unsettled.
Pol. How, my lord!
Her. What cheer? how is't with you, best brother?
Her. You look
As if you held a brow of much distraction:
Are you moved, my lord?
Leon. No, in good earnest. How sometimes nature will betray its folly,
Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines
Of my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat, my dagger muzzled,
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous:
How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman. Mine honest friend,
Will you take eggs for money?
Mam. No, my lord, I'll fight.
Leon. You will! why, happy man be'st done! My brother,
Are you so fond of your young prince as we
Do seem to be of ours?
Pol. If at home, sir,
He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter,
Now my sworn friend and then mine enemy,
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all:
He makes a July's day short as December,
And with his varying childness cures in me
Thoughts that would thick my blood.
Leon. So stands this squire
Officed with me: we two will walk, my lord,
And leave you to your graver steps. Hermione,
How thou lovest us, show in our brother's welcome;
Let what is dear in Sicily be cheap;
Next to thyself and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.
Her. If you would seek us,
We are yours if the garden: shall'st attend y' there?
Leon. To your own bents dispose you: you be found,
Be you beneath the sky. [Aside] I am angry now,
Though you perceive me not how I give line.
Go to, go to!
How she holds up the neb, the bill to him!
And arms her with the boldness of a wife
To her allowing husband!
[Exeunt Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.]
Gone already!
Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork one!
Go, play, boy, play: thy mother plays, and I
Play too, but so disgraced a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave: contempt and clamo
Will be my knell. Go, play, boy, play. The have been,
Or I am much deceived, cuckold ere now;
And many a man there is, even at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by the arm
That little thinks she has been sluiced in absence
And his pond fish'd by his next neighbour, by Sir Smile, his neighbour: nay, there's comfort in Whiles other men have gates and gat open'd,
As mine, against their will. Should all despair
That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind
Would hang themselves. Physic for'there none;
It is a bawdy planet, that will strike
Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful think it,
From east, west, north and south: be it conclude:
No barricado for a belly: know't;
It will let in and out the enemy
With bag and baggage: many thousand on's
Have the disease, and feel not. How now, boy?
Mam. I am like you, they say.
Leon. Why, that's some comfort
What, Camillo there?

Leon. At the queen's be't: 'good' should be pertinent; but, so it is, it is not. Was this taken by any understanding plate but thine? Yet, thy conceit is soaking, will draw in more than the common blocks: not noted, is't, but of the finer natures? by some severals head-piece extraordinary? lower messes
'rechance are to this business purblind? say.
Cam. Business, my lord! I think most understand
holemia stays here longer.
Leon. Ha!
Cam. Stays here longer. 230
Leon. Ay, but why?
Cam. To satisfy your highness and the high-treaties
of our most gracious mistress.
Leon. Satisfy! the entreaties of your mistress! satisfy!
at that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo, v ith all the nearest things to my heart, as well ly chamber-councils, wherein, priest-like, thou last cleansed my bosom, I from thee departed by patent reform'd; but we have been ceived in thy integrity, deceived that which seems so.
Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!
Leon. To bide upon't, thou art not honest, or,
thou inclinest that way, thou art a coward, ich boxes honesty behind, restraining om court's required; or else thou must be ounted servant grated in my serious trust and therein negligent; or else a fool hat seest a game played home, the rich stake drawn, nd take it all for jest.
Cam. My gracious lord, may be negligent, foolish and fearful; every one of these no man is free, but that his negligence, his folly, fear, mong the infinite doings of the world, sometime puts forth. In your affairs, my lord, ever I were willful-negligent, was my folly; if industriously play'd the fool, it was my negligence, ot weighing well the end; if ever fearful o do a thing, where I the issue doubted, hereof the execution did cry out 260 against the non-performance, 'twas a fear hich oft infects the wisest: these, my lord, re such allow'd infirmities that honesty never free of. But, beseech your grace, e plainer with me; let me know my trespass y its own visage: if I then deny it, is none of mine.
Leon. Ha' not you seen, Camillo,— at that's past doubt, you have, or your eyeglass thicker than a cuckold's horn,—or heard,— or to a vision so apparent rumour 270 not be mute,—or thought,—for cogitation is out in this man that does not think,— y wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess, e else be impudently negative, have nor eyes nor ears nor thought, then say y wife's a hobby-horse, deserves a name r rank as any flax-wench that puts to Before her troth-plight: say't and justify't.
Cam. I would not be a stander-by to hear My sovereign mistress clouded so, without 280 My present vengeance taken: 'twere my heart, You never spoke what did become you less Than this; which to reiterate were sin As deep as that, though true.
Leon. Is whispering nothing? Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses? Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career Of laughing with a sigh?—a note infallible Of breaking honesty—horsing foot on foot? Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift? Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes Blind with the pin and web but theirs, theirs only, That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing? Why, then the world and all that's in't is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing: Bohemia nothing; My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nothings, If this be nothing.
Cam. Good my lord, be cured Of this diseased opinion, and betimes; For 'tis most dangerous.
Leon. Say it be, 'tis true.
Cam. No, no, my lord.
Leon. It is; you lie, you lie: I say thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee, 300 Pronounce thee a gross lout, a mindless slave, Or else a hovering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both: were my wife's liver Infested as her life, she would not live The running of one glass.
Cam. Who does infect her?
Leon. Why, he that wears her like her medal, hanging
About his neck, Bohemia: who, if I Had servants true about me, that bare eyes To see alike mine honour as their profits, Their own particular thrifts, they would do that Which should undo more doing: ay, and thou, His cup-bearer,—whom I from meaner form Have bench'd and rear'd to worship, who mayst see Plainly as heaven sees earth and earth sees heaven, How I am galled,—mightst bespicce a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink;
Which draught to me were cordial. 320 Cam. Sir, my lord, I could do this, and that with no rash potion, But with a lingering dram that should not work Maliciously like poison: but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress, So sovereignly being honourable. I have loved thee, Leon. Make that thy question, and go rot! Dost think I am so muddy, so unsettled, To appoint myself in this vexation, sully The purity and whiteness of my sheets, Which to preserve is sleep, which being spotted Is goads, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps, Give scandal to the blood o' the prince my son, Who I do think is mine and love as mine, Without ripe moving to't? Would I do this? Could man so brench?
Cam. I must believe you, sir:
I do; and will fetch off Bohemia for't;
Provided that, when he's removed, your highness
Will take again your queen as yours at first,
Even for your son's sake; and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.

Leon. Thou dost advise me
Even so as I mine own course have set down: 340
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.

Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia
And with your queen. I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.

Leon. This is all:
Do't and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou split'st thine own.

Cam. I'll do't, my lord.
Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advised me.

[Exit. 350

Cam. O miserable lady! But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do't
Is the obedience to a master, one
Who in rebellion with himself will have
All that are his so too. To do this deed,
Promotion follows. If I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't; but since
No brass nor stone nor parchment bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. I must 361
Forsake the court: to do't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Re-enter Polixenes.

Pol. This strange: methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?
Good day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir!

Pol. What is the news I the court?

Cam. None rare, my lord.

Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance
As he had lost some province and a region
Loved as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he, 371
Wafting his eyes to the contrary and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me and
So leaves me to consider what is breeding
That changeth thus his manners.

Cam. I dare not know, my lord.

Pol. How! dare not! do not. Do you know, and dare not?

Be intelligent to me: 'tis thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo, 380
Your changed complexions are to me a mirror
Which shows me mine changed too; for I must be A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with't.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper, but I cannot name the disease; and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.

Pol. How! caught of me!
Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I have look'd on thousands, who have sped the better

By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman, thereto
Clerk-like experienced, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle,—I beseech you
If you know aught which does behove my knowledge
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well
I must be answer'd. Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man
Which honour does acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine, that thou declare
What incidency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;
If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you;
Since I am charged in honour and by him
That I think honourable: therefore mark my counsel,
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd as I mean to utter it, or both yourself and me
Cry lost, and so good night!

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I am appointed him to murder you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo?

Cam. By the king.

Pol. For what

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly.

Pol. O, then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly and my name
Be yoked with his that did betray the Best;
Turn then my freshest reputation to
Your furthest may strike the dullest nostril,
Where I arrive, and my approach be shun'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection
That e'er was heard or read!

Cam. Swear his thought over
By each particular star in heaven and
By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon
As or by oath remove or counsel shake
The fabric of his folly, whose foundation
Is piled upon his faith and will continue
The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow
Cam. I know not: but I am sure 'tis safer to Avoid what's grown than question how 'tis born.
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,
That lies enclosed in this trunk which you
Shall bear along impawn'd, away to-night!
Your followers I will whisper to the business,
And will by twos and threes at several posterns Clear them o’ the city. For myself, I'll put My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have utter'd truth: which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer
Than one condemn'd by the king's own mouth thereon
His execution sworn.

Pot. I do believe thee; I saw his heart in his face. Give me thy hand: Be pilot to me and thy places shall still neighbour mine. My ships are ready and my people did expect my hence departure two days ago. This jealousy is for a precious creature: as she's rare, Must it be great, and as his person's mighty, Must it be violent, and as he does conceive he is dishonour'd by a man which ever profess'd to him, why, his revenges must In that be made more bitter. Fear o'er shades me: Good execution be my friend, and comfort The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing Of his ill-tale suspicion! Come, Camillo; I will respect thee as a father if thou bear'st my life off hence: let us avoid. Cam. It is in mine authority to command The keys of all the posterns: please your highness To take the urgent hour. Come, sir, away. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. A room in LEONTES' palace.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, and Ladies. Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me, Tis past enduring.

First Lady. Come, my gracious lord, Shall I be your playfellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

First Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard and speak to me as if I were a baby still. I love you better.

Sec. Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mam. Not for because Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say, Become some women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semicircle, Or a half-moon made with a pen.

Sec. Lady. Who taught you this?

Mam. I learnt it out of women's faces.

Pray now What colour are your eyebrows?

First Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose That has been blue, but not her eyebrows.

First Lady. Hark ye; The queen your mother rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine new prince One of these days; and then you'll wanton with us.

If we would have you.

Sec. Lady. She is spread of late Into a goodly bulk: good time encounter her! So Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come, sir, now I am for you again: pray you, sit by us, And tell's a tale.

Mam. Merry or sad shall 't be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter: I have one Of sprites and goblins.

Her. Let's have that, good sir.
When you have said 'she's goodly,' come betwixt your eyes.
If you can say 'she's honest,' but be't known,
From him that has most cause to grieve it should be,
She's an adulteress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world,
He were as much more villain: you, my lord, 80
Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady,
Polixenes for Leontes: O thou thing! Which I'll not call a creature of thy place,
Lest barbarism, making me the precedent,
Should a like language use to all degrees
And mannerly distinguished leave out Betwixt the prince and beggar: I have said She's an adulteress; I have said with whom:
More, she's a traitor and Camillo is A federary with her, and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself
But with her most vile principal, that she's a bed-swerver, even as bad as those That vulgar give bold'st titles, ay, and privy To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privy to none of this. How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly then to say You did mistake.

Leon. No; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear A school-boy's top. Away with her! to prison! He who shall speak for her is afar off guilty But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are: the want of which vain dew Perchance shall dry your pities: but I have
That honourable grief lodged here which burns Worse than tears drown: beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities Shall best instruct you, measure me; and so
The king's will be performed!

Leon. Shall I be heard,
Her. Who is't that goes with me? Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for you see
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools; There is no cause: when you shall know your mistress
Has deserved prison, then abound in tears
As I come out: this action I now go on
Is for my better grace. Adieu, my lord:
I never wish'd to see you sorry; now
I trust I shall. My women, come; you have leave.

Leon. Go, do our bidding; hence!

_[Exit Queen, guarded; with Ladies._

First Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice
Prove violence; in the which three great one suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

First Lord. For her, my lord,
I dare my life lay down and will do't, sir, 13
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless,
The eyes of heaven and to you; I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep my stables where I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her;
Than when I feel and see her no farther trust her For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh is false, If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace.

First Lord. Good my lord,—

Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves You are abused and by some putter-on 14
That will be'dam'd for't; I would know the villain,
I would land-damn him. Be she honour-flaw'd, I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven;
The second and the third, nine, and some five; If this prove true, they'll pay for't: by mine honour,
I'll geld 'em all; fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs; And had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease; no more.
You smell this business with a sense as cold As is a dead man's nose: but I do see't and feel it As you feel doing thus; and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so,
We need no grave to bury honesty: There's not a grain of it the face to sweeten Of the whole dungi earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit?

First Lord. I had rather you did lack than I,
My lord,
Upon this ground; and more it would content me To have her honour true than your suspicion, 16
Be blamed for't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this, but rather follow Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness Imparts this; which if you, or stupidified Or seeming so in skill, cannot or will not Relish a truth like us, inform yourselves We need no more of your advice: the matter, The loss, the gain, the ordering on't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leon. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wilt bear a fool. Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity,
Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture, That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation But only seeing, all other circumstances Made up to the deed, doth push on this proceeding:
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
For in an act of this importance 'twere
For I am satisfied and need no more

Ant. [Aside] To laughter, as I take it, the good truth were known. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A prison.

Enter Paulina, a Gentleman, and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison, call to him; I him have knowledge who I am. [Exit Gent. Good lady, court in Europe is too good for thee; hast thou then in prison?

Re-enter Gentleman with the Gaoler.

Paul. Now, good sir, you know me, do you not?

Gaol. For a worthy lady id one whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then, conduct me to the queen.

Gaol. I may not, madam: the contrary I have express commandment. Paul. Here's ado, lock up honesty and honour from access of gentle visitors! Is't lawful, pray you, see her women? any of them? Emilia? Gaol. So please you, madam, put apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her. [Exeunt Gentleman and Attendants. Gaol. And, madam, must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be't so, prithee. [Exit Gaoler. ere's such ado to make no stain a stain passes colouring.

Re-enter Gaoler, with Emilia.

Dear gentlewoman,

ow fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as one so great and so forlorn ay hold together: on her griefs and griefs, which never tender lady hath borne greater, is something before her time deliver'd. Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe,usty and like to live: the queen receives such comfort in't; says 'My poor prisoner, am innocent as you.'

Paul. I dare be sworn:

These dangerous unsafe lunes i' the king, be-shrew them!

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office

Becomes a woman best: I'll take' upon me:

If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister

And never to my red-look'd anger be

The trumpet any more. Pray you, Emilia, Commend my best obedience to the queen: If she darest trust me with her little babe, I'll show't the king and undertake to be

Her advocate to the loud'st. We do not know

How he may soften at the sight o' the child: The silence often of pure innocence

Persuades when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam, Your honour and your goodness is so evident That your free undertaking cannot miss A thriving issue: there is no lady living So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship

To visit the next room, I'll presently Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer; Who but to-day hammer'd of this design, But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from't As boldness from my bosom, let't not be doubted I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it!

I'll to the queen: please you, come something nearer.

Gaol. Madam, if't please the queen to send the babe, I know not what I shall incur to pass it, Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir: This child was prisoner to the womb and is By law and process of great nature thence Freed and enfranchised, not a party to The anger of the king nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Gaol. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon mine honour, I Will stand betwixt you and danger. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and Servants.

Leon. Nor night nor day no rest: it is but weakness

To bear the matter thus: mere weakness. If The cause were not in being,—part o' the cause, She the adulteress; for the harlot king Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she I can hook to me: say that she were gone, Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest Might come to me again. Who's there?

First Serv. My lord?

Leon. How does the boy?

First Serv. He took good rest to-night; 'Tis hoped his sickness is discharged.

Leon. To see his nobleness! Conceiving the dishonour of his mother, He straight declined, droop'd, took it deeply, Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on't in himself, Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And downright languish'd. Leave me solely: go, See how he fares. [Exit Serv.] Fie, fie! no thought of him:
The very thought of my revenges that way Recoil upon me: in himself too mighty, 20 And in his parties, his alliance; let him be Until a time may serve: for present vengeance, Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes Laugh at me, make their pastime at my sorrow: They should not laugh if I could reach them, nor Shall she within my power.

Enter Paulina, with a child.

First Lord. You must not enter.
Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me:
Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul, More free than he is jealous.
Ant. That's enough. 30 Sec. Serv. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; commanded None should come at him.
Paul. Not so hot, good sir: I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you, That creep like shadows by him and do sigh At each his needless heaving, such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking: I Do come with words as medicinal as true, Honest as either, to purge him of that humour That presses him from sleep.

Leon. How! Away with that audacious lady! Antigonus, I charged thee that she should not come at me: I knew she would.
Ant. I told her so, my lord, On your displeasure's peril and on mine, She should not visit you.
Paul. What, canst not rule her? 50 Leon. From all dishonesty he can: in this, Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me for committing honour, trust it, He shall not rule me.
Ant. La you now, you hear? When she will take the rein I let her run; But she'll not stumble.
Leon. Good my liege, I come; And, I beseech you, hear me, who profess Myself your loyal servant, your physician, Your most obedient counsellor, yet that dare Less appear so in comforting your evils, Than such as most seem yours: I say, I come From your good queen.
Leon. Good queen! 60 Paul. Good queen, my lord, Good queen; I say good queen; And would by combat make her good, so were I A man, the worst about you.
Leon. Force her hence. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes First hand me: on mine own accord I'll off; But first I'll do my errand. The good queen, For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter; Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing.

[Leaving down the child.

Leon. Out! A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o' doc
And all my intellegencing bawd!
Paul. Not so: 10 I am as ignorant in that as you In no entitling me, and no less honest Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant As this world goes, to pass for honest.
Traitors Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard Thou dost! thou art woman-tired, unroosted By thy dame Partlet here. Take up the bastard Take 't up, I say; give 't to thy crone.
Paul. For ever Unverifiable be thy hands, if thou Takest up the princess by that forced baseless Which he has put upon't!
Leon. He dreads his wife.
Paul. So I would you did; then 't were pa all doubt You 'd call your children yours.
Leon. A nest of traitor. 20 Ant. I am none, by this good light.
Paul. Nor I, nor an But one that's here, and that's himself, for he The sacred honour of himself, his queen's, His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander Whose sting is sharper than the sword's; and will not— For, as the case now stands, it is a curse He cannot be compell'd to—once remove The root of his opinion, which is rotten As ever oak or stone was sound.
Leon. A callat Of boundless tongue, who late hath beat his husband And now baits me! This brat is none of mine; It is the issue of Polixenes:
Hence with it, and together with the dam Commit them to the fire!
Paul. It is yours; 40 And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge, So like you, 'tis the worse. Behold, my lords, Although the print be little, the whole matter And copy of the father, eye, nose, lip, The trick of's frown, his forehead, nay, the valley The pretty dimples of his chin and cheek, his smiles, The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger And, thou, good goddess Nature, which had made it So like to him that got it, if thou hast The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colour No yellow in't, lest she suspect, as he does, Her children not her husband's!
Paul. A gross bag! 50 And, lovel, thou art worthy to be hang'd, That wilt not stay her tongue.
Ant. Hang all the husbands
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself Hardly one subject.
Leon. Once more, take her hence. 60 Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord Can do no more.
Leon. I'll ha' thee burnt.
Paul. I care not: It is an heretic that makes the fire, Not she which burns in't. I'll not call you tyrant But this most cruel usage of your queen,
THE WINTER'S TALE.

Scene I. A sea-port in Sicilia.

Enter Cleomnes and Dion.

Cleo. The climate's delicate, the air most sweet,
Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing
The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the celestial habits,
Methinks I so should term them, and the reverence
Of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice!
How ceremonious, solemn and unearthly
It was? the offering!

Cleo. But of all, the burst
And the ear-deafening voice o'clock the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surprised my sense, so
That I was nothing.

Dion. If the event o'clock the journey
Prove as successful to the queen,—O be't so!—
As it hath been to us rare, pleasant, speedy,
The time is worth the use on't.

Cleo. Great Apollo
Turn all to the best! These proclamations,
So forcing faults upon Hermione,

This female bastard hence and that thou bear it
To some remote and desert place quite out
Of our dominions, and that there thou leave it,
Without more mercy, to its own protection
And favour of the climate. As by strange fortune
It came to us, I do in justice charge thee,
On thy soul's peril and thy body's torture,
That thou commend it strangely to some place
Where chance may nurse or end it. Take it up.

Ant. I swear to do this, though a present death
Had been more merciful. Come on, poor babe:
Some powerful spirit instruct the kites and ravens
To be thy nurses! Wolves and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside have done
Like offices of pity. Sir, be prosperous
In more than this deed does require! And blessing Against this cruelty fight on thy side,
Poor thing, condemn'd to loss!

[Exeunt with the child.

Leon. Another issue,

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please your highness, posts
From those you sent to the oracle are come
An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,
Being well arrived from Delphos, are both landed,
Hasting to the court.

First Lord. So please you, sir, their speed
Hath been beyond account.

Leon. Twenty three days
They have been absent: 'tis good speed; foretells
The great Apollo suddenly will have
The truth of this appear. Prepare you, lords;
Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal lady, for, as she hath
Been publicly accused, so shall she have
A just and open trial. While she lives
My heart will be a burthen to me. Leave me,
And think upon my bidding.

[Exeunt.
I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it
Will clear or end the business: when the oracle,
Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up,
Shall the contents discover, something rare
Even then will rush to knowledge. Go: fresh horses!
And gracious be the issue! [Exeunt.

Scene II. A court of Justice.

Enter Leontes, Lords, and Officers.

Leon. 'This sessions, to our great grief we pronounce,
Even purs'd 'gainst our heart: the party tried
The daughter of a king, our wife, and one
Of us too much belov'd. Let us be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in justice, which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt or the purgation.
Produce the prisoner.
Off. It is his highness' pleasure that the queen
Appear in person here in court. Silence! 10

Enter Hermione guarded; Paulina and Ladies attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.
Off. [Reads] Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused
And arraigned of high treason, in committing Adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia, and Conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of
Our sovereign lord the king, thy royal husband:
The pretence whereof being by circumstances
Partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the Faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel
And aid them, for their better safety, to fly
Away by night.

Her. Since what I am to say must be but that Which contradicts my accusation and
The testimony on my part no other
But what comes from myself, it shall scarce boot me
To say 'not guilty': mine integrity
Being counter'd falsehood, shall, as I express it,
Be so received. But thus: if powers divine
Behold our human actions, as they do,
I doubt not then but innocence shall make False accusation blush and tyranny
Tremble at patience. You, my lord, best know,
Who least will seem to do so, my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy: which is more
Than history can pattern, though devised
And play'd to take spectators. For behold me
A fellow of the royal bed, which owe
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince, here standing 30
To prate and talk for life and honour 'fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it
As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. I appeal
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent I

Have strain'd to appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bound of honour, or in act or will
That way inclining, harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin
Cry fie upon my grave!

Leon. I ne'er heard yet
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did
Than to perform it first.

Her. That's true enough;
Though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.
Leon. You will not own it.

Her. [Sings] More than mistress of Which comes to me in name of fault, I must
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
With whom I am accused, I do confess
I loved him as in honour he required,
With such a kind of love as might become
A lady like me, with a love even such,
So and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done I think had been in Both disobedience and ingratitude
To you and toward your friend, whose love

Even since it could speak, from an infant, free
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes; though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your court, the gods themselves
Wringing no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta'en to do in his absence.
Her. Sir, you speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dread;
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it. As you were past shame,
Those of your fact are so—so past all truth:
Which to deny concerns more than avails; for
Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it,—which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee than it,—so thou
Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats.
The bug which you would fright me with I so
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favor
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence
I am barr'd, like one infectious. My third e
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in it most innocent mouth,
Haled out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaimed a trumpet: with immodest hate
The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs
To women of all fashion; lastly, hurried
Here to this place, 't the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore process
But yet hear this; mistake me not: no life,
I prize it not a straw, but for mine honour,
Ch. I would free, if I shall be condemn'd as surmises, all proofs sleeping else what your jealousies awake, I tell you rigour and not law. Your honours all,
I refer me to the oracle:
lo be my judge!

Lord. This your request together just: therefore bring forth, in Apollo's name, his oracle.

[Exeunt certain Officers.

The Emperor of Russia was my father;
at he were alive, and here beholding daughter's trial! that he did but see flatness of my misery, yet with eyes ity, not revenge!

Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.

You here shall swear upon this sword of
justice,
you, Cleomenes and Dion, have both at Delphos, and from thence brought seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd eat Apollo's priest and that since then have not dared to break the holy seal read the secrets in't.

Dion. All this we swear.

Break up the seals and read.

[Reads] Hermione is chaste; Polixenes is innocent; Camillo a true subject; Leontes a is tyrant; his innocent babe truly begotten;
he king shall live without an heir, if that is lost be not found.

Now bless be the great Apollo!

Praised!

Hast thou read truth?

Ay, my lord; even so is here set down.

There is no truth at all i' the oracle:
ssions shall proceed: this is mere falsehood.

Enter Servant.

My lord the king, the king!

What is the business?

O sir, I shall be hated to report it!
ince your son, with mere conceit and fear queen's speed, is gone.

How! gone!

Is dead.

Apollo's angry; and the heavens themelves like at my injustice. [Hermione swoons.]
now there!

This news is mortal to the queen: look own what death is doing.

Take her hence: 150
art is but o'ercharged; she will recover:
too much believed mine own suspicion:
you, tenderly apply to her
edies for life.

Paulina and Ladies, with Hermione.

Apollo, pardon
unprofaneness against thine oracle!
ce me to Polixenes,
oo my queen, recall the good Camillo,
proclaim a man of truth, of mercy;
ing transported by my jealousies ky thoughts and to revenge, I chose 160

Camillo for the minister to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command, though I with death and with Reward did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing 't and being done: he, most humane
And fill'd with honour, to my kingly guest
Uncleasp'd my practice, quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great, and to the hazard
Of all incertainties himself commended,

No richer than his honour: how he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker?

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while!

O, cut my face, lest my heart, cranking it,
Break too!

First Lord. What fit is this, good lady?

Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast
for me?

In leads or oils? what old or newer torture
Must I receive, whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies.

Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine, O, think what they have done
And then run mad indeed, stark mad! for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it,
That thou betray'dst Polixenes, 'twas nothing;
That did but show thee, of a fool, inconstant
And damnable ingrateful: nor was't much,
Thou would'st have poison'd good Camillo's honour,
To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The casting forth to crow's thy baby-daughter
To be or none or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire ere done't:
Nor is't direfully laid to thee, the death
Of the young prince, whose honourable thoughts,
Thoughts high for one so tender, cleft the heart
That could conceive a gross and foolish sire
Blemish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no,
Laid-to thy answer: but the last,—O lords, 200
When I have said, cry 'woe'—the queen, the
queen,
The sweet'st, dear'st creature's dead, and vencence for't

Not drop'd down yet.

First Lord. The higher powers forbid!

Paul. I say she's dead; I'll swear't. If word nor oath
Prevail not, go and see: if you can bring
Thin'st or lustre in her lip, her eye,
Heat outwardly or breath within, I'll serve you
As I would do the gods. But, O thou tyrant!
Do not repent these things, for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand knees
Laid-to thy answer: but the last,—O lords, 200
When I have said, cry 'woe'—the queen, the
queen,
The sweet'st, dear'st creature's dead, and ven-
cence for't

Not drop'd down yet.

I the boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for't: All faults I make, when I shall come to know them, I do repent. Alas! I have show'd too much 221 The rashness of a woman: he is touch'd To the noble heart. What's gone and what's past help Should be past grief: do not receive affliction At my petition; I beseech you, rather Let me be punish'd, that have have missed you Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege, Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman: The love I bore your queen—lo, fool again!— I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children; I'll not remember you of my own lord, 231 Who is lost too: take your patience to you, And I'll say nothing.

Leon. Thou didst speak but well When most the truth; which I receive much better Than to be pitied of thee. Prithie, bring me To the dead bodies of my queen and son: One grave shall be for both: upon them shall The causes of their death appear, untill Our shame perpetual. Once a day I'll visit The chapel where they lie, and tears shed there Shall be my recreation: so long as nature 241 Will bear up with this exercise, so long I daily vow to use it. Come and lead me Unto these sorrows. [Exeunt.

Scene III. Bohemia. A desert country near the sea.

Enter Antigonus with a Child, and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd upon The deserts of Bohemia?

Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly And threaten present blusters. In my conscience, The heavens with that we have in hand are angry And frown upon's.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done! Go, get aboard: Look to thy bark: I'll not be long before I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste, and go not 10 Too far: I the land: 'tis like to be loud weather; Besides, this place is famous for the creatures Of prey that keep upon't.

Ant. Go thou away: I'll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart To be so rid o' the business. [Exit. Ant. Come, poor babe: I have heard, but not believed, the spirits o' the dead May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother Appeard to me last night, for ne'er was dream So like a waking. To me comes a creature, Sometimes her head on one side, some another; I never saw a vessel of like sorrow, 21 So fill'd and so becoming: in pure white robes, Like very sanctity, she did approach My window where I lay: thrice bow'd before me, And gasping to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon Did this break from her: 'Good Antigonus, Since fate, against thy better disposition, Hath made thy person for the thrower-out Of thy poor babe, according to thine oath, Places remote enough are in Bohemia.

There weep and leave it crying; and, for the Is counted lost for ever, Perdita, I prithee, call't. For this ungentle business Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see Thy wife Paulina more.' And so, with shri The melted into air. Affrighted much, I did in time collect myself and thought This was so and no slumber. Dreams are Yet for this once, yea, superstitiously, I will be squared by this. I do believe Hermione hath suffer'd death, and that Apollo would, this being indeed the issue Of King Polixenes, it should here be laid, Either for life or death, upon the earth Of its right father. Blossom, speed thee well! There lie, and there thy character: there! Which may, if fortune please, both breed pretty, And will rest thine. The storm begins: wretch, That for thy mother's fault art thus exposed To loss and what may follow! Weep I can But my heart bleeds; and most accursed am To be by oath enjoin'd to this. Farewell! The day frowns more and more: thou'rt li

Enter a Shepherd.

Skep. I would there were no age be sixteen and three-and-twenty, or that youth sleep out the rest; for there is nothing between but getting wenches with child, wailing the ancientry, stealing, fighting—Harr! now! Would any but these boiled be nineteen and two-and-twenty hunt this well They have scared away two of my best sheep which I fear the wolf will sooner find the master: if any where I have them, 'tis by the side, browsing of ivy. Good luck, an't will! what have we here? Mercy on's, a boy or a very pretty barn! A boy or a very pretty one, sure, 'scape: though I am not bookish, yet I can waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Thine have been some stare-work, some trunk-work, behind-door-work: they were warmer the this than the poor thing is here. I'll take for pity: yet I'll dally till my son come; he loosed but even now. Whos, ho, ho! Enter Clown.

Clo. Hilloa, loa!

Skep. What, art so nerf? If thou't thing to talk on when thou art dead and a come lither. What ailest thou, man? Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea by land! but I am not to say it is a sea, for now the sky: betwixt the firmament and cannot thrust a bodkin's point.

Skep. Why, boy, how is it? Clo. I would you did but see how it doth how it rages, how it takes up the shore that's not to the point. O, the most pit

ACT III. SCENE III.

Enter the Chorus.

ne. I, that please some, try all, both joy and terror, od and bad, that makes and unfolds error, take upon me, in the name of Time, e my wings. Impute it not a crime to my swift passage, that I slide sixteen years and leave the growth untried it wide gap, since it is in my power throw law and in one self-born hour ant and orwhelm custom. Let me pass name I am, erc ancient's order was 10 at is now received: I witness to

The times that brought them in; so shall I do To the freshest things now reigning and make stale

The glistening of this present, as my tale Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing, I turn my glass and give my scene such growing As you had slept between: Leontes leaving, The effects of his fond jealousies so grieving That he shuts up himself, imagine me, Gentle spectators, that I now may be In fair Bohemia; and remember well, I mentioned a son 't the king's, which Florizel I now name to you; and with speed so pace To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace Equal with wondering: what of her ensues I list not prophesy; but let Time's news Be known when 'tis brought forth. A shepherd's daughter,

And what to her adheres, which follows after, Is the argument of Time. Of this allow, If ever you have spent time worse ere now; 30 If never, yet that Time himself doth say He wishes earnestly you never may.

SCENE II. Bohemia. The palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pel. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness denying thee any thing; a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years since I saw my country: though I have for the most part been aired abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me; to whose feeling sorrows I might be some ally, or I o'erween to think so, which is another spur to my departure.

Pel. As thou lovest me, Camillo, wipe out the rest of thy services by leaving me now: the need I have of thee thine own goodness hath made; better not to have had thee than thus to want thee: thou, having made me businesses which none without thee can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself or take away with the very services thou hast done; which if I have not enough considered, as too much I cannot, to be more thankful to thee shall be my study, and my profit therein the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country, Sicilia, prithee speak no more; whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou callest him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen and children are even now to be afresh lamented. Say to me, when sawest thou the Prince Florizel, my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince. What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown: but I have missing noted, he is of late much retired from court and is less frequent to his princely exercises than formerly he hath appeared.

Pel. I have considered so much, Camillo, and with some care; so far that I have eyes under my service which look upon his removements; from whom I have this intelligence, that he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more than can be thought to begin from such a cottage. 50

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence; but, I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place; where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Prithhee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo! We must disguise ourselves. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. A road near the Shepherd's cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer,
With heigh! the doxy over the dale,
Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale,
The white sheet bleaching on the hedge,
With heigh! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!
Doth set my pugging tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.
The lark, that tirra-lira chants,
With heigh! with heigh! the thrush and the jay,
Are summer songs for me and my aunts,
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served Prince Florizel and in my time wore three-pile; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear?
The pale moon shines by night:
And when I wander here and there,
I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sow-skin budget,
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles. With die and drab I purchased this caparison, and my revenue is the silly cheat. Gallows and knock are too powerful on the highway: beating and hanging are terrors to me: for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it. A prize I a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see: every 'lven wether tods;
every tod yields pound and odd shilling; fifteen hundred shorn, what comes the wool to?

Aut. [Aside] If the springie hold, the cock's mine.

Clo. I cannot do't without counters. Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? Three pound of sugar, five pound of rants, rice,—what will this sister of mine do for rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made four and twenty nosegays for the shearsers, the man-song-men all, and very good ones; but are most of them means and bases; but one pair amongst them, and he sings psalms to his pipes. I must have saffron to colour the wares; mace; dates,—none, that's out of my nutmegs, seven; a race or two of ginger, but I may beg: four pound of prunes, and as much as raisins o' the sun.

Aut. O that ever I was born!

[Groveling on the ground.

Clo. I the name of me—

Aut. O, help me, help me! pluck but off the rage; and then, death, death!

Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of rags to lay on thee, rather than have these of tears.

Aut. O sir, the loathsomeness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beans may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am robbed, sir, and beaten: my coat and apparel tal'en from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horseman, or a footman?

Aut. A footman, sweet sir, a footman.

Clo. Indeed, he should be a footman by garments he has left with thee: if this be a honest man's coat, it hath seen very hot service. I do my hand, I'll help thee: come, lend me hand.

Aut. O, good sir, tenderly, O!

Aut. How now! canst stand?

Aut. [Picking his pocket] Softly, dear good sir, softly. You ha' done me a charitable office.

Clo. Do'st lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Aut. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech sir: I have a kinsman not past three quarte a mile hence, unto whom I was going; I have there money, or any thing I want: offer no money, I pray you; that kills my heart.

Clo. What manner of fellow was he robbed you?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known about with troll-my-dames: I knew him on servant of the prince: I cannot tell, good sir; which of his virtues it was, but he was certified whipped out of the court.

Clo. His vices, you would say; there's virtue whipped out of the court: they cherish to make it stay there; and yet it will no more abide.

Aut. Vices, I would say, sir. I know this well: he hath been since an ape-bearer; the process-server, a bailiff; then he compassed moon; the Prodigal Son, and married a lady's wife within a mile where my land lies; and, having flown over many knavish fissions, he settled only in rogue: some call Autolycus,
THE WINTER'S TALE.

Scene IV. The Shepherd's cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

These your unusual weeds to each part of you: live a life; no shepherdess, but Flora in April's front. This your sheep-shearing a meeting of the petty gods,

You the queen on.

Sir, my gracious lord, side at your extremities it not becomes me:ardon, that I name them! Your high self, gracious mark o' the land, you have obscured a swain's wearing, and me, poor lowly maid, goddess-like prank'd up: but that our beasts every mess have folly and the feeders it with a custom, I should blush you so attired, sworn, I think,

Myself a glass.

I bless the time my good falcon made her flight across another's ground.

Now Jove afford you cause! the difference forges dread: your greatness not been used to fear. Even now I tremble ink your father, by some accident, pass this way as you did: O, the Fates! 20 would he look, to see his work so noble bound up? What would he say? Or how I, in these my borrow'd flauts, behold sternness of his presence?

Apprehend but jollity. The gods themselves, linging their deities to love, have taken lovers of beasts upon them: Jupiter a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune, and bleated; and the fire-robed god, Apollo, a poor humble swain, seen now. Their transformations never for a piece of beauty rarer,
Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind
Our rustic garden's barren; and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden,
Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said
There is an art which in their piedness shares
With great creating nature.

Pol. Say there be;
Yet nature is made better by no mean
But nature makes that mean; so, over that art go
Which you say adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry
A gentler scion to the wildest stock,
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bud of nobler race: this is an art
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gillyvors,
And do not call them bastards.

Per. I'll not put
The dibble in earth to set one slip of them; 100
No more than were I painted I would wish
This youth should say 'twere well and only therefore
Desire to breed by me. Here's flowers for you;
Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram;
The marigold, that goes to bed wi' the sun
And with him rises weeping: these are flowers
Of middle summer, and I think they are given
To mark of middle age. You're very welcome.

Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your flock,
And only live by gazing.

Per. Out, alas! You'll be so lean, that blasts of January Would blow you through and through. Now, my fair'st friend,
I would I had some flowers o' the spring that might
Become your time of day; and yours, and yours,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing: O Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that frighted thou let's fall
From Dis's waggon! daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violet's dim,
But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes
Or Cytherea's breath; pale primroses,
That die unmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phoebus in his strength—a malady
Most incident to maids; bold oxlips and
The crown imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one! O, these I lack,
To make you garlands of, and my sweet friend,
To strew him o'er and o'er!

Flo. What, like a corse?

Per. No, like a bank for love to lie and play on;
Not like a corse; or if, not to be buried, 131
But quick and in mine arms. Come, take your flowers:
Methinks I play as I have seen them do
In Whitsun pasturals: sure this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do
Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so, so give alms,
Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too: when you do dance, I wish
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so,
And own no other function; each your doing
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present do
That all your acts are queenly.

O Dories, Your praises are too large: but that you your
And the true blood which peepeth fairly through Do plainly give you out an unstein'd shepherd
With wisdom I might fear, Dories,
You woot me the false way.

I think you have
As little skill to fear as I have purpose
To put you to't. But come; our dance, I pr'y
Your hand, my Perdita; we turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. I'll swear for'em.

Flo. This is the prettiest low-born lass
I ever
Ran on the green-sward: nothing she doe seems
But smacks of something greater than herself
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her someth
That makes her blood look out: good sooth, s
The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike
Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress; ma

To mend her kissing with!

Mop. Now, in good tim
Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon manners.

Come, strike up!

[Music. Here a dance of Shepherds

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what fair saw
this
Which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Dories; and b
himself
To have a worthy feeding: but I have it
Upon his own report and I believe it;
He looks like sooth. He says he loves daughter:
I think so too; for never gazed the moon
Upon the water as he'll stand and read
As 'twere my daughter's eyes: and, to be pl
I think there is not half a kiss to choose
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances featly.
Shep. So she does any thing; though port it,
That should be silent: if young Dories
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter Servant.

Serv. O master, if you did but hear the lar at the door, you would never dance after a tabor and pipe; no, the bagpipe could move you: he sings several tunes faster you'll tell money: he utters them as he had ballads and all men's ears grew to his tunes.
201

He hath songs for man or woman, or for anything indeed and sung lamentably. 390

He has the prettiest love-songs for maids; though bawdy, which is strange; with such are burthen of dildos and fadings, 'jump and thump her,' and where some stretched rascal would, as it were, mean mischief break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the answer 'Whoo, do me no harm, good sir; put him off, slights him, with 'Whoo, o no harm, good man.' 391

This is a brave fellow.

Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?

He hath ribbons of all the colours rainbow; points more than all the lawyers in man can learnedly handle, though they come a by the gross: inkles, caddisses, cambrics, why, he sing's them over as they were gods addresses; you would think a smack were a angel, he so chant's to the sleeve-hand and 'ork about the square on't.

Prithie bring him in; and let him ap- singprus black as e'er was crow; ves as sweet as damask roses; sks for faces and for noses; ge bracelet, necklace amber, lume for a lady's chamber; den quiffs and stomachers, my ladies to give their dears; and poking-sticks of steel, at maids lack from head to heel: be buy of me, come; come buy, come buy; lads, or else your lasses cry; be buy.

If I were not in love with Mopses, thou art no take money of me; but being end as I am, it will also be the bondage of ribbons and gloves.

I was promised them against the feast; sy come not too late now.

He hath promised you more than that, be liars.

He hath paid you all he promised you; he has paid you more, which will shame give him again.

Is there no manners left among maids? ey wear their placquets where they should their faces? Is there not milking-time, you are going to bed, or kiln-hole, to of these secrets, but you must be tittle: before all our guests! 'tis well they are: clamour your tongues, and not a lore.

I have done. Come, you promised me my lace and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee how I was cozened by the way and lost all my money?

Ant. And indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad; therefore it behoves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thon, man, thou shalt lose no- thing here.

Ant. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge. 361

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

Mop. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print o' life, for then we are sure they are true.

Ant. Here's one to a very doleful tune, how a user's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a burthen and how she longed to eat adders' heads and toads carbonadoced.

Mop. Is it true, think you?

Ant. Very true, and but a month old. 270

Dor. Bless me from marrying a user! 363

Ant. Here's the midwife's name to't, one Mistress Tale-porter, and five or six honest wives that were present. Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mop. Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: and let's first see moe ballads: we'll buy the other things anon.

Ant. Here's another ballad of a fish, that appeared upon the coast on Wednesday the fourthscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought she was a woman and was turned into a cold fish for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: the ballad is very pitiful and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

Ant. Five justices' hands at it, and witnesses more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: another. 290

Ant. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let's have some merry ones.

Ant. Why, this is a passing merry one and goes to the tune of 'Two maids wooing a man': there's scarce a maid westward but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it: if thou'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on 't a month ago. 390

Ant. I can bear my part; you must know 'tis my occupation; have at it with you.

SONG.

A. Get you hence, for I must go
Where it fits not you to know.

D. Whither? M. O, whither? D. Whither?

M. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.

D. Me too, let me go thither.

M. Or thou goest to the grange or mill.

D. If to either, thou dost ill. 190

D. Thou hast sworn my love to be.

M. Thou hast sworn it more to me:
Then whither goest? say, whither?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by our- selves: my father and the gentlemen are in sad talk, and we'll not trouble them. Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenches, I'll buy for you both. Pedlar, let's have the first choice. Follow me, girls. [Exit with Dorcas and Mopsea.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

_Aut._ And you shall pay well for 'em.

Foll. singing.

Will you buy any tape,
Or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my dear-a?
Any silk, any thread,
Any toys for your head,
Of the new'st and finest, finest wear-a?
Come to the pedlar;
Money 's a medlar,
That doth utter all men's ware-a. [Exit.]

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair, they call themselves Saltiers, and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in 't; but they themselves are o' the mind, if it be not too rough for some that know little but bowling, it will please plentifully.

_Shep._ Away! we'll none on't: here has been too much homely foolery already. I know, sir, we weary you.

_Pol._ You weary those that refresh us: pray, let 's see these four threes of herdsmen.

_Serv._ One of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king: and not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squir.

_Shep._ Leave your prating: since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

_Serv._ Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.]

Here a dance of twelve Satyrs.

_Pol._ O, father, you'll know more of that hereafter.

[To Cam.] Is it not too far gone? 'Tis time to part them.

_He's simple and tells much._ [To Flor._] How now, fair shepherd! Your heart is full of something that does take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young And handed love as you do, I was wont To load my she with knacks: I would have ransom'd

_The pedlar's silken treasury and have pour'd it To her acceptance; you have let him go And nothing parted with him. If your lass Interpretation should abuse and call this Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited For a reply, at least if you make a care Of happy holding her.

_Flo._ Old sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are: The gifts she looks from me are pack'd and lock'd Up in my heart; which I have given already; But not deliver'd. O, hear me breathe my life Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem, Hath sometime loved! I take thy hand, this hand, As soft as dove's down and as white as't.

_Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fam'd snow that's bolted By the northern blasts twice o'er._

_Pol._ What follows this?

_How pretty the young swain seems to wash The hand was fair before! I have put you off to your profession; let me hear What you profess._

_Flo._ Do, and be witness to it._

_Pol._ And this my neighbour too?

_Flo._ And he, and Than he, and men, the earth, the heavens, and That, were I crown'd! the most imperial mon Thereof most worthy, were I the fairest you That ever made eye swerve, had force and k

ledge

More than was ever man's, I would not prize Without her love; for her employ them all; Command them and condemn them to her service, Or to their own perdition.

_Pol._ Fairly offer'd.

_Cam._ This shows a sound affection.

_Shep._ But, my daughter, Say you the like to him?

_Per._ I cannot speak So well, nothing so well: no, nor mean better. The pattern of mine own thoughts I cut o' the purity of his.

_Shep._ Take hands, a bargain! And, friends unknown, you shall bear wi' to:

_I give my daughter to him, and will make Her portion equal his._

_Flo._ O, that must be The virtue of your daughter: one being do I shall have more than you can dream of ye Enough then for your wonder. But, come, we Contract us 'fore these witnesses.

_Shep._ Come, your And, daughter, yours.

_Pol._ Soft, swain, awhile, beseech Have you a father?

_Flo._ I have: but what of him?

_Pol._ Knows he of this?

_Flo._ He neither does nor. _Methinks a father Is at the capital of his son a guest That best becomes the table. Pray you once Is not your father grown incapable Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid With age and altering rheums? can he hear? Know man from man? dispute his own estate Lies he not bed-rid? and again does nothing But what he did being childish?

_Flo._ No, good sir He has his health and ampler strength indeed Than most have of his age.

_Pol._ By my white beard You offer him, if this be so, a wrong Something unfilial: reason my son Should choose himself a wife, but as good The father, all whose joy is nothing else But fair posterity, should hold some counsel In such a business.

_Flo._ I yield all this; But for some other reasons, my dear sir, To which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint My father of this business.

_Pol._ Let him know't.

_Flo._ He shall not.

_Pol._ Prithee, let him.

_Flo._ No, he must
THE WINTER'S TALE.

Let him, my son; he shall not need to grieve
Of thy choosing. Come, come, he must not.

Mark your divorce, young sir,
[Discovering himself,]
A son I dare not call; thou art too base
Acknowledged: thou a scelepe's heir, this
This affects my sheep-hook! Thou old traitor, sorry that by hanging thee I cannot
I do not purpose it; and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear:
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him.

I think, Camillo?

Even he, my lord.
How often have I told you 'twould be Thus! How oft have, my dignity would last
But till were known
It cannot fail but by
The violation of my faith; and then
Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together
And mar the seeds within! Lift up thy looks:
From my succession wipe me, father; I Am heir to my affection.

Be advised.
I am, and by my fancy: if my reason
Will thereto be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleased with madness,
Do bid it welcome.

This is desperate, sir.
So call it: if it does fulfil my vow;
I must needs think it honesty. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may
Be there gleen'd, for all the sun sees or
The close earth worms or the profound sea hides
In unknown fathom, will I break my oath
To this my fair beloved: therefore, I pray you,
As you have ever been my father's honour'd friend,
When he shall miss me,—as, in faith, I mean not
To see him any more,—cast your good counsels
Upon his passion: let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know
And so deliver, I am put to sea
With her whom here I cannot hold on shore;
And most opportune to our need I have
A vessel rides fast by, but not prepared
For this design. What course I mean to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.
O my lord!
I would your spirit were easier for advice,
Or stronger for your need.

Hark, Perdita [Drawing her aside.
I'll hear you by and by.

He's irremovable,
Resolved for flight. Now were I happy, if
His going I could frame to serve my turn,
Save him from danger, do him love and honour,
Purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia;
And that unhappy king, my master, whom
I so much thirst to see.

Now, good Camillo;
I am so fraught with curious business that
I leave out ceremony.

Sir, I think
You have heard of my poor services, 'tis the love
That I have borne your father?

Very nobly
Have you deserved: it is my father's music
To speak your deeds, not little of his care
To have them recompensed as thought on.

Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the king
And through him what is nearest to him, which is
Your gracious self, embrace but my direction:
If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration, on mine honour,
I'll point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress, from the whom, I see,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by— 540
As heavens forefend!—your ruin; marry her,
And, with my best endeavours in your absence,
Your discontenting father strive to qualify
And bring him up to liking.
Flo. How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call thee something more than man
And after that trust to thee.
Cam. Have you thought on
A place wheroeto you'll go?
Flo. Not any yet;
But as the unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do, so we profess
550
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance and flies
Of every wind that blows.
Cam. Then list to me:
This follows, if you will not change your purpose
But undergo this flight, make for Sicilia,
And there present yourself and your fair princess,
For so I see she must be, 'fore Leontes:
She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Methinks I see
Leontes opening his free arms and weeping
His welcomes forth; asks thee the son forgiveness,
As 'twere I the father's person; kisses the hands
Of your fresh princess; o'er and o'er divides him
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness; the one
He chides to hell and bids the other grow
Faster than thought or time.
Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my visitation shall I
Hold up before him?
Cam. Sent by the king your father
To greet him and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you as from your father shall deliver,
570 Things known betwixt us three, I'll write you
down:
The which shall point you forth at every sitting
What you must say; that he shall not perceive
But that you have your father's bosom there
And speak his very heart.
Flo. I am bound to you:
There is some sap in this:
Cam. A cause more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores, most certain
To miseries enough; no hope to help you,
But as you shake off one to take another; 580
Nothing so certain as your anchors, who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you'll be loath to be: besides you know
Prosperity's the very bond of love,
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affliction alters.
Per. One of these is true:—
I think affliction may subdue the cheek,
But not take in the mind.
Cam. Yea, say you so?
There shall not at your father's house these seven Years
Be born another such.
Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding as 45° 5°
The rear our birth.
Cam. I cannot say 'tis
She lacks instructions, for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.
Per. Your pardon, sir; for this
I'll blush you thanks.
Flo. My prettiest Perdita!
But O, the thorns we stand upon! Camillo,
Preserver of my father, now of me,
The medicine of our house, how shall we do?
We are not furnish'd like Bohemia's son,
Nor shall appear in Sicilia.
Cam. My lord,
Fear none of this: I think you know my fort
Do all lie there: it shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed as if
The scene you play were mine. For instance,
That you may know you shall not want, one w

Aut. Ha, ha! what a fool Honesty is!

these things, thou must think there's

Florizel and Autolycus exchange garments.

Clo. See, see; what a man you are now!
There is no other way but to tell the king she's a changeling and none of your flesh and blood.
Shep. Nay, but hear me.
Clo. Nay, but hear me.
Shep. Go to, then.
Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king;
and so your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her, those secret things, all but what she has with her: this being done, let the law go whistle:
I warrant you.
Shep. I will tell the king all, every word,
vea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his father nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law. 711
Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the farthest off you could have been to him and then your blood had been the dearer by I know how much an ounce.
Aut. [Aside] Very wisely, puppies!
Shep. Well, let us to the king; there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard.
Aut. [Aside] I know not what impediment
this complaint may be to the flight of my master.
Clo. Pray heartily be he at palace.
Aut. [Aside] Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance: let me rocket up my pedlar's excrement. [Takes off his false beard.] How now, rustics! whither are you bound?
Shep. To the palace, an it like your worship.
Aut. Your affairs there, what, with whom, the condition of that fardel, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.
Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.
Aut. A lie; you are rough and hairy. Let me have no lying: it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie: but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel; therefore they do not give us the lie.
Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.
Shep. Are you a courtier, an't like you, sir?
Aut. Whether it like me or no, I am a courtier. Seest thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings? hath not my gait in it the measure of the court? receives not thy nose court-odour from me? reflect: I not on thy base-ness court-contempt? Thinkkest thou, for that I insinuate, or f to thee from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier cap-a-pe; and one that will either push on or pluck back thy business there: whereupon I command thee to open thy affair.
Shep. My business, sir, is to the king.
Aut. What advocate hast thou to him?
Shep. I know not, an't like you.
Clo. Advocate's the court-word for a pleasant: say you have none.
Shep. None, sir; I have no pheasant, cock nor hen. 771
Aut. How blessed are we that are not simple men!
Yet nature might have made me as these are, therefore I will not disdain.

Clo. This cannot be but a great courtier.

Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know by the picking on's teeth.

Aut. The fardel there? what's 't the fardel?
Wherefore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lies such secrets in this fardel and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why, sir?

Aut. The king is not at the palace; he is gone aboard a new ship to purge melancholy and air himself; for, if thou best cap of things serious, thou must know the king is full of grief.

Shep. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Aut. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly: the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy and vengeance bitter; but those that are germane to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman: which though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whirling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say he shall be stoned; but that death is too soft for him, say I: draw our throne into a sheep-cote! all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man e'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?
He's has a son, who shall be flayed alive; then 'nointed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; then stand till he be three quarters and a dram dead; then recovered again with aqua-vitae or some other hot infusion; then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smiled at, their offences being so capital? Tell me, for you seem to be honest plain men, what you have to the king: being something gently considered, I'll bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs: and if it be in man besides the king to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to be of great authority: close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold: show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado. Remember 'stoned,' and 'flayed alive.'

Shep. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more and leave this young man in pawn till I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Shep. Ay, sir.

Aut. Well, give me the moiety. Are ye party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir: but though my case a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out.

Aut. O, that's the case of the shepherd's hang him, he'll be made an example.

Clo. Comfort, good comfort! We must to king and show our strange sights: he must keep 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as old man does when the business is performed and remain, as he says, your pawn till I brought you.

Aut. I will trust you. Walk before to the sea-side; go on the right hand: I will look upon the hedge and follow you.

Clo. We are blest in this man, as I may even blest myself.

Shep. Let's before as he bids us: he was vided to do us good.

[Exeunt Shepherd and Clo.]

Aut. If I had a mind to be honest, I see a tune would not suffer me: she drops bottle to my mouth. I am courted now with a dainty, good and a means to do the prince master good; which who knows how that turn back to my advancement? I will bring two moles, these blind ones, aboard him: think it fit to shore them again and that the plain they have to the king concerns him not; let him call me rogue for being so far off for I am proof against that title and what she else belongs to. 'T om him I will present if there may be matter in it.

ACT V.

SCENE I. A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paul and Servants.

Clo. Sir, you have done enough, and perform'd
A saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make
Which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid off.
More penitence than done trespass: at the last
Do as the heavens have done, forget your ev'
With them forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember her and her virtues, I cannot forget
My blemishes in them, and so still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much
That heas it hath made my kingdom and Destroy'd the sweet'st companion that e'er
Bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, too true, my lord.
If, one by one, you wedded all the world,
Or from the all that are took something good
To make a perfect woman, she you kill'd
Would be unparalleled.

Leon. I think so. Kill'd I
She kill'd! I did so: but thou strikst me
Sorely, to say I did; it is as bitter
Upon thy tongue as in my thought: now,
Say so but seldom.

Clo. Not at all, good lady:
THE WINTER’S TALE.

Cleo. You tempt him over-much.
Paul. Unless another,

As like Hermione as is her picture,
Affront his eye.
Cleo. Good madam,—
Paul. I have done.

Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will,—give me the office
To choose you a queen: she shall not be so young
As was your former; but she shall be such
As, walk’d your first queen’s ghost, it should take joy
To see her in your arms.

Leon. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry till thou bid’st us.
Paul. That
Shall be when your first queen’s again in breath;
Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself Prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, she
The fairest I have yet beheld, desires access
To your high presence.

Leon. What with him? he comes not
Like to his father’s greatness: his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us
’Tis not a visitation framed, but forced
By need and accident. What train?

Gent. But few,
And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him?

Gent. Ay, the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
That e’er the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione,
As every present time doth boast itself
Above a better gone, so must thy grave
Give way to what’s seen now! Sir, you yourself
Have said and writ so, but your writing now
Is colder than that theme, ’She had not been, too
Nor was not to be equal’d’;—thus your verse
Flow’d with her beauty once: ’tis shrewdly ebb’d,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam:
The one I have almost forgot,—your pardon,—
The other, when she has obtain’d your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else, make proselytes
Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How! not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes;
Yourself, assisted with your honour’d friends,
Bring them to our embracement. Still, ’tis strange [Exeunt Cleomenes and others.
He thus should seal upon us.

Paul. Had our prince,
Jewel of children, seen this hour, he had pair’d
Well with this lord: there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. Prifthee, no more; cease; thou know’st
He dies to me again when talk’d of: sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that which may Unfurnish me of reason. They are come.

Re-enter Clotenemes and others, with Florizel and Perdita.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince;
For she did print your royal father off,
Conceiving you: were I but twenty one,
Your father’s image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him, and speak of something wildly
By us perform’d before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess—godliness!—O, alas! 131
I lost a couple, that ’twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood begetting wonder as
You, gracious cousin, do: and then I lost—
All mine own folly—the society,
Amity too, of your brave father, whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
On more to look on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch’d Sicilia and from him
Give you all greetings that a king, at friend, 140
Can send his brother: and, but infirmity
Which waits upon worn times hath something seized
His wish’d ability, he had himself
The lands and waters ’twixt your throne and his Measured to look upon you; whom he loves—
He bade me say so—more than all the sceptres
And those that bear them living.

Leon. O my brother,
Good gentleman! the wrongs I have done thee
stir
A fresh within me, and these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters 150
Of my behind-hand slackness. Welcome hither,
As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too
Exposed this paragon to the fearful usage,
At least, as gentle, of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man not worth her pains, much less
The adventure of her person?

Flo. Good my lord,
She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smalus,
That noble honour’d lord, is fear’d and loved?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim’d his, parting with her: thence,
A prosperous south-wind friendly, we have cross’d,
To execute the charge my father gave me
For visiting your highness: my best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss’d;
Who for Bohemia bend, to signify
Not only my success in Libya, sir,
But my arrival and my wife’s in safety
Here where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air whilst you
Do climate here! You have a holy father, 170
A graceful gentleman: against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin:
For which the heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father’s blest,
As he from heaven merits it, with you
Worthy his goodness: What might I have been,
Might I a son and daughter now have look’d on Such goodly things as you!

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great Bohemia greets you from himself by me;
Desires you to attach his son, who has—
His dignity and duty both cast off—
Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with
A shepherd’s daughter.

Lord. Here in your city; I now came from
him:
I speak amazedly; and it becomes
My marvell and my message. To your court
While he was hastening, in the chase, it seem’d
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady and
Her brother, having both their country quitte
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray’d me
Whose honour and whose honesty till now
Endured all weathers.

Lord. Lay’s so to his charge:
He’s with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo,
Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him; whom
Has these poor men in question. Never saw Wretches so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth:
Forswear themselves as often as they speak:
Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them
With divers deaths in death.

Flo. Of my poor father,
The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have
Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married?

Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:
The odds for high and low’s alike.

Leon. Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is,
When once she is my wife.

Leon. That ’tis true, I see by your good fathe’s speed,
Will come on very slowly. I am sorry,
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking
Where you were tied in duty, and as sorry
Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Leon. Dear, look up:
Though Fortune, visible an enemy,
Should chase us with my father, power no jot
Hath she to change our loves. Beseech you, sir,
Remember since you owed no more to time
Than I do now: with thought of such affection,
Stop forth mine advocate: at your request
My father will grant precious things as trilles.

Leon. Would he do so, I’d beg your precise mistress,
Which he counts but a trifle.

Paul. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in’t: not a more
For your queen died, she was more worth all gazes
Than what you look on now.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

[Scene I.]

I thought of her, m in these looks I made. [To Florizel.] But your petition is unanswered. I will to your father:

[Exit.]

[Scene II. Before Leonatus' palace.]

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

ut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at relation?

[First Gent. I was by at the opening of the el, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner he found it: whereupon, after a little amazed-it, we were all commanded out of the chamber;

th this methought I heard the shepherd say, he d the child.

ut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

[First Gent. I make a broken delivery of the ess: but the changes I perceived in the king

Camillo were very notes of admiration: they ed almost, with staring on one another, to the cases of their eyes; there was speech in dumbness, language in their very gesture;

looked as they had heard of a world ransomed, destroyed: a notable passion of wonder ed in them; but the wisest beholder, that o more but seeing, could not say if the rance were joy or sorrow; but in the ex-ity of the one, it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

is comes a gentleman that haply knows more.

ews, Rogero?

ent. Nothing but bonfires: the oracle is ed; the king's daughter is found: such a of wonder is broken out within this hour that d-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

comes the Lady Paulina's steward: he can er you more. How goes it now, sir? this ich is called truth, so like an old tale, ery of it is in strong suspicion: has ng found his heir?

[Second Gent. Most true, if ever truth were nt by circumstance: that which you hear swear you see, there is such unity in the

. The mantle of Queen Hermione's, her about the neck of it, the letters of Antigonus

th it which they know to be his character, ajectory of the creature in resemblance of the er, the affection of nobleness which nature

s above her breeding, and many other evi-

s proclaim her with all certainty to be the daughter. Did you see the meeting of the ings?

[Second Gent. No.

[Third Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might ave beheld one joy crown another, so nd seeing her; but it seemed they went to m of them, for their joy waxed in tears. There ing up of eyes, holding up of hands, with ances of such distraction that they were to own by garment, not by favour. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his ound daughter, as if that joy were now become a oss, cries 'O, thy mother, thy mother!' then asks

Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries his daughter with ging her; now he thanks the old shepherd, hich stands by like a weather-bitten conduit of any kings' reigns. I never heard of such another ounter, which laments report to follow it and deo description to do it.

[Sec. Gent.] What, pray, you became of Antigo-us, that carried hence the child?

[Third Gent.] Like an old tale still, which will ave matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep nd not an ear open. He was torn to pieces with bear: this avouches the shepherd's son; who has not only his innocence, which seems much, to fify him, but a handkerchief and rings of that Paulina knows.

[First Gent.] What became of his bark and his ollowers?

[Third Gent.] Wrecked the same instant of their master's death and in the view of the pherd: so that all the instruments which aided to expose the child were even then lost when was found. But in the noble combat that twixt oy and sorrow was fought in Paulina! She had e one eye declined for the loss of her husband, other elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: she ifted the princess from the earth, and so locks

er in embracing, as if she would pin her to her art that she might no more be in danger of losing.

[First Gent.] The dignity of this act was worth audience of kings and princes; for by such as it acted.

[Third Gent.] One of the prettiest touches of all and that which angled for mine eyes, caught water though not the fish, was when, at the lation of the queen's death, with the manner

how she came to 't bravely confessed and lamented king, how attentiveness was wounded his taur; till, from one sign of doleful to another,

id, with an 'Alas,' I would fain say, bleed ears, for I am sure my heart wept blood. Who ost marble there changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen 't, the groan had been universal.

[First Gent.] Are they returned to the court?

[Third Gent.] No: the princess hearing of her ther's statue, which is in the keeping of ulina,—a piece many years in doing and now

ly performed by that rare Italian master, ulo Romano, who, had he himself eternity and uld put breath into his work, would beguile

ature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape:

o near to Hermione hath done Hermione that y one would speak to her and stand in hope of wer: thither with all greediness of affection

ere gone, and there they intend to sup.

[Sec. Gent.] I thought she had some great matter ere in hand; for she hath privately twice or tice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, ited that removed house. Shall we thither with our company piece the rejoicing?

[First Gent.] Who would be thence that has the benefit of action? every wink of an eye some ew grace will be born: our absence makes us unthrift to our knowledge. Let's along.

[Exeunt Gentlemen.]
Act I

Scene III. A chapel in Paulina's how.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, P. Dita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the greatest comfort
That I have had of thee!

Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well I meant well. All my services
You have paid home: but that you have saved,
With your crown'd brother and these your attendants
Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visage,
It is a surplus of your grace, which never
My life may last to answer.

Leon. O Paulina,
We honour you with trouble: but we came To see the statue of our queen; your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much tent
In many singularities; but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The house of her mother.

Paul. As she lived peerless So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Exceivd whatever yet you look'd upon Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep lonely, apart. But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd as ever Still mock'd death: behold, and say 'tis my own
Paulina draws a curtain, and discloses
Hermione standing like a statue
I like your silence, it the more shows off Your wonder: but yet speak; first, you, my liege Comes it not something near?

Paul. O, not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence:
Which lets go by some sixteen years and mother As she lived now.

Leon. As now she might have done So much to your good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood, Even with such life of majesty, warm life, As now it coldly stands, when first I woud he saw, She was as ashamed: does not the stone rebuke me For being more stone than it? O royal piece There's magic in thy majesty, which has My evils conjured to remembrance and From thy admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee.

Per. And give me leave And do not say 'tis superstition, that I kneel and then imprese her blessing. Lady Dear queen, that ended when I but began, Give that hand of yours to kiss.

The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's Not dry.
Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on, 'tis time; descend: be stone no more; approach: Let all that look upon with marvel. Come, 100 I'll fill your grave up: stir, nay, come away, Strike at all the look upon with marvel. Come, 100 I'll fill your grave up: stir, nay, come away, Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him Dear life redeems you. You perceive she stirs: Proceed: She comes down.

Start not; her actions shall be holy as You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her Until you see her die again; for then You kill her double. Nay, present your hand: When she was young you would her; now in age Is she become the suitor?

Leon. O, she's warm!

If this be magic, let it be an art

Lawful as eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his neck:

If she pertain to life let her speak too.

Pol. Ay, and make't manifest where she has lived,

Or how stolen from the dead.

Paul. That she is living,

Went it but told you, should be hooted at

Like an old tale: but it appears she lives,

Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while. Please you to interpose, fair madam: kneel

And pray your mother's blessing. Turn, good lady;

Our Perdita is found.

Her. You gods, look down

And from your sacred vials pour your graces

Upon my daughter's head! Tell me, mine own, Where hast thou been preserved? where lived? how found

Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear that I,

Knowing by Paulina that the oracle

Gave hope thou wast in being, have preserved

Myself to see the issue.

Paul. There's time enough for that;

Lest they desire upon this push to trouble

Your joys with like relation. Go together,

You precious winners all; your exultation

Partake to every one. I, an old turtle,

Will wing me to some wither'd bough and there

My mate, that's never to be found again,

Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O, peace, Paulina! Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent,

As I by thine a wife: this is a match, And made between's by vows. Thou hast found

mine:

But how, is to be question'd; for I saw her, As I thought, dead, and have in vain said many 140 A prayer upon her grave. I'll not seek far— For him, I partly know his mind—to find thee An honourable husband. Come, Camillo,

And take her by the hand, whose worth and honesty

Is richly noted and here justified

By us, a pair of kings. Let's from this place. What! look upon my brother: both your pardons, That I put between your holy looks

My ill suspicion. This is your son-in-law

And son unto the king, who, heavens-directing, 150 Is truth-pleight to your daughter. Good Paulina, Lead us from hence, where we may leisurely

Each one demand and answer to his part

Perform'd in this wide gap of time since first We were disser've'd: hastily lead away. [Exeunt.]

ACT I.

Scene I. King John’s palace.
Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France and us? Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of France. In my behaviour to the majesty, The borrow’d majesty, of England here. Eli. A strange beginning: ‘borrow’d majesty!’ K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy. Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey’s son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island and the territories, To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, Desiring thee to lay aside the sword Which sways usurpingly these several titles, And put the same into young Arthur’s hand, Thy nephew and right royal sovereign. K. John. What follows if we disallow of this? Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld. K. John. Here have we war for war and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment: so answer France. Chat. Then take my king’s defiance from my mouth, The farthest limit of my embassy. K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace.

Lewis, the Dauphin.

Chatillon, ambassador from France to King John.
Queen Elinor, mother to King John.
Constance, mother to Arthur.
Blanche of Spain, niece to King John.
Lady Faulconbridge.
Lords, Citizens of Angiers, Sheriffs, Herald:
Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

Scene: Partly in England, and partly in France.

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there, The thunder of my cannon shall be heard: So hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath Andullen presage of your own decay. An honourable conduct let him have: Pembroke, look to’t. Farewell, Chatillon. [Exeunt Chatillon and Pembroke]

Eli. What now, my son! have I not ever said How that ambitious Constance would not cease Till she had kindled France and all the world, Upon the right and party of her son? This might have been prevented and made whole With very easy arguments of love, Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful bloody issue arbitrater. K. John. Our strong possession and our right for us. Eli. Your strong possession much more than your right, Or else it must go wrong with you and me: So much my conscience whispers in your ear, Which none but heaven and you and I shall hear.

Enter a Sheriff.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy Come from the country to be judged by you. That e’er I heard: shall I produce the men? K. John. Let them approach. Our abbey’s and our priories shall pay This expedition’s charge.

Enter Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip Bastard brother.

What men are you? Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman Born in Northamptonshire and eldest son,
That this my mother's son was none of his;
And if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.
K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him,
And if she did play false, the fault was hers;
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son, 121
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This calf bred from his cow from all the world;
In sooth he might; then, if he were my brother's,
My brother might not claim him; nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him: this concludes;
My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's land.
Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force
To dispossess that child which is not his?
Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.
Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge
And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land,
Or the reputed son of Coeur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence and no land beside?
Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,
And I had his, sir Robert's his, like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-rods, 140
My arms such eel-skins stuff'd, my face so thin
That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose.
Lest men should say 'Look, where three-farthings goes!' And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
Would I might never stir from off this place,
I would give it every foot to have this face;
I would not be sir Rob in any case.
Eli. I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him and follow me?
I am a soldier and now bound to France. 150 Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take
my chance.
Your face hath got five hundred pound a year,
Yet sell your face for five pence and tis dear,
Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.
Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.
Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.
K. John. What is thy name?
Bast. Philip, my liege, so is my name begun;
Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.
K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bear'st: 160
Kneel thou down Philip, but rise more great,
Arise sir Richard and Plantagenet.
Bast. Brother by the mother's side, give me your hand:
My father gave me honour, yours gave land.
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got, sir Robert was away!
Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!
I am thy grandam, Richard; call me so.
Bast. Madam, by chance but not by truth;
what though?
KING JOHN.

ACT II.

Scene I. France. Before Angiers.

Enter Austria and forces, drums, etc. on one side; on the other King Philip of France and his power; Lewis, Arthur, Constance at attendants.

 Lew. Before Angiers well met, brave Austri Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood, ichard, that robb'd the lion of his heart and fought the holy wars in Palestine, looked this brave duke came early to his grave:
and, for amends to his posterity,
cour importuness hitherto is come,
spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf,
nd to rebuke the usurpation thy unnatural uncle, English John:
brace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cour-de-lion's death
if that you give your offspring life, showing their right under your wing of war:
give you with a powerless hand,
at with a heart full of unstained love:
ecome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Leu. A noble boy! Who would not do thee well?

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss, seal to this indenture of my love,
hat to my home I will no more return,
ill Angiers and the right thou hast in France,
gether with that pale, that white-faced shore,
ose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides
nd coops from other lands her islanders, ven till that England, hedged in with the main,
hat water-walled bulwark, still secure nd confident from foreign purposes, ven till that utmost corner of the west
ute thee for her king: till then, fair boy, ill I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks, ll your strong hand shall help to give him strength make a more requital to your love!

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their swords
such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work: our cannon shall be bent against the brows of this resisting town.
all for our chiefest men of discipline,
cull the plots of best advantages:
'll lay before this town our royal bones,
ade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
at we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy;
not unadvised you stain your swords with blood:
y Lord Chatillon may from England bring right in peace which here we urge in war, nd then shall we repent each drop of blood hat hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Chatillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady! lo, upon thy wish, ur messenger Chatillon is arrived! 51
hat England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege, nd stir them up against a mightier task.
ugand, impatient of your just demands,
th put himself in arms: the adverse winds,
ose leisure I have stay'd, have given him time and his legions all as soon as I;
ere his council, or his town, 60
is forces strong, his soldiers confident.
th him along is come the mother-queen,

An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king's deceased;
And all the unsettled humours of the land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens,
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here: 71
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er.
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scath in Christendom.

[Drum beats.

The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand,
To parley or to fight; therefore prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!

Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion;
Let them be welcome then; we are prepared.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard, Lords, and forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace permit.
Our just and lineal entrance to our own;
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven,
While we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beats His peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace.
England we love; and for that England's sake 91
With burden of our armour here we sweat.
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Out-faced infant state and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face;
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
This little abstract doth contain that large
Which died in Geoffrey, and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right
And this is Geoffrey's: in the name of God
How comes it then that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat,
Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France, 110
To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal judge, that stirs

In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right:
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy:
Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong
And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.

K. Phi. Excuse; it is to best usurping down.

Eliz. Who is it thou dost call usurper, France?

Const. Let me make answer; thy usurping son.
Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king,
That thou mayst be a queen, and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true
As thine was to thy husband; and this boy
Likest in feature to his father Geoffrey
Than thou and John in manners: being as like
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think
His father never was so true begot:
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.

Const. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.

Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Bast. The devil art thou?

Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An a' may catch your hide and you alone:
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard:
I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right;
Sirrah, look to 't; I faith, I will, I faith.
Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's robe
That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him
As great Alcides' shows upon an ass:
But, ass, I'll take that burthen from your back,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What cracker is this same that deafs our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?
K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do
straight.

Lew. Women and fools, break off your conference.

King John, this is the very sum of all;
England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Wilt thou resign them and lay down thy arms?

Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
And out of my dear love I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy!

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child.

Const. Do, child, go to it grandam, child: 160
Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace!
I would that I were low laid in my grave:
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, whether she does or no!

His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's
shames,
Draws those heaven-moving pearls from his poor
eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee; 170
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bribed
To do him justice and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!
Teach us some fence! [To Aust.] Sirrah, were
I at home,
At your den, sirrah, with your lioness,
I would set an ox-head to your lion's head,
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace! no more.

Bast. O, tremble, for you hear the lion roar.

K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set forth
In best appointment all our regiments.

Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.

K. Phi. It shall be so; and at the other hill Command the rest to stand. God and our right!

[Exeunt.

Hereafter excursions, enter the Herald of France, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in,
Who by the hand of France this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scattered on the bleeding ground;
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
COLDLY embracing the discoller'd earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French.

Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne England's king and yours.

Enter English Herald, with trumpet.

E. Her. Rejoice, ye men of Angiers, ring your bells;
King John, your king and England's, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day:
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Hither return all girt with Frenchmen's blood;
There stuck no plume in any English crest
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd forth;

And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes;
Open your gates and give the victors way.

First Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might behold,
From first to last, the herald and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured:
Blood hath bought blood and blows have answer'd blows;
Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power;
Both are alike; and both alike we like.
One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither, yet for both.

Re-enter the two Kings, with their powers, severally.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?

Say, shall the current of our right run on?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel and o'erswell
KING JOHN.

With course disturb’d even thy confining shores,
Unthou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean. 340
K. Phi. England, thou hast not saved one drop of blood,
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more. And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,
Before we will lay down our just-borne arms,
We’ll put thee down, ’gainst whom these arms
we bear,
Or add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll that tells of this war’s loss
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire! 351
O, now doth Death line his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, mowing the flesh of men,
In undetermined differences of kings.
Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry, ‘havoc!’ kings; back to the stained field,
You equal potens, fiery kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other’s peace; till then, blows, blood and death!
K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who’s your king?
First Cit. The king of England, when we know the king.
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear possession of our person here,
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.
First Cit. A greater power than we denies all this;
And till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our foremoor in our strong-barr’d gates;
King’d of our fears, until our fears, resolved,
Be by some certain king purged and deposed.
Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presence be ruled by me:
Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends awhile and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town; 380
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon charged to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing clammers have braw’d down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city;
I’d play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, disserve your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Turn face to face and bloody point to point; 390
Then, in a moment, Fortune shall call forth
Out of one side her happy minion,
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How lies thy this wild counsel, mighty states?
Smacks it not something of the policy?
K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs ab our heads,
I like it well. France, shall we knit our pow’r
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then after fight who shall be king of it?
Bast. An thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong’d as we are by this peevish town
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls;
And when that we have dash’d them to the groun
Why then defy each other, and pell-mell
Make work upon ourselves, for heaven or hell!
K. Phi. Let it be so. Say, where will assault?
K. John. We from the west will send struction
Into this city’s bosom.
Anat. I from the north.
K. Phi. Our thunder from the so
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.
Bast. O prudent discipline! From north south:
Austria and France shoot in each other’s mov
I’ll stand to them. Come, away, away!
First Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouch awhile to stay,
And I shall show you peace and fair-faced leag
Win you this city without stroke or wound;
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field:
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.
K. John. Speak on with favour; we are b
hear.
First Cit. That daughter there of Spain,
Lady Blanch,
Is niece to England: look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dauphin and that lovely maid:
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than L
Blanch?
Such she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete of, say he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want;
If want it be that she is not he;
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.
O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in;
And two such shores to two such streams in one.
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kiss
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union shall do more than battery can
To our fast-closed gates; for at this match,
With swifter spleen than powder can enforce
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope;
And give you entrance; but without this ma
The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion, no, not Death himsel
In mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.
Here's a stay at shakes the rotten carcass of old Death of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed, at spits forth death and mountains, rocks and seas, ks as familiarly of roaring lions maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs! 460 at cannoner begot this lusty blood? speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke and bumble; gives the bastinado with his tongue: ears are cudgel'd; not a word of his buffets better than a fist of France: nds! I was never so bethump'd with words e I first call'd my brother's father dad. if. Son, sit to this conjunction, make this match: w with our niece a dowry large enough: by this knot thou shalt so surely tie now unsured assurance to the crown, t venon boy shall have no sun to ripe bloom that promiss a mighty fruit, in yielding in the looks of France: k, how they whisper: urge them while their souls capable of this ambition, zeal, now melted by the windy breath of petitions, pity and remorse, and conceal again to what it was. ref. Cit. Why answer not the double majesties friendly treaty of our threaten'd town? Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward first speak unto this city: what say you? John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son, a this book of beauty read 'I love,' lowry shall weigh equal with a queen; injou and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers, all that we upon this side the sea, at this city now by us besieged, liable to our crown and dignity, gild her bridal bed and make her rich es, honours and promotions, e in beauty, education, blood, hand with any princess of the world. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face. u. I do, my lord; and in her eye I find ider, or a wondrous miracle, shadow of myself form'd in her eye; 1, being but the shadow of your son, ies a sun and makes your son a shadow: 500 rotest I never loved myself awixed I beheld myself in the flattering table of her eye. [Whispers with Blanche, Drawn in the flattering table of her eye! gd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow! arter'd in her heart! he doth espy self love's traitor: this is pity now, flagg'd and drawn and quarter'd, there should be a love so vile a lust as he. oh. My uncle's will in this respect is ine: 510 owe aught in you that makes him like, thy thing he sees, which moves his liking, I can with case translate it to my will; Or if you will, to speak more properly, I will enforce it easily to my love. Further I will not flatter you, my lord, That all I see in you is worthy love, Than this; that nothing do I see in you, Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge, That I can find should merit any hate. 520 K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece? Blanche. That she is bound in honour still to do What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say. K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady? Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love; For I do love her most unfeignedly. K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Tou- raine, Maine, Poitiers and Anjou, these five provinces, With her to thee; and this addition more, Full thirty thousand marks of English coin. 530 Philip of France, if thou be pleased withal, Command thy son and daughter to join hands. K. Phi. It like this well; young princes, close your hands. Aust. And your lips too; for I am well assured That I did so when I was first assured. K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates, Let in that amity which you have made; For at Saint Mary's chapel presently The rites of marriage shall be solemnized, Is not the Lady Constance in this troop? 540 I know she is not, for this match made up Her presence would have interrupted much: Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows. Lew. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent. K. Phil. And, by my faith, this league that we have made Will give her sadness very little cure. Brother of England, how may we content This widow lady? In her right we came; Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way, To our own advantage. K. John. We will heal up all: 550 For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Bretagne And Earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town We make him lord of. Call the Lady Constance; Some speedy messenger bid her repair To our solemnity: I trust we shall, If not fill up the measure of her will, Yet in some measure satisfy her so That we shall stop her exclamation. Go we, as well as haste will suffer us, To this unlook'd for, unprepared pomp. 560 [Exeunt all but the Bastard. Best. Mad world! mad kings! mad composi- tion! John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole, Hath willingly departed with a part, And France, whose armour conscience buckled on, Whom zeal and charity brought to the field As God's own soldier, rounded in the ear With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil, That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith, That daily break-vow, he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids, who, having no external thing to lose
But the word 'maid,' cheats the poor maid of that, which smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commod-ity,
Commodity, the bias of the world, which the world, who of itself is pleased well,
Made to run even upon even ground, till this advantage, this vile-drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity, makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent: and this same bias, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word, clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determined aid, from a resolved and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace. and why rail I on this commodity?
But for because he hath not woo'd me yet:
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm; but for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raieth on the rich. well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail and say there is no sin but to be rich; and be'd on rich, my virtue then shall be to say there is no vice but beggary.
Since kings break faith upon commodity, gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The French King's pavilion.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!
False blood to false blood join'd! gone to be friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast misspoken, misheard;
Be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so;
I trust I may not trust thee; for thy word is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man,
I have a king's oath to the contrary,
Shall thou be punish'd for thus frightening me, for I am sick and capable of fears,
Oppress'd with wrongs and therefore full of fears, a widow, husbandless, subject to fears,
A woman, naturally born to fears:
And though thou now confess thou didst but jest, with my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce, but they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds? be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale, but this one word, whether thy tale be true.
Sal. As true as I believe you think them false
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sort

Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die,
KING JOHN.

Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see?
This, in our foresaid holy father’s name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthy name to interrogatories
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England
Add thus much more, that no Italian priest
Shall sithe or toll in our dominions;
But as we, under heaven, are supreme head,
So under Him that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without the assistance of a mortal hand:
So tell the pope, all reverence set apart
To him and his usurp’d authority.

K. John. Though you and all the kings of Christendom
Are led so grossly by this meddlesing priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out;
And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who in that sale sells pardon from himself,
Though you and all the rest so grossly led
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,
Yet I alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand cursed and excommunicate:
And blessed shall he be that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call’d,
Canonized and worship’d as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Const. O, lawful let it be
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile! 180
Good father cardinal, cry thou amen
To my keen curses; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There’s law and warrant, lady, for My curse.

Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,
For he that holds his kingdom holds the law;
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse? 190

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Eli. Look’st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil; lest that France repent,
And by disjointing hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf’s-skin on his recreant limbs!

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs,
Because—

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.
KING JOHN.

K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Benthink you, father; for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:
Forgo the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.

Const. O Lewis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee here
In likeness of a new untrimmed bride.

Blanch. The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need.

Const. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need.
O then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up; keep my need up, and faith is trodden down!

K. John. The king is moved, and answers not to this.

Const. O, be removed from him, and answer well!

Aust. Do so, King Philip; hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet love.

K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what
to say.

Pand. What canst thou say but will perplex thee more,
If thou stand excommunicate and cursed?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls,
Married in league, doubled and linked together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amen, true love
Between our kingdoms and our royal selves,
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could wash our hands
To clasp this royal bargain up of peace,
Heaven knows, they were besmeared and overstain'd
With slaughter's pencil, where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings:
And shall these hands, so lately purged of blood,
So newly joint'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure and this kind regret?
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm,
Unwear faith sworn, and on the marriage-bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O, holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so!
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order; and then we shall be blest
To do your pleasure and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.

Therefore to arms! be champion of our church,
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse
A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue,
A chafed lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So makest thou faith an enemy to faith
And like a civil war setst oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy word
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd
That is, to be the champion of our church!
What since thou sworest is sworn against thy
And may not be performed by thyself,
For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss
Is not amiss when it is truly done,
And being done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The better act of purposes mistook
Is to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct.
And falsehood falsehood cures, as fire cools fire,
And scorched veins of one new-born'd.
It is religion that doth make vows kept;
But thou hast sworn against religion,
By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st,
And makest an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath: the truth thou art sure,
To swear, swears only not to be forsworn:
Else what a mockery should it be to swear!
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore thy later vows against thy first
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself:
And better conquest never canst thou make
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against these giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them. But if not, then knelt
The peril of our curses light on thee.
So heavy as thou shalt not shake them off,
But in despair die under their black weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will it not
Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine
Leu. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding-day?

K. John. Against the blood that thou hast married
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd dam?
Shall braying trumpets and loud churlish drum
Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me! ay, alack, how new
Is husband in my mouth! even for that name
Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.

Const. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Porethought by heaven!

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love: what
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him that upholds,
honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!

Eliz. I muse thy majesty doth seem so cold, on such profound respects do pull you on.

Ban. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

Phi. Thou shalt not need. England, I will fall from thee.

Anst. O fair return of banish'd majesty!

Iliz. O foul revolt of French constancy!

John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

ast. Old Time the clock-setter, that bald sexton
Time,
as he will? well then, France shall rue.

lanch. The sun's o'ercast, fair day,.adieu!

ich is the side that I must go within?
with both: each army hath a hand;
in their rage, I having hold of both,
y whirl asunder and dismember me.

brd. I cannot pray thou mayst win;
le, I need must pray thou mayst lose;
nt, I may not wish the fortune thine;
adam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive:
ever wins, on that side shall I lose;
red loss before the match be play'd.

Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.
lanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.

Exit Bastard.
nce, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
gge what heat hath this condition,
nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
blood, and dearest-valued blood, of France.
Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and and thou shalt turn
shes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:
: to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

John. No more than he that threats. To runs let's hie!

Exeunt.

II. The same. Plains near Angiers.

runs. excursions. Enter the BASTARD, with Austria's head.

st. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot;
sairy devil hovers in the sky
Dut's down mischief. Austria's head lie there, e Philip breathes.

er King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

John. Hubert, keep this boy. Philip, make up:
other is assailed in our tent,
a'en, I fear.

ft. My lord, I rescued her;
happiness is in safety, fear you not:
n, my liege; for very little pains
ring this labour to an happy end. [Exeunt.

Scene III. The same.

runs. excursions, retreat. Enter King
ON, Elinor, Arthur, the Bastard, Hut, and Lords.

John. [To Elinor] So shall it be; your peace shall stay behind

So strongly guarded. [To Arthur] Cousin, look ot so sad:
Thy grandam loves thee; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O, this will make my liege die with grief!

K. John. [To the Bastard] Cousin, away for England! haste before:
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; imprisoned angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon:

Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,

When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness. Grandam, I will pray,
If ever I remember to be holy,
For your fair safety: so, I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin.

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; hark, a word.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle

Hubert,

We owe thee much! within this wall of flesh

There is a soul counts thee her creditor
And with advantage means to pay thy love:
And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath

Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.
Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,
But I will fit it with some better time;
By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed
To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet,

But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow,
Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say, but let it go:
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton and too full of gawds
To give me audience: if the midnight bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
\ó Sound on it with the drowsey race of night;
If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs,
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had baked thy blood and made it heavy-thick,
Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion hateful to my purposes,
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,

Without eyes, ears and harmful sound of words;
Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But, ah, I will not! yet I love thee well;
And, by my troth, I think thou lovest me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act
By heaven, I would do it.

K. John. Do not I know thou wouldst?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On you young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend,

Of

He is a very serpent in my way:
And wheresoe'er this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me: dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.
Hub. And I'll keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.
Hub. My lord?
Hub. He shall not live.
I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember. Madam, fare you well:
I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty. 70
Eli. My blessing go with thee!
K. John. For England, cousin, go:
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty. On toward Calais, ho!

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The same. The French King's tent.

Enter King Philip, Lewis, Pandolph, and Attendants.
K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter'd and disjoint'd from fellowship.
Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go
well,
K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
O'erbearing interruption, spite of France?
Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice disposed,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read or heard
Of any kindred action like to this?
K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,
So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath.
I prithee, lady, go away with me. 20
Const. Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace.
K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!
Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death; O amiable lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones
And put my eyeballs in thy vauley brows
And ring these fingers with thy household worms
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust
And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smilest
And buss thee as thy wife. Misery's love,
O, come to me!

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace!
Const. No, no, I will not, having breastcry:
O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a passion would I shake the world
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which scorns a modern invocation.
Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and sorrow.
Const. Thou art not holy to believe me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife.
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost;
I am not mad: I would to heaven I were!
For then, 'tis like I should forget myself;
If I could, what grief should I forget!
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canonized, cardinal,
For being not mad but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
If I were mad, I should forget my son.
Or madly think a bate of clowns were he:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.
K. Phi. Bind up those tresses. O, what I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen
Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends
Do glue themselves in sociable grief,
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in calamity.
Const. To England, if you will.
K. Phi. Bind up your hair.
Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore do I it?
I tore them from their bonds and cried aloud:
'O that these hands could so redeem my son
As they have given these hairs their liberty
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.
And, father cardinal, I have heard you say
That we shall see and know our friend heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For since the birth of Cain, the first male ch
To him that did but yesterday suspende,
There was not such a gracious creature born
But now will canker-sorrow eat my bud
And chase the native beauty from his cheek
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit,
And so he'll die; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven
I shall not know him: therefore never, neve
Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.
Pand. You hold too heinous a respe-
grief.
Const. He talks to me that never had a K. Phi. You are as fond of grief as of child.
Const. Grief fills the room up of my a
child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words, electricity his gracious parts, at his vacant garments with his form; en, have I reason to be fond of grief? are you well? had you such a loss as I, 100 will not keep this form upon my head, hen there is such disorder in my wit. Lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son! y life, my joy, my food, all my world! y widowhood, and my sorrows' cure! K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her. Lew. There's nothing in this world can make me joy; ce is as tedious as a twice-told tale xing the dull ear of a drowsy man; id bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste. 110 at ye yields not but shame and bitterness. Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease, in the instant of repair and health, et fit is strongest; evils that take leave, e departure of all show evil: hat have you lost by losing of this day? Lew. All days of glory, joy and happiness. Pand. If you had won it, certainly you had. no; when Fortune means to men most good, e looks upon them with a threatening eye, 120 is strange to think how much King John hath lost this which he accounts so clearly won; e not you grieved that Arthur is his prisoner? Lew. As heartily as he is glad he hath him. Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood. ow learn me speak with a prophetic spirit; et the breadth of what I mean to speak all blow each dust, each straw, each little rub, et of the path which shall directly lead ye to England's throne; and therefore mark, in hath seized Arthur; and it cannot be 131 at, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins. e misplaced John should entertain an hour, e minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest. sceptre snatch'd with an unruly hand st be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd; d he that stands upon a slippery place ies nice of no vile hold to stay him up: at John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall; be it, for it cannot be but so. 140 Lew. But what shall I gain by young Ar- thur's fall? Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife, y make all the claim that Arthur did. Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did. Pand. Hub. [Aside] If I talk to him, with his innocent prate,
He will awake my mercy which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden and dispatch.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day:
In sooth, I would you were a little sick,
That I might sit all night and watch with you: I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. [Aside] His words do take possession of my bosom.

Read here, young Arthur. [Aside] How now, foolish rheum!

Turning dispituous torture out of door!
I must be brief, lest resolution drop.
Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.
Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,
I knit my handkercher about your brows,
The best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I never did ask it you again;
And with my hand at midnight held your head,
And like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time.
Saying, 'What lack you?' and 'Where lies your grief?'
Or 'What good love may I perform for you?'
Many a poor man's son would have lien still
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think my love was crafty love
And call it cunning: do, an if you will:
If heaven be pleased that you must use me ill,
Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes that never did nor never shall
So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it;
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none but in this iron age would do it!
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears
And quench his fiery indignation
Even in the matter of mine innocence;
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believed him,—no tongue but Hubert's.

Re-enter Executioners, with a cord, irons, &c.]

Do as I bid you.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out!
Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boisterous-rough?
KING JOHN.

Scene II. King John's palace.

Enter King John, Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd, I looked upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes. This 'once again,' but that your highness pleased, once superfluous: you were crown'd before, that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off, faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt; in expectation troubled not the land, any long'd-for change or better state. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp, guard a title that was rich before, cold refined gold, to paint the lily, row a perfume on the violet, smooth the ice, or add another hue a rainbow, or make tapers-light, seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish, asteful and ridiculous excess. But that your royal pleasure must be done, act is as an ancient tale new told, in the last repeating troublesome, urged at a time unseasonable.

In this the antique and well noted face lail old form is much disfigured; like a shifted wind unto a sail, akes the course of thoughts to fetch about, ties and frights consideration, as sound opinion sick and truth suspected, putting on so new a fashion'd robe. When workmen strive to do better than well, do confound their skill in covetousness; oftentimes excusing of a fault make the fault the worse by the excuse, satch set upon a little breach redit more in hiding of the fault, I did the fault before it was so patch'd.

This effect, before you were new crown'd, breathed our counsel: but it pleas'd your highness, verbe it, and we are all well pleased, all and every part of what we would make a stand at what your highness will.

John. Some reasons of this double coronation possess'd you with and think them strong; more, more strong, then lesser is my fear, I lndue you with: meantime but ask you would have reform'd that is not well, well shall you perceive how willingly I both hear and grant you your requests.

Then I, as one that am the tongue of these, send the purposes of all their hearts, for myself and them, but, chief of all, safety, for the which myself and them their best studies, heartily request enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint move the murmuring lips of discontent

To break into this dangerous argument,—

If what in rest you have in right you hold, Why then your fears, which, as they say, attend The steps of wrong, should I so move you to mew up Your tender kinsman and to choke his days With barbarous ignorance and deny his youth The rich advantage of good exercise? That the time's enemies may not have this To grace occasions, let it be our suit That you have bid us ask his liberty; Which for our goods we do no further ask Than whereupon our weal, on you depending, Counts it your weal he have his liberty.

Enter Hubert.

K. John. Let it be so: I do commit his youth To your direction. Hubert, what news with you? (Taking him apart.)

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed:

He shrow'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye: that close aspect of his Does show the most of a much troubled breast; And I do fearfully believe 'tis done, What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go Between his purpose and his conscience, Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set: His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pem. And when it breaks, I fear will issue thence The foul corruption of a sweet child's death. K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:

Good lords, although my will to give is living, The suit which you demand is gone and dead: He tells us Arthur is deceased to-night.

Sal. Indeed we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed we heard how near his death he was Before the child himself felt he was sick: This must be answer'd either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you I bear the shears of destiny? Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul play; and 'tis shame That greatness should so grossly offer it: So thrive it in your game! and so, farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee, And find the inheritance of this poor child, His little kingdom of a forced grave.

That blood which owed the breadth of all this isle, Three foot of it doth hold: bad world the while! This must not be thus borne: this will break out To all our sorrows, and ere long I doubt.

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast; where is that blood That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather: how goes all in France?

MESS. From France to England. Never such a power
For any foreign preparation
Was levied in the body of a land.
The copy of your speed is learnt by them;
For when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings comes that they are all arrived.

K. JOHN. O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

MESS. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust: the first of April died
Your noble mother: and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false I know not.

K. JOHN. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleased
My discontented peers! What! mother dead!
How wildly then walks my estate in France!
Under whose conduct came those powers of France
That thou for truth givest out are landed here?

MESS. Under the Dauphin.

K. JOHN. Thou hast made me giddy:
With these ill tidings.

Enter the Bastard and Peter of Pomfret.
Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

BAST. But if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst unheard fall on your head.

K. JOHN. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amazed
Under the tide: but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

BAST. How I have sped among the clergy-men,
The sums I have collected shall express.
But as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantastied;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. JOHN. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore dist thou so?

PETER. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. JOHN. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whenon he says
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd.
Deliver him to safety; and return,
For I must use thee.

BAST. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:

Besides, I met Lord Bigot and Lord Salisbury.
With eyes as red as new-ekindled fire,
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. JOHN. Gentile kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

BAST. I will seek them out.

K. JOHN. Nay, but make haste; the bell before
O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels,
And fly like thought from them to me again
Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach speed.

K. JOHN. Spoke like a sprightly noble man.
Go after him; for he perhaps shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

MESS. With all my heart, my liege.

K. JOHN. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert.

HUB. My lord, they say five moons were
To-night;
Four first, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wondrous motion.

K. JOHN. Five moons!

HUB. Old men and beldams in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously;
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths.
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks doth grip the hearer's throat.
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes,
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus:
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsly thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of a many thousand warlike French
That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artisan
Cuts off his tale and talks of Arthur's death.

K. JOHN. Why seek'st thou to possess me these fears?
Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had a miscause
To work him dead, but thou hadst not done it.

HUB. No had, my lord! why, did you provoke me?

K. JOHN. It is the curse of kings to be angry
By slaves that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life,
And do the winking of authority
To understand a law, to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it fris
More upon humour than advised respect.
KING JOHN.

349

Good ground, be pitiful and hurt me not! There's few or none do know me: if they did, This ship-boy's semblance hath disguised me quite.

I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:

As good to die and go, as die and stay.

[Leaps down.]

O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones:
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!

[Dies.]

Enter Pembroke, Salisbury, and Bigot.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmundsbury: It is our safety, and we must embrace

This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

Sal. The Count Melun, a noble lord of France; Whose private with me of the Dauphin's love

Is much more general than these lines import.

Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or rather then set forward; for 'twill be

Two long days' journey, lords, or ere we meet.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemp'er'd lords! The king by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath dispossess'd himself of us: We will not line his thin bestained cloak

With our pure honours, nor attend the foot

That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks.

Return and tell him so: we know the worst.

Bast. What'er you think, good words, I think, were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;

Therefore 'twere reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true, to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison. What is he lies here?

[Seeing Arthur.

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty! The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,

Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.

Big. Or, when he doomed this beauty to a grave,

Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? have you beheld,

Or have you read or heard? or could you think? Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? could thought, without this object,

Form such another? This is the very top,

The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame,

The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,

That ever wall-eyed wrath or staring rage

Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

50

Scene III. Before the castle.

Enter Arthur, on the walls.

r.h. The wall is high, and yet will I leap down:

[Exeunt.
Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:
Arth. doth live; the king hath sent for you.
Sat. O, he is bold and blithe not at death.
Av. It thou hateful villain, get thee gone!
Hub. I am no villain.
Sat. Must I rob the law? [Drawing his sword.
Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.
Sat. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin.
Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say:
By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours:
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;
Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness and nobility.
Big. Out, dunghill! darest thou brave a nobleman?
Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.
Sat. Thou art a murderer.
Hub. Do not prove me so: yet I am none;
Whose tongue sot'er speaks false, not truly speaks;
Who speaks not truly, lies.
Pem. Cut him to pieces.
Bast. Keep the peace, I say.
Sat. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.
Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury:
If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,
Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame,
I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime;
Or I'll so mauy you and your toasting-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.
Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulconbridge?
Second a villain and a murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.
Big. Who kill'd thisprit
Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well:
I honour'd him, I loved him, and will weep
My date of life out for his sweet life's loss.
Sat. Trust not those cunning waters of eyes,
For villany is not without such rheum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence.
Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house;
For I am stifi'd with this smell of sin.
Big. Away toward Bury, to the Dauphin there!

Pem. There tell the king he may inquir us out. [Exeunt[Hub.
Big. Do but hear me, sir
Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what;
Thou'rt damn'd as black—nothing is more black;
Thou art more dead damn'd than Prince Luci;
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.
Hub. Upon my soul—
Bast. If thou didst but cons
To this most cruel act, do but despair;
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twist'd from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be beam
To hang thee on; or wouldst thou drown thyself?
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stuff such a villain up.
I do suspect thee very grievously.
Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embound in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me.
I left him well.
Big. Go, bear him in thine arms.
I am amazed, methinks, and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.
How easy dost thou take all England up!
From forth this morsel of dead royalty,
The life, the right and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven; and England now is left
To tug and scramble and to part by the teeth
The unwor of proud-swelling state.
Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest
And snarl in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from home and disorders home
Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits,
As doth a raven on a sick-fall'n beast,
The imminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy he whose cloack and cincture can Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child
And follow me with speed: I'll to the king:
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exit]
ACT V.

Scene I. King John's palace.

Enter King John, Pandulph, and Attendants.

John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand circle of my glory. [Giving the crown, and.

Take again this my hand, as holding of the pope sovereign greatness and authority.

John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French, from his holiness use all your power to their marches 'fore we are inflamed. discontented counties do revolt; people quarrel with obedience, prayer; allegiance and the love of soul to danger blood, to foreign royalty, imitation of mistemper'd humour s by you only to be qualified: pause not; for the present time's so sick, present medicine must be minister'd, verthrow incurable ensues.

And. It was my breath that blew this tempest up, your stubborn usage of the pope; since you are a gentle convert, tongue shall hush again this storm of war 20 make fair weather in your blustering land. his Ascension-day, remember well, your oath of service to the pope, to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit.

John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet that before Ascension-day at noon sworn I should give o'ot? Even so I have: suppose it should be on constraint; heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

St. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds out.

Dover castle: London hath received, a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers: nobles will not hear you, but are gone fier service to your enemy, wild amazement hurries up and down little number of your doubtful friends.

John. Would not my lords return to me again, as they heard young Arthur was alive?

St. They found him dead and cast into the streets, mpty casket, where the jewel of life me damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.

St. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew, wherefore do you droop? why look you sad? eat in act, as you have been in thought; or the world see fear and sad distrust in the motion of a kingly eye: stirring as the time; be fire with fire; stem the threateners and surface the brow agging horror: so shall inferior eyes, borrow their behaviours from the great, great by your example and put on faultless spirit of resolution.

Away, and glister like the god of war, When he intendeth to become the field: Show boldness and aspiring confidence. What, shall they seek the lion in his den, And fright him there? and make him tremble there? O, let it not be said: forage, and run To meet displeasure farther from the doors, 60 And grapple with him ere he comes so nigh.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with me, and I have made a happy peace with him; and he hath promised to dismiss the powers Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O inglorious league! Shall we, upon the footing of our land, Send fair-play orders and make compromise, Insatiation, parley and base truce. To arms invasive shall a healess boy, A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields, And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil, Mocking the air with colours idly spread, And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms: Perchance the cardinal cannot make your peace; Or if he do, let it at least be said They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away, then, with good courage! yet, I know, Our party may well meet a prouder foe. [Exeunt.

Scene II. The Dauphin's camp at St. Edmundsbury.

Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bigot, and Soldiers.

Lewis. My Lord Meun, let this be copied out, And keep it safe for our remembrance; Return the precedent to these lords again: That, having our fair order written down, Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes, May know wherefore we took the sacrament And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our oaths we never shall be broken. And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear A voluntary zeal and an unjured faith To your proceedings; yet believe me, prince, I am not glad that such a sore of time Should seek a plaster by contem'd revolt, And heal the inveterate canker of one wound By making many. O, it grieves my soul, That I must draw this metal from my side To be a widow-maker! O, and there Where honourable rescue and defence Cries out upon the name of Salisbury! But such is the infection of the time, That, for the health and physic of our right, We cannot deal but with the very hand Of stern injustice and confused wrong. And is 't not pity, O my grieved friends, That we, the sons and children of this isle, Were born to see so sad an hour as this; Wherein we step after a stranger march Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up Her enemies' ranks,—I must withdraw and weep Upon the spot of this enforced cause,— To grace the gentry of a land remote, And follow unacquainted colours here?
What, here? O nation, that thou couldst remove!
That Neptune’s arms, who clippeth thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grapple thee unto a pagan shore;
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

lew. A noble temper dost thou show in this;
And great affections wrestling in thy bosom
Doth make an earthquake of nobility.
O, what a noble combat hast thou fought
Between compulsion and a brave respect!
Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady’s tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figured quite o’er with burning meteors.
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away the storm:
Commend these waters to those baby eyes
That never saw the giant world enrag’d;
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Full of warm blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity.
As Lewish himself: so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.
And even there, methinks, an angel spake:

Enter Pandulph.

Look, where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven,
And on our actions set the name of right
With holy breath.

Pand.

Hail, noble prince of France!
The next is this, King John hath reconciled Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome:
Therefore thy threatening colors now wind up;
And there the savage spirit of wild war,
That, like a lion foster’d up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

lew.

Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back
I am too high-born to be propounded,
To be a secondary at control,
Or useful serving-man and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastised kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now tis far too huge to be blown out.
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart;
And come ye now to tell me John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conqu’red, must I back
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?

Am I Rome’s slave? What penny hath R borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? Is’t not I
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business and maintain this war
Have I not heard these islanders shout out ‘Vive le roi!’ as I have bank’d their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match play’d for a crown?
And shall I now give o’er the yielded set?
No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this

lew. Outside or inside, I will not return
Till my attempt so much be glorified
As to my ample hope was promised.
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull’d these fiery spirits from the world,
To overlook contest and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sound]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bas. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And must not be limited unto my toot set.

Pand.

The Dauphin is too willful-opposite
And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says he’ll not lay down his arms.

Bas.

By all the blood that ever fury brent.
The youth says well. Now hear our English.
For thus his royalty doth speak in me:
He is prepared, and reason too he should:
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness’d masque and unadvised revel,
This unhair’d sauciness and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepared
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy armies
From out the circle of his territorial
That hard which had the strength, even at y door,

To cudgel you and make you take the hatch,
To dive like buckets in concealed wells,
To crouch in litter of your stable planks,
To lie like pawns lock’d up in chests and trun
To hug with swine, to seek safety out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrall and shake
Even at the crying of your nation’s crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman;
Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chasteisement
No: know the gallant monarch is in arms
And like an eagle o’er his airy towers,
To sour annoyance that comes near his nest.
And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Neroes, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame
For your own ladies and pale-visaged maids
Like Amazons come tripping after drums,
Their needles to lances, and their gentle hear
To fierce and bloody inclination.

lew.

There end thy brave, and turn thy head
in peace;
Sal. When we were happy we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;

Unthread the rude eye of rebellion
And welcome home again discanted faith.
Seek out King John and fall before his feet;
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take
By cutting off your heads: thus hath he sworn
And I with him, and many moe with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmunds bury;
Even on that altar where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolved out from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here and live hence by truth?
I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if 'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east;
But even this night theseascoff uncontrollable breath
Already smokes about the burning crest
Of the old, feeble and day-wearied sun,
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated treachery
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
Commend me to one Hubert with your king:
The love of him, and this respect besides,
For that my grandsire was an Englishman,
Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field,
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee: and beshrew my soul
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And like a bated and retired flood
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd
And calmly run on in obedience
Even to our ocean, to our great King John.
My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence;
For I do see the cruel pangs of death
Right in thine eye. Away, my friends! New flight;
And happy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off Melun.

SCENE V. The French camp.

Enter Lewis and his train.

Lew. The sun of heaven methought was loath to set,
But stay'd and made the western welkin blush,
When English measure backward their own ground
In faint retire. O, bravely came we off,
When with a volley of our needless shot,

[Exeunt.]
After such bloody toil, we bid good night;
And wound our tattering colours clearly up,
Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?
Lew. Here: what news?

Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English lords,
By his persuasion are again fall’n off,
And your supply, which you have wish’d so long,
Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin Sands.

Lew. Ah, foul shrewd news! beshrew thy very heart!
I did not think to be so sad to-night
As this hath made me. Who was he that said
King John did fly an hour or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary powers?
Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is, true, my lord.
Lew. Well; keep good quarter and good care to-night:
The day shall not be up so soon as I,
To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.]

Scene VI. An open place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, severally.

Hub. Who’s there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.
Bast. A friend. What art thou?
Hub. Of the part of England.
Bast. Whither dost thou go?
Hub. What’s that to thee? why may not I demand
Of thee affairs, as well as thou of mine?
Hub. Bast. Hubert, I think?
Bast. Thou hast a perfect thought:
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know’st my tongue so well.
What art thou?
Bast. Who thou wilt: and if thou please,
Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think
I come one way of the Plantagenets.
Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou and eyeless night
Have done me shame: brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue
Should escape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?
Hub. Why, here walk I in the black brow
Of night, to find you out.
Bast. Brief, then; and what’s the news?
Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night.
Black, fearful, comfortless and horrible.
Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news:
I am no woman, I’ll not swoon at it.
Hub. The king, I fear, is poison’d by a monk:
I left him almost speechless: and broke out
To acquaint you with this evil, that you might
The better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at leisure known of this.
Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved vill
Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king
Yet speaks and peradventure may recover.
Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his jesty?
Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are come back,
And brought Prince Henry in their company
At whose request the king hath pardon’d them
And they are all about his majesty.
Bast. Withhold thine indignation, my heaven,
And tempt us not to bear above our power!
I’ll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide:
These Lincoln Washes have devoured them;
Myself, well mounted, hardly have escaped.
Away before: conduct me to the king;
I doubt he will be dead or ere I come. [Exeunt.]

Scene VII. The orchard in Swinstead Abbey.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Buck.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all blood
Is touch’d corruptibly, and his pure brain,
Which some suppose the soul’s frail dwelling house,
Doth by the idle comments that it makes
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak, and he belief
That, being brought into the open air,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison which assail’d him.
P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard.
Doth he still rage?

[Exit Buck.
Pem. He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he sung.
P. Hen. ‘O vanity of sickness! fierce treme’s
In their continuance will not feel themselves.
Death, having prey’d upon the outward parts,
Leaves them invisible, and his siege is now
Against the mind, the which he pricks a house.
With many legions of strange fantasies,
Which, in their throng and press to that last
Confound themselves. ’Tis strange that de should sing.
I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death,
And from the organ-pipe of frivolity sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.
Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you born
To set a form upon that indigest
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Enter Attendants, and Bigot, carrying King John in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elb room;
It would not out at windows nor at doors.
There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
Enter the Bastard.

ast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion, I spleen of speed to see your majesty! 50

. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:

'tack of my heart is crack'd and burn'd,
a ll the shrouds wherewith my life should sail

urned to one thread, one little hair;

hart hath one poor string to stay it by,

ch holds but till thy news be uttered;

en all this thou seest is but a cloud

odule of confounded royalty.

ast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward, ere heaven He knows how we shall answer

im; in a night the best part of my power,

n advantage did remove,

the Washes all unwarily

ured by the unexpected flood.

[The king dies.

st. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear, liege! my lord! but now a king, now thus.

. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.

at surety of the world, what hope, what stay,

in this was now a king, and now is clay?

st. Art thou gone so? I do but stay be-ind to the office thee of revenge,

And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now, you stars that move in your right

pheres,

Where be your powers? show now your mended

ths,

And instantly return with me again,

To push destruction and perpetual shame

ut of the weak door of our fainting land.

raightlet us seek, or straight we shall be sought:
The Dauphin rages at our very heels. 80

Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we:

The Cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,

With purpose presently to leave this war.

ast. He will the rather do it when he sees sselves well sinewed to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;

For many carriages he hath dispatch'd

o the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel

o the disposing of the cardinal:

ith whom yourself, myself and other lords,

If you think meet, this afternoon will post

o consummate this business happily.

ast. Let it be so; and you, my noble prince,

ith other princes that may best be spared,

ll wait upon your father's funeral.

. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inerr'd;

For so he will it.

ast. Thither shall it then:

And happily may your sweet self put on lineal state and glory of the land!

To whom, with all submission, on my knee

o bequeath my faithful services

nd true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,

o rest without a spot for evermore.

. Hen. I have a kind soul that would give you thanks

And knows not how to do it but with tears.

ast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,

ince it hath been beforehand with our griefs.

his England never did, nor never shall,

e at the proud foot of a conqueror,

ut when it first did help to wound itself.

ow these her princes are come home again,

me the three corners of the world in arms,

nd we shall shock them. Nought shall make us rue,

If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

Enter King Richard, John of Gaunt, with other Nobles and Attendants.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster,

Hast thou, according to thy oath and band,

Brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son,

Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,

Which then our leisure would not let us hear,

Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him,

If he appeal the duke on ancient malice;

Or worthily, as a good subject should, 10

On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument,

On some apparent danger seen in him

Aim'd at your highness, no inveeterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to face,

And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear

The accuser and the accused freely speak;

High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,

In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Mowbray.

Boling. Many years of happy days befal 20

My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

Mow. Each day still better other's happiness;

Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,

Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both; yet one but flatters us,

As well appeareth by the cause you come;

Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.

Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object

Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbr

Bolingbroke. First, heaven be the record to speech!

In the devotion of a subject's love,

Tendering the precious safety of my prince,

And free from other misbegotten hate,

Come I appellant to this princely presence.

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,

And mark my greeting well; for what I speak

My body shall make good upon this earth,

Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.

Thou art a traitor and a miscreant,

Too good to be so and too bad to live,

Since the more fair and crystal is the sky,

The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly,

Once more, the more to aggravate the note,

With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat;

And wish, so please my sovereign, ere I move

What my tongue speaks my right drawn sword may prove.

Mow. Let not my cold words here accuse me:

'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,

The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,

Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain;

The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this:

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast

As to be hush'd and nought at all to say:

First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs

From giving reins and spurs to my free speech,

Which else would post until it had return'd

These terms of treason doubled down his throat,

Setting aside his high blood's royalty,

And let him be no kinsman to my liege,

I do defy him, and I spit at him;
all him a slanderous coward and a villain; high to maintain I would allow him odds, ad meet him, were I tied to run afoot ven to the frozen ridges of the Alps, ac any other ground inhabitable, here ever Englishman durst set his foot. can time let this defend my loyalty, ll my hopes, most fearfully doth he lie. Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage, claiming here the kindred of the king, ad lay aside my high blood's royalty, high fear, not reverence, makes thee to except. guilty dread have left thee so much strength to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop: that and all the rites of knighthood else, ill I make good against thee, arm to arm, hat I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise. Mov. I take it up; and by that sword I swear, hest gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder, I answer thee in any fair degree, chivalrous design of knightly trial: when I mount, alive may I not light, I be traitor or unjustly fight! K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge? must be great that can inherit us much as of a thought of ill in him. Boling. Look, what I speak, my life shall prove it true; at Mowbray hath received eight noble names of lendings for your highness' soldiers, to which he hath detain'd for low employments, like a false traitor and injurious villain. sides I say and will in battle prove, here or elsewhere to the furthest verge ever was survey'd by English eye, at all the treasons for these eighteen years unplotted and contrived in this land fell from false Mowbray their first head and spring. rather I say and further will maintain son his bad life to make all this good, at he did plot the Duke of Gloucester's death, geest his soon-believing adversaries, consequently, like a traitor coward, did out his innocent soul through streams of blood: rich blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries, en from the tongueless caverns of the earth, me for justice and rough chastisement; d, by the glorious worth of my descent, is arm shall do it, or this life be spent. K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars! omas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this? Mov. O, let my sovereign turn away his face bid his cars a little while be deaf, I have told this slander of his blood, God and good men hate so foul a liar. K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears: are he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir, he is but my father's brother's son, by, my sceptre's awe, I make a vow, all neighbour nearness to our sacred blood nothing privilege him, nor partaize unstooping firmness of my upright soul: is our subject, Mowbray; so art thou: Free speak and fearless I to thee allow. Mov. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart, Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest. Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais Disbursed I duly to his highness' soldiers; The other part reserved I by consent, For that my sovereign liege was in my debt Upon remainder of a dear account, Since last I went to France to fetch his queen: Now swallow down that lie. For Gloucester's death, I slew him not; but to my own disgrace Neglected my sworn duty in that case. For you, my noble Lord of Lancaster, The honourable father to my foe, Once did I lay an ambush for your life, A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul; But ere I last received the sacrament I did confess it, and exactly begg'd Your grace's pardon, and I hope I had it. This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd, It issues from the rancour of a villain, A recreant and most degenerate traitor: Which in myself I boldly will defend; And interchangeably hurl down my gage Upon this overweening traitor's foot, To prove myself a loyal gentleman Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom. In haste whereof, most heartily I pray Your highness to assign our trial day. K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be ruled by me; Let's purge this choler without letting blood: This we prescribe, though no physician; Deep malice makes too deep incision: Forget, forgive; conclude and be agreed; Our doctors say this is no month to bleed. Good uncle, let this end where it begun; We'll call the Duke of Norfolk, you son. Gault. To be a make-piece shall become my age: Throw down, my son, the Duke of Norfolk's gage. K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his. Gault. When, Harry, when? Obedience bids I should not bid again. K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down, we bid; there is no boot. Mov. Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot. My life thou shalt command, but not my shame: The one my duty owes; but my fair name, Despite of death that lives upon my grave, To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. I am disgraced, impeach'd and baffled here, Pierced to the soul with slander's venom'd spear, The which no balm can cure but his heart-blood Which breathed this poison. K. Rich. Rage must be withstood: Give me his gage: lions make leopards tame. Mov. Yea, but not change his spots: take but my shame, And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord, The purest treasure mortal times afford Is spotless reputation: that away, Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. A jewel in a ten-times-bared-up chest Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast.
Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;
Take honour from me, and my life is done:
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw up your gage; do you begin.

Boling. O, God defend my soul from such deep sin!

Shall I seem crest-fall'n in my father's sight?
Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height 198
Before this out-dared dastard? Ere my tongue
Shall wound my honour with such feebly wrong,
Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear,
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exit Gaunt.

K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command;
Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it.
At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day:
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate 200
The swelling difference of your settled hate:
Since we can not atone you, we shall see
Justice design the victor's chivalry.
Lord marshal, command our officers at arms
Be ready to direct these home alarms.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The Duke of Lancaster's palace.

Enter John of Gaunt with the Duchess of Gloucester.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Woodstock's
blood
Doth more solicit me than your exclamations,
To stir against the butchers of his life!
But since correction lieth in those hands
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who, when they see the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offender's heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven vials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the Destinies cut;
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Glou-chester,
One vial full of Edward's sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt,
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand and murder's bloody axe.

Ah, Gaunt, his blood—was thine! that bed, that womb,
That metal, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee
Made him a man; and though thou livest and breathest,
Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thou wretched brother die,
Who was the model of thy father's life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt; it is despair:

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughtered,
Thou shewest the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee:
That which in mean men we intitle patience
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is to venge my Gloucester's death
Gaunt. God's is the quarrel; for God's suit

His deputy anointed in His sight,
Hath caused his death: the which if wrongfull
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against His minister.

Duch. Where then, alas, may I complain in self?
Gaunt. To God, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why, then, I will. Farewell, cousin
Gaunt.

Thou goest to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight:
O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast!
Or, if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caftit recreant to my cousin Hereford!
Farewell, old Gaunt: thy sometimes brother wife
With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell! I must to Coventry
As much good stay with thee as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more: grief bounds
where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun,
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.
Commend me to thy brother, Edmund York.
Lo, this is all:—nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go,
I shall remember more. Bid him—Ah, what?—
With all good speed at Phasy visit me,
Alack, and what shall good York there see
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones?
And what hear there for welcome but

Therefore commend me; let him not come thither
To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere.
Desolate, desolate, will I hence and die:
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exit.

SCENE III. The lists at Coventry.

Enter the Lord Marshal and the Duke of Aumerle.

Mar. My Lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford
arm'd?
Ann. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
But stays but the summons of the appellant's trump Ann. Why, then, the champions are prepare and stay
For nothing but his majesty's approach.
trumpets sound, and the King enters with his nobles, Gaunt, Bushy, Bagot, Green, and others. When they are set, enter Mowbray in armor, defendant, with a Herald.

Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion cause of his arrival here in arms: him his name and orderly proceed wear him in the justice of his cause. 10

In God’s name and the king’s, say who you art
why thou comest thus knightly clad in arms, inst what man thou comest, and what thy quarrel: ak truly, on thy knighthood and thy oath; to defend thee heaven and thy valour! 20

My name is Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk; why hither come engaged by my oath— ch God defend a knight should violate! to defend my loyalty and truth God, my king and my succeeding issue, inst the Duke of Hereford that appeals me; by the grace of God and this mine arm, move him, in defending of myself, ait to my God, my king, and me: as truly fight, defend me heaven! 30 trumpets sound. Enter Bolingbroke, appellant, in armor, with a Herald.

Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms, who he is and why he cometh hither placed in habitments of war, formally, according to our law, use him in the justice of his cause. 40

ar. What is thy name? and wherefore comest thou hither, to King Richard in his royal lists? what comest thou? and what’s thy quarrel? like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

ling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby I, who ready here do stand in arms, by God’s grace and my body’s valour, on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, he is a traitor, foul and dangerous, god of heaven, King Richard and to me; as truly fight, defend me heaven! 50

ar. On pain of death, no person be so bold ring-hardy as to touch the lists, the marshal and such officers intended to direct these fair designs.

ling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign’s hand, bow my knee before his majesty: Mowbray and myself are like two men vow a long and weary pilgrimage; let us take a ceremonious leave loving farewell of our several friends.

ar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness, craves to kiss your hand and take his leave. We will descend and fold him in our arms. in of Hereford, as thy cause is right, thy fortune in this royal fight! well, my blood; which if to-day thou shed, Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be gored with Mowbray’s spear: 60 As confident as is the falcon’s flight Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight. My loving lord, I take my leave of you; Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle; Not sick, although I have to do with death, But lusty, young, and cheerily drawing breath. Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet: O thou, the earthly author of my blood, Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate, 70 With a twofold vigour lift me up To reach at victory above my head, Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers; And with thy blessings steel my lance’s point, That it may enter Mowbray’s waxen coat, And furnish now the name of John a Gaunt, Even in the lusty haviour of his son.

Gaunt. God in thy good cause make thee prosperous! Be swift like lightning in the execution; And let thy blows, doubly redoubled, 80 Fall like amazing thunder on the casque Of thy adverse pernicious enemy: Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence and Saint George to thrive!

Mow. However God or fortune cast my lot, There lives or dies, true to King Richard’s throne, A loyal, just and upright gentleman: Never did captive with a freer heart Cast off his chains of bondage and embrace His golden uncontrol’d enfranchisement. More than my dancing soul doth celebrate This feast of battle with mine adversary. Most mighty liege, and my companion peers, Take from my mouth the wish of happy years: As gentle and as jocund as to jest Go I to fight: truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord; securely I espay Virtue with valour couched in thine eye. Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby, Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry, amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk.

First Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby, Stands here for God, his sovereign and himself, On pain to be found false and recreant, To prove the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray, A traitor to his God, his king and him; And dares him to set forward to the fight.

Sec. Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, On pain to be found false and recreant, Both to defend himself and to approve Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, To God, his sovereign and to him disloyal; Couragiously and with a free desire Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants. [A charge sounded.
Stay, the king hath thrown his warden down.
K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears, And both return back to their chairs again: [230]
Withdraw with us: and let the trumpets sound While we return these dukes what we decree.
[A long flourish.

Draw near,
And list what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With that dear blood which it hath fostered;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' sword;
And for we think the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set on you
To make our peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;
Which so roused up with boisterous untuned drums,
With harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace
And make us wade even in our kindred's blood;
Therefore, we banish you our territories:
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life,
Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields
Shall not regret our fair dominions,
But tread the stranger paths of banishment.
Boling. Your will be done: this must my comfort be,
That sun that warms you here shall shine on me;
And those his golden beams to you here lent Shall point on me and gild my banishment.
K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The sly slow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear life;
The hoarse word of 'never to return'
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.
Mow. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,
And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth:
A dearer merit, not so deep a main
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserved at your highness' hands.
The language I have learn'd these forty years,
My native English, now I must forego:
And now my tongue's use is to me no more
Than an unstring'd violin or a harp,
Or like a cunning instrument case'd up,
Or, being open, put into his hands
That knows no touch to tune the harmony:
Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips;
And dull unfeeling barren ignorance
Is made my gader to attend on me.
I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,
Too far in years to be a pupil now:
What is thy sentence then but speechless death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?
K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionat e:
After our sentence pleading comes too late.
\[ \text{KING RICHARD II.} \]

Scene IV. The court.

Enter the King, with Bagot and Green at one door; and the Duke of Aumerle at another.

K. Rich. We did observe. Cousin Aumerle, how far brought you high Hereford on his way?

Ann. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so, but to the next highway, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed?

Ann. Faith, none for me; except the north-east wind, which then blew bitterly against our faces, awaked the sleeping rheum, and so by chance did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin when you parted with him?

Ann. 'Farewell!'

And, for my heart disdained that my tongue should so profane the word, that taught me craft to counterfeit oppression of such grief, that words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.

Marry, would the word 'farewell!' have lengthen'd hours, and added years to his short banishment, he should have had a volume of farewells; but since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt, when time shall call him home from banishment, whether our kinsman come to see his friends. Ourself and Bushy, Bagot here and Green observed his courtship to the common people; how he did seem to dive into their hearts with humble and familiar courtesy, what reverence he did throw away on slaves, wowing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles and patient under-bearing of his fortune, as 'twere to banish their affects with him.

Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench; a brace of draymen bid God speed him well and had the tribute of his supper knee, with 'thank thee, my countrymen, my loving friends,' as were our England in reversion his, and he our subjects' next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts. Now for the rebels which stand out in Ireland, expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leisure yield them further means—
For their advantage and your highness' loss.
K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war:
And, for our coffer, with too great a court
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light,
We are enforcing to farm our royal realm;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand: if that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;
Whereeto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold
And send them after to supply our wants; §
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what news? Bushy, Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick,
my lord,
Suddenly taken; and hath sent post haste
To entreat your majesty to visit him.
K. Rich. Now put it, God, in the physician's mind
To help him to his grave immediately! 60
The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.
Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:
Pray God we may make haste, and come too late!
All. Amen. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. Ely House.

Enter John of Gaunt sick, with the Duke of York, &c.

Gaunt. Will the king come, that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unstaid youth? York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;
For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.
Gaunt. O, but they say the tongues of dying men
Enforce attention like deep harmony;
Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain,
For they breathe truth that breathe their words in pain.
He that no more must say is listen'd more
Than they whom youth and ease have taught to close; 10
More are men's ends mark'd than their lives before:
The setting sun, and music at the close,
As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last,
Writ in remembrance more than things long past:
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.
York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,
As praises, of whose taste the wise are fond,
Lascivious metres, to whose venom sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen;
Report of fashions in proud Italy,
Whose manner still our tardy apish nation
Limp's after in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity—
So it be new, there's no respect how vile—
That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?
Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard.
Direct not him whose way himself will choose
'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thee lose.

Gaunt. Methinks I am a prophet new inspir'd
And thus expiring do foretell of him:
His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last,
For violent fires soon burn out themselves;
Small showers last long, but sudden storms Shalt.
He tires betimes that spurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding food doth choke the feeder.
Light vanity, insatiate corruptor,
Consuming means, soon prey's upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise,
This fortress built by Nature for herself
Against infection and the hand of war,
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands,
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm,
England,
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fear'd by their breed and famous by their bin
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
For Christian service and true chivalry,
As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's Son,
This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land.
Dear for her reputation through the world,
Is now leased out, I die pronouncing it,
Like to a tenement or pelting farm;
England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious sile
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shar.
With inky bloots and rotten parchament bonds:
That England, that was wont to conquer othe,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself.
Ah, would the scandal vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death!

Enter King Richard and Queen, Aumer, Bushy, Green, Bagot, Ross, and Loughby.

York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;
For young hot colts being trag'd do rage tempe:
Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancast,
K. Rich. What comfort, man? how is't w aged Gaunt?
Gaunt. O, how that name befits my com sion!
Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt in being old;
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt
For sleeping England long time have I watched
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gau.
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean, my children's looks:
And therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt,
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
York. I do beseech your majesty, impute his words
To wayward sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry Duke of Hereford, were he here.
K. Rich. Right, you say true: as Hereford's love, so his;
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.
North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.
K. Rich. What says he?
North. Nay, nothing; all is said:
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt
so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.
K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be.
So much for that. Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns,
Which live like venom where no venom else
But only they have privilege to live.
And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues and moveables,
Whereof our Uncle Gaunt did stand possessed.
York. How long shall I be patient? ah, how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloucester's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private
wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.
I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first:
In war was never lion raged more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman.
His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;
But when he crown'd, it was against the French
And not against his friends; his noble hand
Did win what he did spend and spent not that 180
Which his triumphant father's hand had won;
His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
O Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.
K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?
York. O my liege,
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleased
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.
Seek you to seize and gripe into your hands
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford's rights away, and take from Time
His charters and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;
Be not thyself; for how art thou a king
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God—God forbid I be true!—
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patent that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue
His livery, and deny his offer'd homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.

K. Rich. Think what you will, we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money and his lands.
York. I'll not be by the while: my liege,
farewell:
What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood
That their events can never fall out good. [Exit. K. Rich.]
Go, Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire
straight:
Bid him repair to us to Ely House
To see this business. To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and this time, I trave:
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England; 220
For he is just and always loved us well.
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.
[Flourish. Exeunt King, Queen, Aumerle, Bushy, Green, and Bagot.]

North. Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.
Willo. Barely in title, not in revenue.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.
Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence,
Ere't be disbur'ded with a liberal tongue.
North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more
That speaks thy words again to do thee harm!
Willo. Tends that thou wouldst speak to the Duke of Hereford?
If it be so, out with it boldly, man;
Quickly mine ear to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good to pity him,
Beretf and gelled of his patrimony.
North. Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne
In him, a royal prince, and many mee
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute.
'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.
Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,
And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fined
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.
Willo. And daily new exactions are devised,
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what: 250
But what, 0' God's name, doth become of this?
North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,
But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his noble ancestors achieved blows:
More hath he spent in peace than they in war.
Ross. The Earl of Wiltshire hath the re-farm.
Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like broken man.
North. Reproach and dissolution hangeth
him.
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish
His burthenous taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.
North. His noble kinsmen: most degene
king!
But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.
Ross. We see the very wreck that we suffer,
And unavailed is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.
North. Not so; even through the hollow of death
I spy life peering: but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.
Willo. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as dost ours.
Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland
We three are but thyself: and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore, be North. Then thus: I have from Port le B a bay
In Brittany, received intelligence
That Harry Duke of Hereford, Rainold
Cobham,
† That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother, Archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramson,
Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton
Francis Quoint.
All those well furnish'd by the Duke of Bret
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of
Are making hither with all due expediency
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore.
Perhaps they had ere this, that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp our drooping country's broken wing
Redeem from breaking pawn the blemish'd
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's g
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post to Ravenspurgh;
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go.
Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to that fear.
Willo. Hold out my horse, and I will fin
there. [Exeunt]

SCENE II. The palace.

Enter QUEEN, BUSHY, and BAGOT.

Busky. Madam, your majesty is too much
You promised, when you parted with the
To lay aside life-harming heaviness
And entertain a cheerful disposition.
KING RICHARD II.

Queen. To please the king I did; to please myself I could; but to do it; yet I know no cause. I should welcome such a guest as grief, bidding farewell to so sweet a guest my sweet Richard: yet again, methinks, as unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb, bending towards me, and my inward soul nothing trembles: at some thing it grieves, than with parting from my lord the king. As each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows, ch shows like grief itself, but is not so; sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears, doth one thing entire to many objects; perspectives, which rightly gazed upon nothing but confusion, ey'd awry inguished form: so your sweet majesty, going awry upon your lord's departure, shapes of grief, more than himself, to wail; ch, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows that it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen, is this lord's departure weep not: more's not seen: it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye, ch for things true weeps things imaginary. It may be so; but yet my inward soul unades me it is otherwise: lowe're it be, not but be said; so heavy sad hough on thinking on no thought I think, es me with heavy nothing faint and shrink. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still derived; someone forefather grief; mine is not so, nothing hath begot my something grief; mething hath the nothing that I grieve: a revision that I do possess; what it is, that is not yet known; what not name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.

Enter Green.

Queen. God save your majesty! and well met, gentlemen: the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland. Why hoist thou so? 'tis better hope he is; his designs crave haste, his haste good hope: wherefore dost thou hope he is not shipp'd? That he, our hope, may have retired his power, driven into despair an enemy's hope, strongly hath set footing in this land: amind'd Bolingbroke repeals himself, with uplifted arms is safe arrived 50. Sprung. Now God in heaven forbid! Ah, madam, 'tis too true: and that is worse, Lord Northumberland, his son young Henry Percy, lords of Ross, Beaumond, and Willoughby, all their powerful friends, are fled to him. Why have you not proclaimed Northumberland all the rest revolted faction traitors? We have: whereupon the Earl of Westmoreland broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship, and all the household servants fled with him.

To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe, and Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir: Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy, and I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother, have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Buck. Despair not, madam. Queen. Who shall hinder me? I will despair, and be at enmity. With cozening hope: he is a flatterer, A parasite, a keeper back of death, who gently would dissolve the bands of life, which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter York.

Queen. Here comes the Duke of York. Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck: O, full of careful business are his looks! Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words. York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts: Comfort's in heaven: and we are on the earth, where nothing lives but crosses, cares and grief. Your husband, he is gone to save far off, whilst others come to make him lose at home: Here am I left to underprop his land, who, weak with age, cannot support myself; now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made: now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

York. He was? Why, so! go all which way it will! The nobles they are fled, the commons they are cold, and will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side. Sirrah, get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloucester; Bid her send me presently a thousand pound: hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship, to-day, as I came by, I called there; but I shall grieve you to report the rest. York. What is't, knave? Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.

York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes comes rushing on this woeful land at once! I know not what to do: I would to God, so my untruth had not provoked him to it, the king had cut off my head with my brother's. What, are there no posts dispatch'd for Ireland? how shall we do for money for these wars? come, sister—cousin, I would say—pray, pardon me. Go, fellow, get thee home, provide some carts and bring away the armour that is there.

Exit Servant.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? If I know how or which way to order these affairs thus thrust disorderly into my hands, never believe me. Both are my kinsmen: the one is my sovereign, whom both my oath and duty bids defend; the other again.
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong’d,
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do. Come, cousin, I’ll Dispose of you.
Gentlemen, go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkeley.
I should to Plashy too;
But time will not permit: all is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven.
[Exeunt York and Queen.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power
Proportional to the enemy
Is all unpossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that’s the wavering commons:
For their love
Lies in their purses, and whose empties them:
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemned.

Bagot. If judgement lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king.

Green. Well, I will for refuge straight to Bristol castle:
The Earl of Wiltshire is already there.

Bushy. Thither will I with you; for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us,
Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.
Will you go along with us?
Bagot. No; I will to Ireland to his majesty.

Farewell: if heart’s presages be not vain,
We three here part that never shall meet again.

Bushy. That’s as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes
Is numbering sands and drinking oceans dry:
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Farewell at once, for once, for all, and ever.

Bushy. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Wilds in Gloucestershire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkeley now?
North. Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire:
These high wild hills and rough uneven ways
Draws out our miles, and makes them wearisome;
And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
But I bethink me what a weary way
From Ravenspurg to Cotswold will be found
In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company,
Which, I protest, hath very much beguiled me
The tediousness and process of my travel:
But theirs is sweetened with the hope to have
The present benefit which I possess;
And hope to joy is little less in joy.
Enter Berkeley.

Wilt. It is my Lord of Berkeley, as I guess.

Ervk. My Lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Wilt. My Lord, my answer is—to Lancaster; I am come to seek that name in England; I must find that title in your tongue, or I make reply to aught you say.

Ervk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning are one title of your honour out:

Wilt. My lord, I come, what lord you will, the most gracious regent of this land, Duke of York, to know what pricks you on the advantage of the absent time fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York attended.

Wilt. I shall not need transport my words by you;

My noble uncle! [Kneels.

Ervk. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee, if duty be deceivable and false.

Wilt. My gracious uncle—

Ervk. Tut, tut! me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle: no traitor's uncle; and that word 'grace' ungracious mouth is but profane, have those banish'd and forbidden legs go'd once to touch a dust of England's ground? hen more 'why?' why have they dared to march my miles upon her peaceful bosom, ting her pale-faced villages with war entation of despised arms?

but thou because the anointed king is hence? foolish boy, the king is left behind, n my loyal bosom lies his power.

I but now the lord of such hot youth hen brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself trod the Black Prince, that young Mars of men, forth the ranks of many thousand French, in how quickly should this arm of mine, prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee ministration to thy fault!

Wilt. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault; and what condition stands it and wherein?

A. Even in condition of the worst degree, rebellion and detested treason: art a banish'd man, and here art come: the expiration of thy time, vying arms against thy sovereign.

Wilt. If I was banish'd, I was banish'd herefore;

I come, I come for Lancaster.

noble uncle, I beseech your grace

Look on my wrongs with an indiff'erent eye:

You are my father, for methinks in you

I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father,

Will you permit that I shall stand condemnda

A wandering vagabond; my rights and royalties

Pluck'd from my arms perforce and given away

To upstart unthrifts? Wherefore was I born?

If that my cousin king be King of England,

It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster.

You have a son, Aumerle, my noble cousin;

Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,

He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,

To rouse his wrongs and chase them to the bay.

I am denied to sue my livery here,

And yet my letters-patents give me leave:

My father's goods are all distraint'd and sold,

And these and all are all amiss employ'd.

What would you have me do? I am a subject,

And I challenge law; attorneys are denied me;

And therefore personally I lay my claim

To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much abused.

Ross. It stands your grace upon to do him right.

Wilt. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this:

I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs

And laboured all I could to do him right;

But in this kind to come, in braving arms,

Be his own carver and cut out his way,

To find out right with wrong, it may not be;

And you that do abet him in this kind

Cherish rebellion and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn his coming is

But for his own; and for the right of that

We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;

And let him ne'er see joy that breaks that oath!

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms:

I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,

Because my power is weak and all ill left:

But if I could, by Him that gave me life,

I would attach you all and make you stoop

Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;

But since I cannot, be it known to you

I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;

Unless you please to enter in the castle

And there repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept:

But we must win your grace to go with us

To Bristol castle, which they say is held

By Bushy, Bagot and their complices,

The caterpillars of the commonwealth,

Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.

York. It may be I will go with you; but yet

I'll pause;

For I am loath to break our country's laws.

Nor friends nor foes, to me welcome you are:

Things past redress are now with me past care.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. A camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury and a Welsh Captain.

Cap. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten days,

And hardly kept our countrymen together,

And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty

Wesham. The king repaseth all his confidence in thee.

Caf. 'Tis thought the king is dead; we will not stay.

The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven;
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad and ruffians dance and leap,
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by rage and war;
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.

Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured Richard their king is dead.

(Exit.

Sal. Ah, Richard, with the eyes of heavy mind
Fall to the base earth from the firmament.

Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe and unrest;
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. (Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. Bristol. Before the castle.

Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Ross, Percy, Willoughby, with Bushy and Green, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.

Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls—
Since presently your souls must part your bodies—
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigured clean:
You have in manner with your sinful hours
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him,
Broke the possession of a royal bed
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul

wrong.

Myself, a prince by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love
Till you did make him misinterpret me,
Have stoo'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispar'd my parks and fell'd my forest woods,
From my own windows torn my household coat,
Razed out my imprese, leaving me no sign,
Save men's opinions and my living blood,
To show the world I am a gentleman.
This and much more, much more than twice all this,
Condemns you to the death. See them deliver'd over

To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me

Than Bolingbroke to England. Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is that heaven will take our souls
And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My Lord Northumberland, see if you dispatch'd.

[Exeunt Northumberland and others with the prison.

Uncle, you say the queen is at your house;
For God's sake, fairly let her be entreated;
Tell her I send to her my kind commends;
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.
York. A gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle. Come, let's away,

To fight with Glendower and his complices:
Awhile to work, and after holiday. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The coast of Wales. A castle.

Drums: flourish and colours. Enter K. Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumer, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barklowingly castle call they this head?

Aum. Yea, my lord. How brooks your good

the air,
After your late tossing on the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well: I live for joy
To stand upon my kingdom once again.
Though rebels wound thee with their hoofs:
As a long-parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meet;
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth
And do thee favours with my royal hands.
Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earl;
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous soul
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way,
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet
Which with usurping steps do trample thee:
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies;
And what will they from thy bosom pluck a flower
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder
Whose double tongue may with a mortal tooth
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords;
This earth shall have a feeling and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellion's arms.

Car. Fear not, my lord: that Power made you king

Hath power to keep you king in spite of all.
The means that heaven yields must be embraced
And not neglected; else, if heaven would,
And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse,
The expect'd means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security, Grows strong and great in substance an other.

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st not Enter Salisbury.

Come, my lord: how far off lies your power? How near nor farther off, my gracious lord.

This weak arm: discomfort guides my tongue. Bids me speak of nothing but despair.

Day too late, I fear me, noble lord. Clouded all thy happy days on earth:

All back yesterday, bid time return,

Thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men!

Day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,

Threw thy joys, friends, fortune and thy state:

All the Welshmen, hearing thouwert dead,

Gone to Bolingbroke, dispersed and fled;

Comfort, my liege: why looks your eye so pale?

Rich. But now the blood of twenty thousand men

Triumph in my face, and they are fled;

Till so much blood there, that even now I am not king:

I not reason to look pale and dead?

Outs that will be safe fly from my side,

Time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Comfort, my liege; remember who you are.

Rich. I had forgot myself: am I not king?

Ke, thou coward majesty! thou sleepest.

At the king's name twenty thousand names?

Arm, my name! a puny subject strikes

My greatness. Look not to the ground,

Vourites of a king: are we not high?

Our thoughts: I know my uncle York

Power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here?
Make dust our paper and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth,
Let our executors and talk of wills:
And yet not so, for what can we bequeath
Save our deposed bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own but death
And that small model of the barren earth
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground
And tell sad stories of the death of kings:
How some have been deposed; some slain in war;
Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed;
Some poison'd by their wives; some sleeping kill'd;
All murder'd: for within the hollow crown
That rounds the mortal temples of a king
Keeps Death his court and there the antic sits,
Scorning his state and grinning at his pomp,
Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
To monarchize, be fear'd and kill'd with looks,
Insulting with self and vain conceit,
As if this flesh which walls about our life
Were brass impregnable, and humour'd thus Comes at the last and with a little pin
Bores through his castle wall, and farewell king!
Cover your heads and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence: throw away respect,
 Tradition, form and ceremonious duty,
For you have but mistook me all this while:
† I live with bread like you, feel want,
Taste grief, need friends: subjected thus,
How can you say to me, I am a king?
Car. My lord, wise men ne'er sit and wait their woes,
But presently present the ways to walk.
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives in your weakness strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself.
Fear, and be slain: no worse can come to fight:
And light and die is death destroying death;
While lingering dying pays servile breath.
Ann. My father hath a power; inquire of him,
And learn to make a body of a limb.
K. Rich. Thou chidest me well: proud Bolingbroke,
I come
To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
This age fit of fear is over-blown;
An easy task it is to win our own.
Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.
Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day:
So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.
I play the torturer, by small and small
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:
Your uncle York is join'd with Bolingbroke,
And all your northern castles yield'd up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.
K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.
Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth [To Aumerle.
Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now? what comfort have we now?
By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingl
That bids me be of comfort any more.
Go to Flint castle: there I'll pine away;
A king, who's slave, shall kingly woo obey.
That power I have, discharge; and let them
To ear the land that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none: let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.
Ann. My liege, one word.
K. Rich. He does me double wrong
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue
Discharge my followers: let them hence away
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Wakes. Before Flint castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, BOLINGBROKE,
YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, Attendants, and Forces.

Bolingb. So that by this intelligence we learn
The Welshmen are dispersed, and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed
With some few private friends upon this coast.
York. The news is very fair and good,
But Richard not far from hence hath hid his head.
North. It would besee the Lord Northumberland
To say 'King Richard: alack the heavy day
When such a sacred king should hide his head!
York. Your grace mistakes; only to be here,
Left I his title out.
York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you; to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.
Bolingb. Mistake not, uncle, further than you should.
York. Take not, good cousin, further than you should,
Lest you mistake the heavens are o'er our head.
Bolingb. I know it, uncle, and oppose not self Against their will. But who comes here?
Enter Percy.

Welcome, Harry: what, will not this castle yield
Percy. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord;
Against thy entrance.
Bolingb. Royally! Why, it contains no king?
Percy. Yes, my good lord, it doth contain a king; King Richard lies Within the limits of your line and stone:
And with him are the Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury,
The Sir Stephen Scroop, besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence: who, I cannot learn.
North. O, belike it is the Bishop of Carlisle.
Bolingb. Noble lords, Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of past
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:
Henry Bolingbroke.
On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's hand:
And sends allegiance and true faith of heart
To his most royal person, hither come
Shall ill become the flower of England's face,
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation and bedew,
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice noble cousin
Harry Bolingbroke doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grandsire's bones,
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head,
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,
His coming hither hath no further scope
Than for his lineal royalties and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His barred steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say thus the king returns:
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.
We do debase ourselves, cousin, do we not,

[To Northumberland.]
To look so poorly and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aun. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words
Till time lend friends and friends their helpful swords.

K. Rich. O God, O God! that e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dreadful banishment
On you proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! O that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now!
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat,

Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aun. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. What must the king do now? must he submit?
The king shall do it: must he be deposed?
The king shall be contented: must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figured goblets for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a palmer's walking-staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little grave, an obscure grave;
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head;
For on my heart they tread now whilst I live;
And buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou wast't, my tender-hearted cousin!
We'll make foul weather with despised tears; 161
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus, to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid,—there lies
Two kinsmen digg'd their graves with weeping eyes.
Would not this ill do well? Well, well, I see 170
I talk but idly, and you laugh at me.
Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.
North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend
To speak with you; may it please you to come down.
K. Rich. Down, down I come; like glistering
Phaethon,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades.
In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down, court!
down, king!
For night-owls shriek where mounting larks should sing.
Boling. What says his majesty?
North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard and his attendants below.
Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.
[He kneels down.
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had my heart might feel your love
Than my unpleasant eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your knee be low.
Boling. My gracious lord, I come for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours,
and all.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.
K. Rich. Well you deserve: they well deserve to have,
That know the strong'st and surest way to get.
Uncle, give me your hands: nay, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir,
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;
For do we must what force will have us do.
Set on towards London, cousin, is it so?
Boling. Yea, my good lord.
K. Rich. Then I must not say n
[Flourish. Exeunt

SCENE IV. Langley. The DUKE OF YorK's garden.

Enter the Queen and two Ladies.
Queen. What sport shall we devise here
this garden,
To drive away the heavy thought of care?
Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.
Queen. *Twill make me think the world is fit
of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias.
Lady. Madam, we'll dance.
Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport—
Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.
Queen. Of sorrow or of joy?
Lady. Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither, girl:
For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have I need not to repeat;
And what I want it boots not to complain.
Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well that you hast cans
But thou shouldst please me better, wouldst the wield.
Lady. I could wield, madam, would it do
y good.
Queen. And I could sing, would weeping me good,
And never borrow any tear of thee.

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.
But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.
My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They'll talk of state; for every one doth so
Against a change; woe it forerun with woe.
[Queen and Ladies reti
Gard. Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricots!
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight
Give some supportance to the bending twigs.
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, which without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.
Serv. Why should we in the compass of a plot
Keep law and form and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate,
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her fruit-trees all unpruned, her hedges ruin'd
Her knots disorder'd and her wholesome herb
Swarming with caterpillars?
Gard.
Hold thy peace:
KING RICHARD II.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Westminster Hall.

Enter, as to the Parliament, Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, Surrey, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and another Lord, Herald, Officers, and Bagot.

Boling. Call forth Bagot.

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death,
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bagot. Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dead time when Gloucester's death was plotted,
I heard you say, 'Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court
As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head?'
Amongst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how blest this land would be
In this your cousin's dear.

Aum. Princes and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man?

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chasiment?
Either I must, or have mine honour sol'd
With the attainer of his slanderous tongues.
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest,
And will maintain what thou hast said is false
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear; thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence that hath moved me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathy,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:
By that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spakest it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death.
If thou deny'st it twenty times, thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou darest not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true
In this appeal as thou art all unjust;
And that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing: seize it, if thou darest.

Aum. An I if I do not, my hands rot off
And never brandish more revengeful steel...
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Another Lord. I task the earth to the like,
Forsworn Aumerle;
And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be holloa'd in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun: there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou darest.

Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw
At all:
I have a thousand spirits in one breast,
To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater, I do remember
Well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitz. 'Tis very true: you were in presence then;
And you can witness with me this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself
Is true.

Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy!
That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge
Till thou the lie-giver and that lie do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull:
In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn; 70
Engage it to the trial, if thou darest.

Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse?
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say he lies,
And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.
As I intend to thrive in this new world,
Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
To execute the noble duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage,
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd, to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage
Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restored again
To all his lands and signories: when he's return'd,
Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial. 90
Car. That honourable day shall never seen.
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ in glorious Christian field,
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens;
And toil'd with works of war, retired himself
To Italy; and there at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?
Car. As surely as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom
Of good old Abraham! Lords apppellants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.

York. Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee

From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand: 100
Ascend his throne, descending now from him;
And long live Henry, fourth of that name!

Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marry, God forbid!
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeming me to speak the truth.
Would God that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard! then true noblesse would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.

What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject
Thieves are not judged but they are by to hear
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy-elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judged by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, forfend it, Go
That in a Christian climate souls refined
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed
In peace to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by God, thus boldly for his king.

My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call king
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
And if you crown him, let me prophesy:
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act; 110
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin and kind with kind confound.
Disorder, horror, fear and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls.
O, if you raise this house against this house,
It will the woefullest division prove
That ever fell upon this cursed earth.
Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child, child's children, cry against you
"woe,
North. Well have you argued, sir; and,
Of capital treason we arrest you here.
My Lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the common suit.

Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. [Exit
Boling. Lords, you that here are under arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer.
Little are we beholding to your love,
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter York, with Richard, and Officers bearing the regalia.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a kin
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs:
Committed by your person and your followers
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily deposed.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weaved-up folly? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee in so fair a troop
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There shouldst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,
Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven:
Nay, all of you that stand and look upon,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth bate myself,
Though some of you with Pilate wash your hands
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

North. My lord, dispatch; read o'er these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:
And yet salt water blinds them not so much
But they can see a sort of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given here my soul's consent
To undek the pompous body of a king;
Made glory base and sovereignty a slave,
Proud majesty a subject, state a peasant.

North. My lord.—

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man,
Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title,
No, not that name was given me at the font,
But 'tis usurp'd: alack the heavy day,
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself!
O that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water-drops!
Good king, great king, and yet not greatly good,
An if my word be sterling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror hither straight,
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you and fetch a lookingglass.

North. Read o'er this paper while the glass doth come.

K. Rich. Fiend, thou torment'st me ere I come to hell!

Boling. Urge it no more, my Lord Northumberland.

North. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed
Where all my sins are writ, and that's myself.

Re-enter Attendant, with a glass.

Give me the glass, and therein will I read,
No deeper wrinkles yet? hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? O flattering glass,
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me! Was this face the face
That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? was this the face
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Was this the face that faced so many follies,
And was at last out-faced by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face;
As brittle as the glory is the face;
[Dashes the glass against the ground.
For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.
Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport, 290
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.
Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your face.
K. Rich. Say that again.
The shadow of my sorrow! 'a! let's see:
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of laments
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief
That swells with silence in the tortured soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, my
king,
For thy great bounty, that not only givest
Me cause to wail but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?
Boling. Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich. 'Fair cousin'? I am greater than a king:
For when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects: being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.
Boling. Yet ask.
K. Rich. And shall I have?
Boling. You shall.
K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.
Boling. Whither?
K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.
Boling. Go, some of you convey him to the Tower.
K. Rich. O, good! convey? conveyers are you all,
That rise thus nimly by a true king's fall.
[Exeunt King Richard, some Lords, and a Guard.
Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves. 320
[Exeunt all except the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Aumerle.
Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.
Car. The woe's to come; the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day as sharp as they were thorn.
Ann. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?
Abbot. My lord,
Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To burry mine intents, but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise. 330
I see your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow and your eyes of tears:
Come home with me to supper; and I 'll lay
A plot shall show us all a merry day.  [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. London. A street leading to Tower.
Enter Queen and Ladies.
Queen. This way the king will come; that
the way
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
To whose flat bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke;
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.
Enter Richard and Lords.
But soft, but see, or rather do see,
My fair rose wither: yet look up, behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tear.
Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand,
Thou map of honour, thou King Richard's son!
And not King Richard; thou most beautiful!
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodged in the
When triumph is become an alehouse guest?
K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, not so,
To make my end too sudden: learn, good so-
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awakened, the truth of what we are
Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim Necessity, and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to Fra
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken do Queen. What, is my Richard both in sh and mind
Transform'd and weaken'd? hath Bolingbdeposèd
Thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
The lion dying thrusteth forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with r
To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility.
Which art a lion and a king of beasts?
K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if au
but beasts,
I had been still a happy king of men.
Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence
France:
Think I am dead and that even here thou tak
As from my death-bed, thy last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire
With good old folks and let them tell thee tal
Of woeful ages long ago betid;
And ere thou bid good night, to quit their gri
Tell thou the lamentable tale of me
And send the hearers weeping to their beds;
For why, the senseless brands will sympathiz
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue
And in compassion weep the fire out;
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-bla
For the deposing of a rightful king.
Enter Northumberl and others.
North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke changed;
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.
When weeping made you break the story off,
Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgovern'd hands from windows' tops
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course, to Whilst all tongues cried 'God save thee, Bolingbreak!'

You would have thought the very windows spoke,
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage, and that all the walls
With painted imagery had said at once
'Jesus preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!'
Whilst he, from the one side to the other turning,
Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespeak them thus: 'I thank you, countrymen;
And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alack, poor Richard! where rode he the whilst?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-graced actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
Did scowl on gentle Richard; no man cried 'God save him!'

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home:
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience,
That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events,
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honour I for aye allow.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was;
But that is lost for being Richard's friend,
And, madam, you must call him Rutland now:
I am in parliament pledge for his truth
And lasting fealty to the new made king.

Enter Aumerle.

Duch. Welcome, my son: who are the violets
now
That strew the green lap of the new come spring?
Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care
not:
God knows I had as lief be none as one.

York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of time,

What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent not, I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?

Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.
Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.
York. No matter, then, who see it: I will be satisfied; let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me: It is a matter of small consequence, 6r Which for some reasons I would not have seen.
York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear,— 70
Duch. What should you fear? 'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into For gay apparel 'gainst the triumph day.
York. Bound to himself! what doth he with a bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool. Boy, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it. 70 York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say. (He plucks it out of his bosom and reads it.)
Duch. What is the matter, my lord?
York. Ho! who is within there?

Enter a Servant.

Now, by mine honour, by my life, by my troth, I will appeach the villain.

Duch. What is the matter? York. Peace, foolish woman. 80 Duch. I will not peace. What is the matter, Aumerle? Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more Than my poor life must answer.
Duch. Thy life answer! York. Bring me my boots: I will unto the king.

Re-enter Servant with boots.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do? Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own? Have we more sons? or are we like to have? Is not my teeming date drunk up with time? And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age, And rob me of a happy mother's name? Is he not like thee? is he not thine own? York. Thou fond mad woman, Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy? A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament, And interchangeably set down their hands, To kill the king at Oxford.
Duch. He shall be none; 99 We'll keep him here: then what is that to him? York. Away, fond woman! were he twenty times my son, I would appeach him.
Duch. Hadst thou groan'd for him As I have done, thou wouldst be more pitiful But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect That I have been disloyal to thy bed, And that he is a bastard, not thy son: Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind He is as like thee as a man may be, Not like to me, or any of my kin, And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman.
Duch. After, Aumerle! mount thee upon horse; Spur post, and get before him to the king, And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee. I'll not be long behind; though I be old, I doubt not but to ride as fast as York: And never will I rise up from the ground Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee. Away! gone! [Exit.

Scene III. A royal palace.

Enter Bolingbroke, Percy, and other Lords.
Boling. Can no man tell me of my unhonourable son? 'Tis full three months since I did see him last. If any plague hang over us, 'tis he: I would to God, my lords, he might be found. Inquire at London, amongst the taverns ther For there, they say, he daily doth frequent, With unrestrained loose companions, Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes And beat our watch, and rob our passengers Which he, young wanton and effeminate boy, Takes on the point of honour to support: Takes on the point of honour to support.
Percy. My lord, some two days since I was in the prince, And told him of those triumphs held at Oxford. Boling. And what said the gallant? Percy. His answer was, he would unto stews, And from the commonest creature pluck a gift. And wear it as a favour; and with that He would unhouse the lustiest challenger. Boling. As dissolve as desperate; yet they both I see some sparks of better hope, which years May happily bring forth. But who comes? Enter Aumerle.

Aum. Where is the king? Boling. What means our cousin, that he so looks So wildly? Aum. God save your grace! I do bear your majesty, To have some conference with your grace at Oxford. Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave me here alone. [Exit Percy and Lords.

What is the matter with our cousin now? Aum. For ever may my knees grow to earth, My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth. Unless a pardon ere I rise or speak. Boling. Intended or committed was this? If on the first, how heinous is it be, To win thy after-love I pardon thee. Aum. Then give me leave that I may the key, no man enter till my tale be done.

Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech: For ever will I walk upon my knees, and never see day that the happy seers, Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy, By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers I bend my knee.

York. Against them both my true joints bended be.

Ill mayst thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!

Duch. Pleadeth he in earnest? look upon his face;

His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast.

He prays but faintly and would be denied;
We pray with heart and soul and all beside:
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
That mercy which true prayer ought to have.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. Nay, do not say, 'stand up';
Say, 'pardon' first, and afterwards 'stand up.'

An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach, 'Pardon' should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say, 'pardon,' king; let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like 'pardon' for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king; say, 'pardonnez moi.'

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon to destroy?

Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord;
That set'st the word itself against the word!

Speak 'pardon' as 'tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak; set thy tongue there;
Or in thy plebeious heart plant thou thine ear;
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee 'pardon' to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand;
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear; speak it again;
Twice saying 'pardon' doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my heart

I pardon him.

Duch. A god on earth thou art.

Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law and the abbott,

With all the rest of that consorted crew,
Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.

Good uncle, help to order several powers
To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are;
They shall not live within this world, I swear,
But I will have them, if I once know where.
Uncle, farewell: and, cousin too, adieu:
Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.

Duch. Come, my old son: I pray God make thee new.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. The same.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake,
'Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?' Was it not so?
Ser. These were his very words.
Exton. 'Have I no friend?' quoth he; he spake it twice,
And urged it twice together, did he not?
Ser. He did.
Exton. And speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;
As who should say, 'I would thou wert the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart,'
Meaning the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go: to I am the king's friend, and will rid his foes.

[Exeunt.

Scene V. Pomfret castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
This prison where I live unto the world:
And for because the world is populous
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul,
My soul the father; and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world,
In humours like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd
With squabbles and do set the world itself
Against the word:
As thus, 'Come, little ones,' and then again,
'It is as hard to come as for a camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's eye.'
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely wonders; how these vain weak nails
May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls,
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars
Who sitting in the stocks refuse their shame,
That many have and others must sit there;
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortunes on the back
Of such as have before endured the like.
Thus play I in one person many people.
And none contented: sometimes am I king;
Then treatings make me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again: and by and by
Think that I am unknight'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing: but whate'er I be,
Nor I nor any man that but man is

With nothing shall be pleased, till he be ease
Ha, ha! keep time: how sour sweet music!
When time is broke and no proportion kept
So is it in the music of men's lives.
And here have I the daintiness of ear
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But for the concord of my state and time
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me
For now hath time made me his numb' clock:
My thoughts are minutes; and with sighs
Their watches on unto mine eyes, the out watch,
Whereunto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now sir, the sound that tells what hour it is
Are clamorous groans, which strike upon my heart.
Which is the bell: so sighs and tears go
Show minutes, times, and hours: but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the green;
This music made me; let it sound no more.
For though it have help madmen to their wits
In me it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter a Groom of the Stable.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What art thou? and how comest thou hither?
Where no man never comes but that sad do
That brings me food to make misfortune live.
When I was a poor groom of thy stable
When thou wert king; who, travelling to York,
With much ado at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometimes royal master's
O, how yeart'd my heart when I beheld
In London streets, that coronation-day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary,
That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dress'd
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Te gentle friend,
How went he under him?

Groom. So proudly as if he disdained

K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke

Groom. That jade hath eat bread from my royal hands.

This hand hath made him proud with cold

K. Rich. Would he be not troublesome? would he not fall
Since pride must have a fall, and break this
Of that proud man that did usurp his back
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be awed by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse.
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurr'd, gall'd and tired by jaunting broke.

M. Quick. Unfurled a blood-red standard!
Enter Keeper, with a dish.

Rich. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

oom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit.

Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

oom. My lord, will'lt please you to fall to?

Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do. 99

oom. My lord, I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exon who lately came from the king, commands contrary. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster and thee! me is stale, and I am weary of it. [Beats the keeper.

Rich. Help, help, help!

Enter Exton and Servants, armed.

Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault? in thy own hand yields thy death's instrument, natching an axe from a Servant and killing him. rod, and fill another room in hell. He kills another. Then Exton strikes him down. hand shall burn in never-quenching fire. stagers thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land. ny, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high; it my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die. [Dies. ton. As full of valour as of royal blood: have I spill'd O would the deed were good! ow the devil, that told me I did well, that this deed is chronicled in hell. dead king to the living king I'll bear: hence the rest, and give them burial here. [Exeunt.

Scene VI. Windsor Castle.

rich. Enter Bolingbroke, York, with other Lords, and Attendants.

ing. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear the rebels have consumed with fire own of Cicester in Gloucestershire; hether they be ta'en or slain we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

th. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness.

The next news is, I have to London sent the heads of Oxford, Salisbury, Blunt, and Kent: The manner of their taking may appear At large discoursed in this paper here. Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains; And to thy worth will add right worthy gains. Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London the heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Seely, Two of the dangerous sorted traitors That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow. Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot; Right noble is thy merit, well I wit.

Enter Percy, and the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, Abbot of West- minister, With clog of conscience and sour melancholy Hath yielded up his body to the grave; But here is Carlisle living, to abide Thy kingly doom and sentence of his pride. Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom: Choose out some secret place, some reverend room, More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life; So as thou livest in peace, die free from strife: For though mine enemy thou hast ever been, High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with persons bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies The mightiest of thy greatest enemies, Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought. Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought A deed of slander with thy fatal hand Upon my head and all this famous land. Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed. Boling. They love not poison that do poison need, Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead, I hate the murderer, love him murdered. The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour, But neither my good word nor princely favour: With Cain go wander thorough shades of night, And never show thy head by day nor light. Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe, That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow: Come, mourn with me for that I do lament, And put on sullen black incontinent: I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land, To wash this blood off from my guilty hand: March sadly after; grace my mournings here; In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

Scene I. London. The palace.

Enter King Henry, Lord John of Lancaster, the Earl of Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

King. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for vouched peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenced in strands afar remote.

No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
together
All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery.

Shall now, in mutual well-beseeming ranks,
March all one way and be no more opposed
Against acquaintance, kindred and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impressed and engaged to fight,
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy;
Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' womb
To chase these pagans in those holy fields
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose now is twelve month old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meet not now. Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree

In forwarding this dear expedition.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in que
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight: when all athwart there came
A post from Wales loaden with heavy news
Whose worst was, that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman ta
A thousand of his people butchered;
Upon whose dead corpse there was such mis
Such beastly shameless transformation,
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse
Uncertain of the issue any way.

King. Here is a dear, a true industrious
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome
The Earl of Douglas is discomfited:
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty kn
Balk'd in their own blood did Sir Walter se
Fal. No, by my truth, not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

Prince. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called thieves of the day's beauty: let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

Prince. Thou sayest well, and it holds well too; for the fortune of us that are the moon's men doth ebb and flow like the sea, being governed, as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing 'Lay by' and spent with crying 'Bring in,' now in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallow.

Fal. By the Lord, thou sayest true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

Prince. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag! what, in thy quips and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

Prince. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning many a time and oft.

Prince. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

Prince. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so used it that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent—But, I prithee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobbed as it is with the rusty curb of old father antic the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

Prince. No; thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

Prince. Thou judgest false already: I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

Prince. For obtaining of suits?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat or a lugged bear.

Prince. Or an old lion, or a lover's lute.

Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

Prince. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes and art indeed the most comparative, rascalliest, sweet young prince. But, Hal, I prithee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir, but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely, but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

Prince. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it. 100

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration and art indeed able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal; God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over: by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain: I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

Prince. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. 'Zounds, where thou wilt, lad; 'tis I'll make one: an I do not, call me villain and baffe thee; from praying to purse-taking.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation.

Enter Poins.

Pois. Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried 'Stand' to a true man.

Prince. Good morrow, Ned.

Pois. Good morrow, sweet Hal. What says Monsieur Remorse? what says Sir John Sack and Sugar? Jack! how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg?

Prince. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain: for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs: he will give the devil his due.

Pois. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

Prince. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil.

Pois. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill! there are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have vizards for you all; you have horses for yourselves: Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester: I have a bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as ship. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged.

Fal. Hear ye, Yedward; if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Pois. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou camest not of the blood royal, if thouarest not stand for shillings.

Prince. Well then, once in my days I'll madcap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

Prince. Well, come what will, I'll tarry home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, with thou art king.

Prince. I care not.

Pois. Sir John, I prithee, leave the prate and me alone: I will lay him down such rea for this adventure that he shall go.

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of suasion and him the ears of profiting, that thou speakest may move and what he hears be believed, that the true prince may, for reation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor at of the time want countenance. Farewell: shall find me in Eastcheap.

Fal. Farewell, thou latter spring! fare All-hallowsummer! [Exit Fal.

Pois. Now, my good sweet honey lord, with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto and Gadshill shall rob those men that have already waylaid; yourself and I will be there; and when they have the booty, if and I do not rob them, cut this head off from shoulders.

Prince. How shall we part with them in ing forth?

Pois. Why, we will set forth before or the, and appoint them a place of mee wherein it is at our pleasure to fail, and then they adventure upon the exploit themse which they shall have no sooner achieved we'll set upon them.

Prince. Yes, but 'tis like that they will us by our horses, by our habits and by an other appointment, to be ourselves.

Pois. Tut! our horses they shall not I'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we change after we leave them: and, sirrah, cases of buckram for the nonce, to intimate noted outward garments.

Prince. Yes, but I doubt they will hard for us.

Pois. Well, for two of them, I know the be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back for the third, if he fight longer than he see son, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of it will be, the incomprehensible lies that this fat rogue will tell us when we meet at suf how thirty, at least, he fought with; what what blows, what extremities he endured in the reproof of this lies the jest.

Prince. Well, I'll go with thee: provide all things necessary and meet me to-morrow in Eastcheap; there I'll sup. Farewell.

Pois. Farewell, my lord.

Prince. I know you all, and will awhil hold

The unyoked humour of your idleness:

Yet herein will I imitate the sun,

Who doth permit the base contagious cloud To smoother up his beauty from the world,

Thee when he please again to be himself, Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at breaking through the soul and ugly mists vapours that did seem to strangle him, all the year were playing holidays,
sport would be as tedious as to work;
it when they seldom come, they wish'd for come,
d nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
when this loose behaviour I throw off
d pay the debt I never promised,
how much better I am, so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
I did like bright metal on a sullen ground,
y reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
all show more goodly and attract more eyes and that which hath no foil to set it off.
I so offend, to make offence a skill;
deeming time when men think least I will.

Scene III. London. The palace.

Sir the King, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspur, Sir Walter Blunt, with others.

King: My blood hath been too cold and temperate apt to stir at these indignities,
d you have found me; for accordingly
I tread upon my patience: but be sure still from henceforth rather be myself, shy and to be fear'd, than my condition;
hath hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
d therefore lost that title of respect
the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.

Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves
e scourge of greatness to be used on it;
d that same greatness too which our own hands
we holp to make so portly.

Vorth. My lord,—

King: Worcester, get thee gone; for I do see anger and disobediency in thine eye:
that presence is too bold and peremptory,
d majesty might never yet endure
e moody frontier of a servant brow.

have good leave to leave us: when we need ur use and counsel, we shall send for you.

were about to speak.

Vorth. Yes, my good lord.

one prisoners in thy highness name de manded,
ich Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,
ere, as he says, not with such strength denied is deliver'd to your majesty:
her envy, therefore, or misprision guilty of this fault and not my son.

Yet. My liege, I did deny no prisoners.
I remember, when the fight was done,
then I was dry with rage and extreme toil,
careless and faint, leaning upon my sword, me there a certain lord, neat, and trimly
sh like a bridegroom; and his chin new reap'd would like a stubble-land at harvest-home;
was perfumed like a milliner.

And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose and took't away again,
Who therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff; and still he smiled and talk'd,
And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them untutored knaves, unmanners,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; amongst the rest, demanded
My prisoners in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold.
To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answer'd negligently I know not what,
He should, or he should not; for he made me mad
To see him shine so brisk and smell so sweet
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman
Of guns and drums and wounds,—God save the mark!

And telling me the sovereignst thing on earth
Was parma-ceti for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
This villainous salt-petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and but for those vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirec'tly, as I said;
And I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord,
Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said
To such a person and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
May reasonably die and never rise
To do him wrong or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

King. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso and exception,
That we at our own charge shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath wilfullly betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against that great magician, damn'd Glendower
Whose daughter, as we hear, the Earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then,
Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer! He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war: to prove that true
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition to this band,
He did confound the best part of an hour

In changing hardment with great Glendower:
Three times they breathed and three times did they drink,
Upon agreement, of swift Severn’s flood;
Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Bloodstained with these valiant combatants.
Never did base and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then let not him be slander’d with revolt.

King. Thou dost believe him, Percy, thou dost believe him;
He never did encounter with Glendower:
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. My Lord Northumberland,
We license your departure with your son.
Send us your prisoners, or you will hear of it.
[Exeunt King Henry, Blunt, and train.

Hot. An if the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them: I will after straight
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
Albeit I make a hazard of my head.

North. What, drunk with cholery? stay and pause awhile:
Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter Worcester.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer!
‘Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part I’ll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop in the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high in the air as this unhankful king,
As this ingrate and canker’d Bolingbrook.

North. Brother, the king hath made your

Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was gone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoers;
And when I urged the ransom once again
Of my wife’s brother, then his cheek look’d pale,
And on my face he turn’d an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Wor. I cannot blame him: was not he proclaim’d
By Richard that dead is the next of blood?

North. He was; I heard the proclamation:
And then it was when the unhappy king,—
Whose wrongs in us God pardon!—did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition;
From whence he intercepted did return
To be deposed and shortly murdered.

Wor. And for whose death we in the world’s wide mouth
Live scandalized and foully spoken of.

Hot. But, soft, I pray you; did King Richard
then
Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
Heir to the crown?

Now. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his con-

king,

That wish’d him on the barren mountains star
But shall it be, that you, that set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murderous subornation, shall it be,
That you a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means,
The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather.
O, pardon me that I descend so low,
To show the line and the predicament
Wherein you range under this subtle king;
Shall it for shame be spoken in these days,
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility and power
Did gage them both in an unjust behalf,
As both of you—God pardon it!—have done,
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbrook,
And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool’d, discarded and shook off
By him for whom these shames ye underwent?
No; yet time serves wherein you may redeem
Your banish’d honours and restore yourselves
Into the good thoughts of the world again,
Revenge the jeering and disdain’d contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes to you
Even with the bloody payment of your deaths
Therefore, I say,—

Wor. Peace, cousin, say no more;
And now I will unclasp a secret book,
And to your quick-conceiving discourses
I’ll read you matter deep and dangerous,
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o’er-walk a current roaring loud
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Hot. If he fall in, good night! or sink
away,
Send danger from the cast unto the west,
So honour cross it from the north to south,
And let them grapple: O, the blood more stir
To rouse a lion than to start a hare!

North. Imagination of some great exploit
Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By heaven, methinks it were an ex-leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-faced mo
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the grous
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks;
So he that doth redeem her thence might wear
Without corvial all her dignities:
But out upon this half-faced fellowship!

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures he
But not the form of what he should attend.
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Sc
That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I’ll keep them all;
By God, he shall not have a Scot of them;
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not I’ll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away
And lend no ear unto my purposes.
ose prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat: I said he would not ransom Mortimer; and my tongue to speak of Mortimer: 220 I will find him when he lies asleep, in his ear I'll holla 'Mortimer!'

I have a starling shall be taught to speak thing but 'Mortimer,' and give it him, keep his anger still in motion.

Vor. Hear you, cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy, re how to gail and pinch this Bolingbroke: that same sword-and-buckler Prince of Wales, 230 that I think his father loves him not; would be glad he met with some mischance, could have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Vor. Farewell, kinsman; I'll talk to you when you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool thou to break into this woman's mood, gling thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourged with rods, tumbled and stung with pismires, when I hear this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

Richard's time,—what do you call the place?—slague upon it, it is in Gloucestershire; as where the madcap duke his uncle kept, uncle York; where I first bow'd my knee to this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke—look! en you and he came back from Ravenspurg.

North. At Berkley castle.

Hot. You say true:

250 y, what a candy deal of courtesy a fawning greyhound then did proffer me! 'O, 'when his infant fortune came to age,' 'gentle Harry Percy,' and 'kind cousin,' he devil take such cozeners! God forgive me! uncle, tell your tale; I have done.

Vor. Nay, if you have not, to it again; will stay your leisure.

Hot. I have done, it faith.

Vor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners. Iver them up without their ransom straight, I make the Douglas's son your only mean 260 powers in Scotland; which, for divers reasons ich I shall send you written, be assured, easily be granted. You, my lord, [To Northumberland.

ir son in Scotland being thus employ'd, il secretly into the bosom creep a same noble prelate, well beloved, archbishop.

of. Of York, is it not?

True; who bears hard 270 brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop. eak not this in estimation, that I think might be, but what I know unlimited, plotted and set down, only stays but to behold the face hat occasion that shall bring it on.

of. I smell it: upon my life, it will do well.

North. Before the game is afoot, thou still let'st slip.

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot:

And then the power of Scotland and of York, 280 To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed, To save our heads by raising of a head; For, bear ourselves as even as we can, The king will always think him in our debt, And think we think ourselves unsatisfied, Till he hath found a time to pay us home: And see already how he doth begin.

To make us strangers to his looks of love. 290

Hot. He does, he does: we'll be revenged on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell: no further go in this Than I by letters shall direct your course.

When time is ripe, which will be suddenly, I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer; Where you and Douglas and our powers at once, As I will fashion it, shall happily meet, To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms, Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu! O, let the hours be short Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport! [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. Rochester. An inn yard.

Enter a Carrier with a lantern in his hand.

First Car. Heigh-ho! an it be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

Ost. [Within] Anon, anon.

First Car. I prithee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; poor jade, is wrong in the withers out of all cess.

Enter another Carrier.

Sec. Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots: this house is turned upside down since Robin Ostler died.

First Car. Poor fellow, never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

Sec. Car. I think this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.

First Car. Like a tench! by the mass, there is ne'er a king christen could be better bit than I have been since the first cock. 20

Sec. Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a Jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a louch.

First Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged! come away.

Sec. Car. I have a gammon of bacon and two rases of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross.

First Car. God's body! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved. What, ostler! A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An 'twere not as good deed as drink, to break the pate on thee, I am a very villain. Come, and be hanged! hast no faith in thee?

Enter Gadhill.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?
First Car. I think it be two o'clock.
Gads. I prithee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.
First Car. Nay, by God, soft; I know a trick worth two of that, I faith.
Gads. I pray thee, lend me thine.
Sec. Car. Ay, when? canst tell? Lend me thy lantern, quoth he? marry, I'll see thee hanged first.
Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?
Sec. Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee. Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge.

[Excus Carrier.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!
Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse.
Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from labouring; thou layst the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, Master Gadhill. It holds current that I told you yesternight: there's a franklin in the wild of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold; I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper: a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently.
Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give them this neck.
Gads. No, so, I'll none of it: I pray thee, keep that for the hangman; for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallowes; for if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he is no starving. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot-land rakers, no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility and tranquillity, burgomasters and great onyers, such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray; and yet, 'zounds, I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or rather, not pray to her, but pray on her, for they ride up and down on her and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?
Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure: we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.
Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have share in our purchase, as I am a true man.
Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you a false thing.
Gads. Go to; 'homo' is a common name all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave.

[Exeunt.

Scene II. The highway, near Gadhill.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter: I have remov Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a guzzled vellum.
Prince. Stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Poins. Poins! Poins, and be hanged! Poins.
Prince. Peace, ye fat-kidnapped rascal! w a brawling dast thou keep!
Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?
Prince. He is walked up to the top of hill: I'll go seek him.
Fal. I am accused to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse, tied him I know not where. If I travel but a foot by the squier further afoot, I shall break wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I 'scape hanging for killing a rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly, these two and twenty years, and yet I bewitched with the rogue's company. If rascal have not given me medicines to make love, I'll be hanged; it could not be else have drunk medicines. Poins! Hal! a pla upon you both! Bardolph! Pete! I'll staffe I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as a deed as drink, to turn true man and to be these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of une ground is three-score and ten miles afoot with, and the stoney-hearted villains know it enough: a plague upon it when thieves cannot true one to another! [They whistle.] W! A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged!
Prince. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down! chine ear close to the ground and list if thou hear the tread of travellers.
Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own! so far afoot again for all the coin in thy fat exchequer. What a plague mean ye to coll thus?
Prince. Thou liest; thou art not colted, art uncolted.
Fal. I prithee, good Prince Hal, help me my horse, good king's son.
Prince. Out, ye rogue! shall I be your ost?
Fal. Go, hang thyself in thine own heir parent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peech for An I have not ballads made on you all and so to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my point when a jest is so forward, and afoot too! I that Enter Gadshill, Bardolph and Peto with him.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Peto. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice.

Fal. What, Bardolph, what news?

Bard. Case ye, case ye: on with your vizards: 'tis money of the king's coming down the road, 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, ye rogue; 'tis going to the king's arm.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

Prince. Sirs, you four shall front them in the row lane: Ned Poins and I will walk lower: they 'scape from your encounter, then they hit on us.

Peto. How many be there of them?

Gads. Some eight or ten.

Fal. 'Zounds, will they not rob us?

Prince. What, a coward, Sir John Paunch?

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your father; but yet no coward, Hal.

Prince. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Poins. Sirrach Jack, thy horse stands behind a hedge: when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be aged.

Prince. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by: stand close.

[Exeunt Prince and Poins.]

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his le, I: every man to his business.

Enter the Travellers.

First Trav. Come, neighbour: the boy shall id our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot, and ease our legs.

Thiev: Stand!

Travellers. Jesus bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the vile throats: ah! wherefore cattepillars! backslid knaves! they hate us youth: down with them: see them.

Travellers. O, we are undone, both we and rs for ever!

Fal. Hang ye, gorbelled knaves, are ye un-No, ye fat chuffs; I would your store here! On, bacon, on! What, ye knaves! ung men must live. You are grandjurs, are? we'll jure ye, 'faith.

[Here they rob them and bind them. Exeunt.

Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Prince. The thieves have bound the true men. ow could thou and I rob the thieves and go errily to London, it would be argument for a ek, laughter for a month and a good jest for.

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

Enter the Thieves again.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then horse before day. An the Prince and Poins: not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirr: there's no more valour in that Poins than a wild-duck.

Prince. Your money!

Poins. Villains!

[As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them; they all run away; and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booby behind them.]

Prince. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:

The thieves are all scatter'd and possess'd with fear.

So strongly that they dare not meet each other;

Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death,

And lards the lean earth as he walks along:

Were 't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roars!

[Exeunt.

Scene III. Warkworth castle.

Enter Hotspur, solus, reading a letter.

Hot. 'But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.' He could be contented: why is he not, then? In respect of the love he bears our house: he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous,'—why, that's certain; 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named uncertain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.' Say you so, say you so? Say unto you again, you are a shallow cowardly bind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York commends the plot and the general course of the action. 'Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York and Owen Glendower? is there not besides the Douglas? have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month? and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skim milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O, my good lord, why are you thus alone?

For what offence have I this fortnight been

A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed?

Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't that takes from thee

Thy stomach, pleasure and thy golden sleep?

Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth,
And start so often when thou sit'st alone!
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks;
And given my treasures and my rights of thee
To thick-eyed musing and cursed melancholy?
In thy faint slumber I by thee have watch'd, 50
And heard thee murnur tales of iron wars;
Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed;
Or Courage! to the field! And thou hast talk'd of
Of sweets and retirements, of trenches, tents,
Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets,
Of basiliks, of cannon, culverin,
Of prisoners' ransom and of soldiers slain,
And all the currents of a heathy sight.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war
And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep, 60
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow,
Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream;
And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
Such as we see when men restrain their breath
On some great sudden hest. O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Enter Servant.

Is Williams with the packet gone?

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

Serv. It is my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne.

Well, I will back him straight: o' esperance!
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape! 80
A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen
As you are toss'd with. In faith,
I'll know your business, Harry, that I will.
I fear my brother Mortimer doth stir
About his title, and hath sent for you
To tune his enterprise: but if you go,—

Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you paraquito, answer me
Directly unto this question that I ask:
In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry, 99
An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away, Away, you trifler! Love! I love thee not,
I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world
To play with mamets and to tilt with lips:
We must have bloody noses and crack'd crowns,
And pass them current too. God's me, my horse!
What say'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have
with me?

Lady. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?
Well, do not then; for since you love me not, 100
I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no.

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride?
And when I am o' horseback, I will swear
I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate;

I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout:
This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.
I know you wise, but yet no farther wise
Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are,
But yet a woman: and for secrecy,
No lady closer: for I well believe
Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate.

Lady. How! so far?

Hot. Not an inch further. But hark ye, Kate:

Whither I go, thither shall you go too;
To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you.
Will this content you, Kate?

Lady. It must of force.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The Boat's-Head Tavern, Eastcheap.

Enter the Prince, and Poins.

Prince. Ned, priethee, come out of that room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

Prince. With three or four loggeera amongst three or four score hogheads. I ha sounded the very base-string of humidity. Sir!
I am a sworn brother to a leash of drawers: a man can call them all by their christen names, Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it all upon their salvation, that though I be but Prin of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy:
that I will make you flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falsta
t But a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, the Lord, so they call me, and when I am kin of England, I shall command all the good lads Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dye scarlet; and when you breathe in your watern they cry 'hem!' and bid you play it off. I conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarte of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker his own language during my life. I tell the Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou we not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,— sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee the pennyworth of sugar, clapped even now into m hand by an under-sinker, one that never spak other English in his life than 'Eight shilling and sixpence,' and 'You are welcome,' with the shrill addition, 'Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon,' or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, priethee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I print my puny drawer to what end he gav me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling Francis,' that his tale to me may be nothing but 'Anon,' Step aside, and I'll show thee precedent.

Poins. Francis!

Prince. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis!

[Exit Poins. 4

Enter Francis.

Pron. Anon, anon, sir. Look down into th
Pomgarnet, Ralph.

Prince. Come hither, Francis.

Pron. My lord?

Prince. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Re-enter Francis.

Franc. What's o'clock, Francis? Exit.

Prince. That ever the fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is up-stairs and downstairs; his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife 'Pie upon this quiet life! I want work.' 'O my sweet Harry,' says she, 'how many hast thou killed to-day?' 'Give my roan horse a drench,' says he; and answers 'Some fourteen,' an hour after; 'a trifle, a trifle.' I prithee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawl shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. 'Rivo!' says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph, and Peto; Francis following with wine.

Poin. Welcome, Jack: where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether stocks and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogue. Is there no virtue extant?

[He drinks.]

Prince. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun's! if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too: there is nothing but roguey to be found in villainous man: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it. A villainous coward! Go thy ways, old Jack: die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhanged in England; and one of them is fat and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

Prince. How now, wool-sack! what manner you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild-goose, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales!

Prince. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are not you a coward? answer me to that; and Poins there?

Poin. 'Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, by the Lord, I' ll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue, if I drunk to-day.
Prince. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunken last.

Fal. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plague of all cowards, still say I.

Prince. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter! there be four of us here ha' en a thousand pound this day morn-

Prince. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it! taken from us it is: a hun-

Prince. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scapeed by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet, four through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw—ecc signum! I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains and the sons of darkness. 191

Prince. Speak, sirs; how was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen—

Fal. Sixteen at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us—

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

Prince. What, fought you with them all?

Fal. All! I know not what you call all: but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radial; if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

Prince. Pray God you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have peppered two of them; two I am sure I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me—

Prince. What, four? thou saidst but two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four. 220

Points. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado but took all their seven points in my target, thus—

Prince. Seven? why, there were but four even now.

Fal. In buckram?

Points. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hits, or I am a villain else. 230

Prince. Prithée, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

Prince. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to.

These nine in buckram that I told thee of—Prince. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,—

Prince. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground: but I follow me close, came in foot and hand; and with thought seven of the eleven I paid.

Prince. O monstrous! eleven buckram me grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, the misbegotten knives in Kendal green came at my back and let drive at me; for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

Prince. These lies are like their father the begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knout-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, gressey tallow-catch,— Prince. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? not the truth the truth?

Prince. Why, how couldst thou know the men in Kendal green, when it was so dark the couldst not see thy hand? come, tell us you reason: what sayest thou to this?

Points. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? 'Zounds, a I were at the strappado, or all the rackets in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man reason upon compulsion, I.

Prince. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse-back-breaker, this huge fish of flesh,—

Fal. 'Sblood, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neat's tongue, you bull's pizzle, you stoo- fish! O for breath to utter what is like thee! yo tailor's-yard, you sheath, you bow-case, yo standing-tuck.—

Prince. Well, breathe awhile, and then to again: and when you hast tired thyself in bus comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Points. Mark, Jack.

Prince. We two saw you four set on four and bound them, and were masters of their wealth Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down Then did we two set on you four; and, with word, out-faced you from your pride, and have it yea, and can show it you here in the house: and Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy and still run and roared, as ever I heard bul calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy swan as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight What trick, what device, what starting-hole canst thou now find out to hide thee from the open and apparent shame?

Points. Come, let's hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as h that made ye. Why, hear you, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir-apparent? should I turn upon the true prince? why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was now a coward on instinct, I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad ye have the money. Hostess, clap to the door, wate tonight, pray to-morrow. Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellow come to you! What, shall we be merry? I have a play extempore; and the argument shall be running away.

at. Ah, no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord the prince!
Prince. How now, my lady the hostess! what art thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of court at door would speak with you: he says comes from your father.

Prince. Give me as much as will make him yel man, and send him back again to my her.

at. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

at. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight? Shall I give him his answer?
Prince. Prithiee, do, Jack.

at. 'Tis faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.
Prince. Now, sirs: by'rlady, you fought fair; did you, Petos? so did you, Bardolph? you are too, you ran away upon instinc, you will touch the true prince; no, fie!

ard. Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

Prince. 'Tis faith, tell me now in earnest, how Falstaff's sword so hacked?

ard. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and he would swear truth out of England but he d make you believe it was done in fight, and passed us to do the like.

ard. Yes, and to tickle: our noses with spears: to make them bleed, and then to beslobber garments with it and swear it was the blood of men. I did that I did not this seven year e, I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

Prince. O villain, thou stol'st a cup of sack ten years ago, and wert taken with the jest, and ever since thou hast blushed extemr. Thou hast fire and sword on thy side, yet thou rannest away: what instinc hast for it?

ard. My lord, do you see these meteoris? behold these exhalations?

ince. I do.

ard. What think you they portend?

ince. Hot livers and cold purses.

ard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

ince. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

now, my sweet creature of bastardy! How is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own

I. My own knee! when I was about th' Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the body; I could have crept into any alderman's b'ring: a plague of sighing and grief! it's a man up like a bladder. There's villainous abroad: here was Sir John Bracy from your r; you must to the court in the morning, same mad fellow of the north, Percy, and the Wains, that gave Amanon the bastinado made Lucifer cuckold and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook—what a plague call you him?

Prince. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen, the same; and his son-in-law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o horseback up a hill perpendicular,— Prince. He that rides at high speed and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

Prince. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

Prince. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running!

Fal. O'horseback, ye cuckoo; but afoot he will not hudge a foot.

Prince. Yes, Jack, upon instinc.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinc. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more: Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

Prince. Why, then, it is like, if there come a hot June and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundred.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like we shall have good trading that way. But tell me, Hal, art not thou horridly afraid? thou being heir-apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prince. Not a whitt, i' faith; I lack some of thy instinc.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

Prince. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I content: this chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

Prince. Thy state is taken for a joined-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown! 430

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. Give me a cup of sack to make my eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyses' vein.

Prince. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech. Stand aside, nobility.

Host. O Jesu, this is excellent sport, i' faith!

Weep not, sweet queen; for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O, the father, how he holds his countenance!

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful queen;

Host. He doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see!

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickleof youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Sa-

Prince. I do, I will. [A knocking heard

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.
Bard. O, my lord, my lord! the sheriff a most monstrous watch is at the door.
Fal. Out, ye rogue! Play out the play: I much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter the Hostess.
Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!
Prince. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides a fiddlestick: what's the matter?
_host. The sheriff and all the watch are at door; they are come to search the house.
Fal. I set them in?
Fal. Hast thou hear, Hal? never call a piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essent, without seeming so.
Prince. And thou a natural coward, wit instinct.
Fal. I deny your major: if you will deny sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become a cast as well as another man, a plague on bringing up! I hope I shall as soon be stran with a halter as another.
Prince. Go, hide thee behind the arras; rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a face and good conscience.
Fal. Both which I have had; but their is out, and therefore I'll hide me.
Prince. Call in the sheriff.

Exeunt all except the Prince and Enter Sheriff and the Carrier.

Now, master sheriff, what is your will with Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue
Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.
Prince. What men?
Sher. One of them is well known, my good
lord,
A gross fat man.
Car. As fat as butter.
Prince. The man, I do assure you, is not
For I myself at this time have employ'd him
And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee
That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,
Send him to answer thee, or any man,
Glend. I say the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire.

And not in fear of your nativity,

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions; oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of colic pinch'd and vex'd By the imprisoning of unruly wind Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving, Shakes the old baldem earth and topples down Steeples and moss-grown towers. At your birth Our grandam earth, having this distemper, In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave To tell you once again that at my birth The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, The herds ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields. These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do show I am not in the roll of common men. Where is he living, clipp'd in with the sea That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales, Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me? And bring him out that is but woman's son Can trace me in the tedious ways of art And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think there's no man speaks better Welsh. I'll to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man; But will they come when you do call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command The devil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil By telling truth: tell truth and shame the devil. If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither;

And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence. 6r

O, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil!

Mort. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wye And sandy-bottom'd Severn have I sent him Bootless home and weather-beaten back.

Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!

How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name? Glend. Come, here's the map: shall we divide our right?

According to our threefold order ta'en?

Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equally:

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, By south and east is to my part assigu'd:
All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore,
And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower: and, dear coz, to you
The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures tripartite are drawn;
Which being sealed interchangelably,
A business that this night may execute,
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you and I
And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth
To meet your father and the Scottish power,
As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.
Within that space you may have drawn together
Your tenants, friends and neighbouring gentle-

Glen. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords:
And in my conduct shall your ladies come;
From whom you now must steal and take no leave,
For there will be a world of water shed
Upon the parting of your wives and you,
Hot. Methinks my moiety, north from Burton
here,
In quantity equals not one of yours:
See how this river comes me cranking in,
And eats me from the best of all my land.
A huge half-moon, a monstrous candle out.
I'll have the current in this place dam'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly;
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

Glen. Not wind? it shall, it must; you see it doth.
Mort. Yea, but
Mark how he bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side;
Gelding the opposed continent as much
As on the other side it takes from you.

Wot. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here
And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so: a little charge will do it.

Glen. I'll not have it alter'd.

Hot. Will not you?

Glen. No, nor you shall not.

Hot. Who shall say me nay?

Glen. Why, that will I.

Hot. Let me not understand you, then; speak it in Welsh.

Glen. I can speak English, lord, as well as you:
For I was train'd up in the English court;
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty lovely well
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament,
A virtue that was never seen in you.

Hot. Marry,
And I am glad of it with all my heart:
I had rather be a kitten and cry mew
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers;
I had rather hear a brazen canstick turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry:
'Tis like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.

Glen. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.
Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! Heart! you swear like a comfort-maker's wife. 'Not you, in good sooth,' and 'as true as I live,' and 'as God shall mend me,' and 'as sure as day,' And givest such sacretnsey for thy oaths, As if thou never walk'st further than Finsbury. Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art, A good mouth-filling oath, and leave 'in sooth,' And such protest of pepper-gingerbread, 260 To velvet-guards and Sunday-citizens. Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so, come in when ye will. [Exit. Gend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer; you are as slow As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go. By this our book is drawn; we'll but seal, 270 And then to horse immediately. Mort. With all my heart. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. London. The palace.

Enter the KING, PRINCE OF WALES, and others.

King. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I Must have some private conference: but be near at hand, For we shall presently have need of you. [Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether God will have it so, For some displeasing service I have done, That, in his secret doom, out of my blood He'll breed revengement and a scourgce for me; But thou dost in thy passages of life Make me believe that thou art only mark'd For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else, Could such inordinate and low desires, Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts, Such barren pleasures, rude society, As thou art match'd withal and grafted to, Accompany the greatness of thy blood And hold their level with thy princely heart? Prince. So please your majesty, I would I could. Quit all offences with as clear excuse As well as I am doubtless I can purge Myself of many I am charged withal: Yet such extenuation let me beg, As, in reproof of many tales devised, Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear, By smiling pick-thanks and base newsmongers, I may, for some things true, wherein my youth Hath faultily wander'd and irregular, Find pardon on my true submission.

King. God pardon thee! yet let me wonder, Harry, At thy complaints, which do hold a wing Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors. Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost, Which by thy younger brother is supplied, And art almost an alien to the hearts Of all the court and princes of my blood: The hope and expectation of thy time Is ruin'd, and the soul of every man Prophetically doth forethink thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession
And left in repugnancy banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir
But like a comet I was wonder'd at;
That men would tell their children 'This is he,'
Others would say 'Where, which is Bolingbroke?'
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Se'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast
And won by rereness such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled and soon burnt; carded his state,
Mingled his royalty with capering fools,
Had his great name profan'd with their scorns
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative,
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himself to popularity;
That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey and began
To laud the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes;
But rather drowsed and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorged and full.
And in that every line, Harry, standest thou;
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desired to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.
Prince. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious
lord,
Be more myself.

King. For all the world
As thou art to this hour was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurch,
And even as I was then is Percy now.
Now, by my sceptre and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Than thou the shadow of succession;
For of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm,
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws,
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on
To bloody battles and to bruising arms.
What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas! whose high dole
Whose hot incursions and great name in arm
Holds from all soldiers chief majority
And military title capital.
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge,
Christ:
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swat clothes,
This infant warrior, in his enterprises
Discomfited great Douglas, ta'en him once,
Enlarged him and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up
And shake the peace and safety of our throne,
And what say you to this? Percy, Northum-
land,
The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas,
Timmer,
Capitate against us and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my near'st and dearest enemy?
Thou that art like enough, through vassal
Base inclination and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To drench his heels and curtsy at his frowns,
To show how much thou art degenerate.
Prince. Do not think so; you shall no
it so:
And God forgive them that so much have swayed
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me
I will redeem all this on Percy's head
And in the closing of some glorious day
Be bold to tell you that I am your son;
When I will wear a garment all of blood
And stain my favours in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame from;
And that shall be the day, where'er it light
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight
And your unthought-of Harry chance to me
For every honour sitting on his helm,
Would they were multitudes, and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come
Thou shalt make this northern youth exalt
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf,
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up;
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which if He be pleased I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty may salve
The long-grown wounds of my temperament.
If not, the end of life cancels all bonds;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow,
King. A hundred thousand rebels die in Thou shalt have charge and sovereign herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are for speed.
lunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of.

1 Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word
2 Douglas and the English rebels met
3 with him my son, Lord John of Lancaster;
4 this advertisement is five days old:
5 Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward;
6 Thursday we ourselves will march: our meeting
7 ridge nord: and, Harry, you shall march
8 on Gloucestershire; by which account,
9 business valued, some twelve days hence
10 general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet.
11 hands are full of business: let's away;
12 unage feeds him fat, while men delay. 180

End.}

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely this last action? do I not bate? do I not die? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old man's loose gown: I am withered like old
John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly,
I am in some liking: I shall be out of heart
ly, and then I shall have no strength to it.
An I have not forgotten what the inside church is made of, I am a peppercorn, a fat horse: the inside of a church! Com-

Fal. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot long.

Fal. Why, there is it: come sing me a bawdy song, make me merry. I was as virtuously given gentleman need to be; virtuous enough;
little: died not above seven times a week:
and to a bawdy-house not above once in a year—of an hour: paid money that I bort, three or four times; lived well and in compass: and now I live out of all order,
all compass.

Fal. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that must needs be out of all compass, out of all able compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend thou art our admiral, thou bearest the n in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee;
at the Knight of the Burning Lamp. 30
Fal. Why, Sir John, my face does you no

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use as many a man doth of a Death's-head or a no mori: I never see thy face but I think hell-fire and Dives that lived in purple;
there is in his robes, burning, burning. If Revell any way given to virtue, I would swear
't face; my oath should be 'By this fire,
God's angel!' but thou art altogether given and wert indeed, but for the light in thy son of utter darkness. When thou rannest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast made me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years; God reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly!

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned,

Enter Hostess.

How now, Dame Partlet the hen! have you inquired yet who picked my pocket? 61

Host. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man, boy by boy, servant
by servant: the title of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. Ye lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who, I? no; I defy thee: God's light,
I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me,
Sir John. I know you, Sir John; you owe me money, Sir John; and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them. 8

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face: what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks: I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu, I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper!

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup:
'sblood, an he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. 101

Enter the Prince and Peto, marching, and Falstaff meets them playing on his truncheon like a fifé.

How now, lad! is the wind in that door, I' faith?
must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.
Prince. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly? How doth thy husband? I love him well; he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Prithie, let her alone, and list to me.

Prince. What sayest thou, Jack? If the other night I fell asleep here behind the arras and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets.

Prince. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

Prince. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so; and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you.

Prince. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee.

Go, you thing, go. 137

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldest know it: I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Prince. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

Fal. What beast! why, an otter.

Prince. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave, thou!

Prince. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day you ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million: thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea, if he said my ring was copper.

Prince. I say 'tis cooper: darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare: but as thou art prince, I fear thee as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

Prince. Why and not as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion: dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God my girdle break.

Prince. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and mud.

Charge an honest woman with picking thy pockets, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed: if there were anything in thy pocket but one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to thee long-winded, if thy pocket were empty with any other injuries but these, I am a woman, and yet ye will stand to it: you will not jump wrong! art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest the state of innocence Adam fell; and what poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of vi.

Thou seest I have more flesh than another and therefore more frailty. You confess you picked my pocket?

Prince. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee; go, make breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me true to any honest reason: thou seest I am still, Nay, prithee, be gone. [Exit II.]

Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the rest, how is that answered?

Prince. O, my sweet beef, I must still be angel to thee: the money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back double labour.

Prince. I am good friends with my lord and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands.

Bard. Do, my lord.

Prince. I have procured thee, Jack, a foot.

Fal. I would it had been of horse. I shall find one that can steal well! O fo thief, of the age of two and twenty or abouts! I am heinously unprovided. We be thanked for these rebels, they offend me the virtuous: I laud them, I praise them.

Prince. Bardolph!

Bard. My lord?

Prince. Go bear this letter to Lord Lancaster, to my brother John; this to m of Westmoreland. [Exit Bardolph.] Go to horse, to horse; for thou and I have miles to ride yet ere dinner time. [Exit Jack, meet me to-morrow in the temple two o'clock in the afternoon. There shalt thou know thy charge; and receive]

Money and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high.

And either we or they must lower our heads.

Fal. Rare words! brave world! Host, breakfast, come! O, I could wish this tavern were my drum!

ACT IV.

In this fine age were not thought fatter! Such attribution should the Douglas have As not a soldier of this season's stamp
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Of our proceedings kept the earl from hence:
And think how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful faction
And breed a kind of question in our cause;
For well you know we of the offering side
Must keep aloof from the freeman's claim,
And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us:
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far.
I rather of his absence make this use;
It lends a lustre and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Than if the earl were here; for men must think,
If we without his help can make a head
To push against a kingdom, with his help
We shall o'erylw get toppy-turvy down.
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.
Ver. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord.
The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherward; with him Prince John.
Hot. No harm: what more?
Ver. And further, I have learn'd, the king himself
In person is set forth,
Or hitherward intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?
Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms;
All plumed like estridges that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bathed;
Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the morn of midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thigh, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus
And watch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more: worse than the sun
In March,
This praise doth nourish agetes. Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war
All hot and bleeding will we offer them:
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire
To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh
And yet not ours. Come, let me taste my horse,
Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt
Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet and ne'er part till one drop down a corse.
O that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news:
I learnt in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.
Don. That's the worst tidings that I hear
Of your Coventry.
War. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.
Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?
Ver. To thirty thousand.
Hot. Forty let it be.
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us take a muster speedily;
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.
Don. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death or death's hand for this one-half year.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A public road near Coventry.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry:
fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiers shall march through;
we'll to Sutton Co'fil to-night.
Bard. Will you give me money, captain?
Fal. Lay out, lay out.
Bard. This bottle makes an angel.
Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all: I'll answer the coinage.
Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.
Bard. I will, captain: farewell.
[Exit. Fal.
Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the king's press damnable.
I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds.
I press me none but good householders, yeoman's sons;
I inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the banns; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lieve hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild-duck.
I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pits' heads, and they have bought out their services;
and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores;
and such as indeed were never soldiers,
but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters and ostlers trade-fallen, the cankers of a calm world and a long peace, ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draf and husks.
A mad fellow met me on the way and told me
I had unloaded all the gibbets and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows.
I'll not march through Coventry and thy way,
that's flat: nay, and the villains march wide between the legs, as if they had gyves on; for indeed I had the most of them out of prison.
There's but a shirt and a half in all my company;
and the half shirt is two napkins tacked together;
and thrown over the shoulders like an herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Albans's the red-nose innkeeper of Daventry. But the all one; they'll find linen enough on every head.

Enter the Prince and Westmoreland.

Prince. How now, blown Jack! how a quit me, I pray you?
Fal. What, Hal! how now, mad wag! w a devil dost thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy, for I thought your honour had already been at Shrew bury.
West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than to that I were there, and you too; but my pow are there already. The king, I can tell, looks for us all: we must away all night.
Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.
Prince. I think, to steal cream indeed, for their静态 already made thee butter. But me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come at Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.
Prince. I did never see such pitiful rascals
Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal me West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they exceed poor and bare, too beggarly.
Fal. Faith, for their poverty, I know where they had that; and for their bare as am sure they never learned that of me.
Prince. No, I'll be sworn; unless you three fingers on the ribs bare. But, sirrah, no haste; Percy is already in the field.
Fal. What, is the king encamped?
West. He is, Sir John: I fear we shall too long.
Fal. Well,
To the latter end of a fray and the beginning feast
Fits a dull fighter and a keen guest.
[Exit.

SCENE III. The rebel camp near Shrewsbury.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.
Wor. It may not.
Dou. You give him then advantage.
Ver. Not a
Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for sup
Ver. So do we.
Hot. His is certain, ours is doubt.
Wor. Good cousin, be advised; stir no

Ver. Do not, my lord.
Dou. You do not counsel well.
Wor. You speak it out of fear and cold heart.
Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my
And I dare well maintain it with my life,
If well-respected honour bid me on,
I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, my lord, or any Scot that this day
Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle
Which of us fears.
Dou. Yea, or to-night.
Hot. To-night, say I.
Ver. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder much, seeing men of such great leading as you are, at you foresee not what impediments we shall meet in our expedition: certain horse men of your cousin Vernon’s are not yet come up: 20 our uncle Worcester’s horse came but to-day; did now their pride and mettle be asleep, our courage with hard labour tame and dull, at not a horse is half the half of himself.

lot. So are the horses of the enemy general, journey-lated and brought low; the better part of ours are full of rest.

Ver. The number of the king exceedeth ours: God’s sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley.]

Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king, 30 you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

lot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God we were of our determination! We love you well; and even those some of your great deservings and good name, cause you are not of our quality, stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so long as out of limit and true rule I stand against anointed majesty, to my charge. The king hath sent to know nature of your griefs, and whereupon conjure from the breast of civil peace bold hostility, teaching his duteous land acious cruelty. If that the king in any way your good deserts forgot, ch he confesseth to be manifold, aids you name your griefs; and with all speed shall have your desires with interest pardon absolute for yourself and these em misled by your suggestion.

ot. The king is kind; and well we know the king, at what time to promise, when to pay. father and my uncle and myself give him that same royalty he wears; when he was not six and twenty strong, in the world’s regard, wretched and low, or unmindful outlaw sneaking home, either gave him welcome to the shore: when he heard him swear and vow to God 40 so ame but to be Duke of Lancaster, to his livery and beg his peace, tears of innocence and terms of zeal, ather, in kind heart and pity moved, e him assistance and perform’d it too, 50 e lords and barons of the realm gived Northumberland did lean to him, more and less came in with cap and knee; him in boroughs, cities, villages, ed him on bridges, stood in lanes, 70 gifts before him, proffer’d him their oaths, him their heirs, as pages follow’d him at the heels in golden multitudes, recently, as greatness knows itself, a little higher than his vow: 80 to my father, while his blood was poor, Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh; And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform Some certain edicts and some strait decrees That lie too heavy on the commonwealth, Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep Over his country’s wrongs; and by this face, This seeming brow of justice, did he win The hearts of all that he did angle for; Proceeded further; cut me off the heads Of all the favourites that the absent king In deputation left behind him here, When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

lot. Then to the point. In short time after, he deposed the king; 90 Soon after that, deprived him of his life; And in the neck of that, task’d the whole state; To make that worse, suffer’d his kinsman March, Who is, if every owner were well placed, Indeed his king, to be engaged in Wales, There without ransom to lie forfeited; Disgraced me in my happy victories, Sought to entrap me by intelligence; Rated mine uncle from the council-board: In rage dismiss’d my father from the court: 100 Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong, And in conclusion drove us to seek out This head of safety: and withal to pray Into his title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?

lot. Not so, Sir Walter: we’ll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king; and let there be impawnd some surety for a safe return again, And in the morning early shall my uncle 110 Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.

Blunt. I would you would accept of grace and love.

lot. And may be so we shall.

Blunt. Pray God you do. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. York. The Archbishop’s palace.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK and Sir MICHAEL.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealed brief With winged haste to the lord marshal; This to my cousin Scoop, and all the rest To whom they are directed. If you know How much they do import, you would make haste. Sir M. My good lord, I guess their tenour.

Arch. Like enough you do.

To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men Must bide the touch; for, sir, at Shrewsbury, 10 As I am truly given to understand, The king with mighty and quick-raised power Meets with Lord Harry; and, I fear, Sir Michael, What with the sickness of Northumberland, Whose power was in the first proportion, And what with Owen Glendower’s absence thence, Who with them was a rated sinew too And comes not in, o’re-rul’d by prophecies, I fear the power of Percy is too weak.

26—2
To wage an instant trial with the king.

Sir M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear; There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir M. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy, And there is my Lord of Worcester and a head Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn The special head of all the land together: The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, The noble Westmoreland and warlike Blunt; And many more corruvals and dear men Of estimation and command in arms.

Sir M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well opposed.

Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear; And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed: For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king Dismiss his power, he means to visit us, For he hath heard of our confederacy, And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him: Therefore make haste. I must go write again To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. The King's camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaff.

King. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above you busy hill! the day looks pale At his distemperature. The southern wind Doth play the trumpet to his purposes, And by his hollow whistling in the leaves Foretell a tempest and a clustering day.

Prince. Then with the losers let it sympathise, For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my Lord of Worcester! 'tis not well That you and I should meet upon such terms: As now we meet, you have deceived our trust, And made us off our easy robes of peace, To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel: This is not well, my lord, this is not well. What say you to it? will you again unkit This churlish knot of all-abhorred war? And move in that obedient orb again Where you did give a fair and natural light, And be no more an exhaled meteor, A prodigy of fear and a potent Of broached mischief to the unborn times?

Wor. Hear me, my liege: For mine own part, I could be well content To entertain the lag-end of my life With quiet hours; for I do protest, I have not sought the day of this dislike.

King. You have not sought it! how comes it, then?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Prince. Peace, chewet, peace!

Wor. It pleased your majesty to turn your looks Of favour from myself and all our house; And yet I must remember you, my lord, We were the first and dearest of your friends. For you my staff of office did I break In Richard's time; and posted day and night To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand, When yet you were in place and in account Nothing so strong and fortunate as I. It was myself, my brother-and his son, That brought you home and boldly did oust The dangers of the time. You swore to, And you did swear that oath at Doncaster, That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n righ The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster: To this we swore our aid. But in short space It rain'd down fortune showering on your head And such a flood of greatness fell on you, What with our help, what with the absent king What with the injuries of a wanton time, The seeming sufferances that you had borne, And the contrarious winds that held the king So long in his unlucky Irish wars That all in England did repulse him dead: And from this swarm of fair advantages You took occasion to be quickly wodd To gripe the general sway into your hand; Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster; And being fed by us you used us so As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird, Useth the sparrow; did oppress our nest; Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk That even our love durst not come near ye sight For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing We were enforced, for safety sake, to fly Out of your sight and raise this present head; Whereby we stand opposed by such means As no man himself have forg'd against yourself By unkind usage, dangerous countenance, And violation of all faith and troth Sworn to us in your younger enterprise. King. These things indeed you have art late, Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churche To face the garment of rebellion With some fine colour that may please the eye Of fickle changelings and poor discontent, Which gape and rub the elbow at the news Of hurlyburly innovation; And never yet did insurrection want Such water-colours to impart his cause; Nor poorly beggars, starving for a time Of pellmell havoc and confusion. Prince. In both your armies there is man soul Shall pay full dearly for this encounter, If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew, The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world. In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes, This present enterprise set off his head, I do not think a braver gentleman, More active-valiant or more valiant-young, More daring or more bold, is now alive To grace this latter age with noble deeds. For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes;
For treason is but trusted like the fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks,
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
And an adopted name of privilege,
A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen:
All his offences live upon my head
And on his father's; we did train him on,
And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
In any case, the offer of the king.
Ver. Deliver what you will; I'll say 'tis so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter Hotspur and Douglas.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:
Deliver up my Lord of Westmoreland,
Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Doug. Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.

[Exit.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

Hor. Did you beg any? God forbid!

Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,
By now foreswearing that he is forsworn:
He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter Douglas.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen; to arms! for I have thrown
A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engaged, did bear it;
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king,

And, nephew, challenged you to single fight.

Hor. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads,
And that no man might draw short breath to-day
But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me, so
How show'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties of a man:
Trimm'd up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle,
Making you ever better than his praise
By still dispersing praise valued with you;

And, which became him like a prince indeed,
He made a blushing citad of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace
As if he master'd there a double spirit
Of teaching and of learning instantly.

Scene II. The rebel camp.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir
Hitchard, he liberal and kind offer of the king.
Ver. 'Twere best he did.

Wor. Then are we all undone.
In no possible, it cannot be,
He king should keep his word in loving us;
A will suspect us still and find a time
There did he pause: but let me tell the world,
If he outline the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured 79
On his follies: never did I hear
Of any prince so wild a libertine.
But be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.
Arm, arm with speed: and, fellows, soldiers, friends,
Better consider what you have to do
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you. 80

Hot. I cannot read them now.
O gentlemen, the time of life is short!
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.
An if we live, we live to treat on kings;
If die, brave death, when princes die with us!
Now, for our consciences, the arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on an pace.

Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale,
For I profess not talking; only this—
Let each man do his best: and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal
In the adventure of this perilous day.
Now, Esperance! Percy! and set on.
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.

[The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exeunt.

Scene III. Plain between the camps.

The King enters with his power. Alarum to the battle. Then enter Douglas and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Doug. Know then, my name is Douglas;
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus
Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Doug. The Lord of Stafford dare to-day hath brought
The likeness of a king instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;
And thou shalt find a king that will revenge

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holston thus,
I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.
Doug. All's done, all's won; here breath lies the king.
Hot. Where?

Doug. Here.

Hot. This, Douglas? no: I know this is full well:
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Sensibly furnish'd like the king himself.
Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear;
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?
Hot. The king hath many marching in coats.
Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all coats:
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away!
Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day.

[Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Falstaff, solus.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at L. don, I fear the shot here; here's no scoring upon the pate. Soft! who are you? Sir W. Blunt: there's honour for you! here's no vanity; I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy; God keep lead out of me! I need no more well than mine own bowels. I have led my muffins where they are peppered: there's three of my hundred and fifty left alive; they are for the town's end, to beg during! But who comes here?

Enter the Prince.

Prince. What, stand'st thou idle here? let thy sword:
Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are yet unrevenged: I prithee lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal, I prithee, give me leave to breathe awhile. Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

Prince. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee, I prithee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take pistol, if thou wilt.

Prince. Give it me: what, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's will sack a city. [The Prince draws it out, and finds it to be a bottle of a Prince. What, is it a time to jest and do now? [He throws the bottle at him. Exeunt.

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him if he do come in my way, so: if he do not, it come in his willingly, let him make a carbuncle of me. I like not such grinning honour as Walter hath: give me life; which if I can sa; so, if not, honour comes unlooked for, and then an end.

[Exit.
[SCENE IV.]

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Adieu, my lord! I'll lose no more of my time;
for the rest of it I'll leave you to your own thoughts.

[Exeunt]

Enact: Excursions. Enter the King, the Prince, Lord John of Lancaster, and Earl of Westmoreland.

King. I prithee, old friend, let us withdraw ourselves; thou hast been too much with me; and God forbid a shallow scratch should drive me from my grave and that of my ancestors.

Prince. I beseech you, my lord, to keep an eye on your retirement; my Lady of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

Westmoreland. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

Prince. Lead me, my lord; I do not need your help:
and God forbid a shallow scratch should drive me from my grave and that of my ancestors.

Enter Douglas.

Douglas. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads:
and yet, I love thee, as a brother.

King. Him, and his fellow, sir.

Enter Falstaff.

Falstaff. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal! Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Re-enter Douglas; he fighteth with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit.

Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of me youth! I better brook the loss of brittle life Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh: But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy, But that the earthy and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue: no, Percy, thou art dust, And food for death.

Dies. Prince. For worms, brave Percy! fare thee well, great heart! Ill-weaned ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that this body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough: this earth that bears thee dead Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal: But let my favours hide thy mangled face; And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself For doing thee these forms of tenderness, Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven! Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave.

In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

Prince. O God! they did me too much injury That ever said I hearken'd for thy death.

If it were so, I might have let alone The insulting hand of Douglas over you, Which would have been as speedy in your end As all the poisonous potions in the world And saved the treacherous labour of your son.

King. Make up to Clifton: I'll to Sir Nicholas Gawsey.

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prune. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

Prince. Why, then I see A very valiant rebel of the same name.

I am the Prince of Wales: and think not, Percy, To share with me in glory any more: Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere; Nor can one England brook a double reign, Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry; for the hour is come To end the one of us: and would to God Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

Prince. I'll make it greater ere I part from thee;
And all the budding honours on thy crest I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities.

[They fight.]

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal! Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Re-enter Douglas; he fighteth with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit.

Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of me youth! I better brook the loss of brittle life Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh: But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy, But that the earthy and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue: no, Percy, thou art dust, And food for death.

Dies. Prince. For worms, brave Percy! fare thee well, great heart! Ill-weaned ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that this body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough: this earth that bears thee dead Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal: But let my favours hide thy mangled face; And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself For doing thee these forms of tenderness, Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven! Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave.
But not remember'd is thy epitaph!

\[ A speith Falkstaff on the ground. \]

What, old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spared a better man:
O, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity!
Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day,
Though many dearer, in this bloody fray.
Embowed'd will I see thee by and by:
Till then in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit.]

Fal. [Rising up] Embowed'd! if thou embowled me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me too to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit: to die, is to be a counterfeit: for he is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is discretion; alive, I which better part I have saved my life. 'Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead: how, if he should counterfeit too and rise? by my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not hot rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah [stabbing him], with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me. [Take up Hotspur on his back.

Re-enter the Prince of Wales and Lord John of Lancaster.

Prince. Come, brother John; full bravely hast thou flesh'd Thy maiden sword.

Lan. But, soft! whom have we here?
Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

Prince. I did; I saw him dead, Breathless and bleeding on the ground. Art thou acknowledged?

Or is it fantasy that plays upon our eyesight?
I prithee, speak; we will not trust our eyes. Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man: but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy [throwing the body down]: if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

Prince. Why, Percy I killed myself and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou? Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying! I grant you I was down and out of breath; and so was he: but we rose both at an instant and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive and would deny it, 'zounds, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

Lan. This is the strangest tale that ever I heard.

Prince. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

A retreat is sound.

The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours.
Come, brother, let us to the highest of the field.
To see what friends are living, who are dead.
[Exeunt Prince of Wales and Lan caster.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. I that rewards me, God reward him! If I do great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and let sack, and live cleanly as a nobleman should do.

Scene V. Another part of the field.

The trumpets sound. Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, with Worcester and Vernon prisoners.

King. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke. Ill-spirited Worcester! did not we send grace, Pardon and terms of love to all of you? And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary? Misuse the tenour of thy kinman's trust? Three knights upon our party slain to-day, A noble earl and many a creature else Had been alive this hour, If like a Christian thou hast'd truly borne Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What have I done my safety urged me And I embrace this fortune patiently, Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

King. Bear Worcester to the death and Vernon too.

Other offenders we will pursue upon.
[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon, guarded.

How goes the field?

Prince. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, who saw The form of the day quite turn'd from him, The noble Percy slain, and all his men Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest; And falling from a hill, he was so bruised That the pursuers took him. At my tent, The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace I may dispose of him.

King. With all my heart.

Prince. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to This honourable bounty shall belong: Go to the Douglas, and deliver him Up to his pleasure, rashmous and free: His valour shown upon our crests to-day Hath taught us how to cherish such high deed Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

Lan. I thank your grace for this high court Which I shall give away immediately.

King. Then this remains, that we divide power.

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland Towards York shall bend you with your deep speed, To meet Northumberland and the prelate Ser Who, as we hear, are busily in arms: Myself and you, son Harry, will towards Wall To fight with Glendower and the Earl of M. Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway; Meeting the check of such another day; And since this business so fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exit.

Scene: England.

INDUCTION.

Warkworth. Before the castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop the vent of hearing when loud Rumour speaks?
From the orient to the drooping west,
When the wind in my post-horse, still unfold acts commenced on this ball of earth;
My tongues continual slanders ride,
in every language I pronounce,
Mingling the ears of men with false reports.

peak of peace, while covert enmity
In the smile of safety wounds the world:
And, who but Rumour, who but only I,
Like fearful musters and prepared defence,
Being the big year, sworn with some other grief,
Thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
Did no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
Well known by surmises, jealousies, conjectures,
So easy and so plain a stop
At the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
As still-discordant wavering multitude;
I play upon it. But what need I thus
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword,
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learn'd of me: from Rumour's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true Wrong.

To be continued. [Exit. 40

ACT I.

Scene I. The same.

Enter Lord Bardolph.

L. Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?

The Porter opens the gate.

Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

L. Bard. Tell thou the earl
That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Fort. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:
Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer.
Enter Northumberland.

L. Bard. Here comes the earl. [Exit Porter.

North. What news, Lord Bardolph? every minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem:
The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose
And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an God will!

L. Bard. As good as heart can wish:
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts Kill'd by the hand of Douglas; young Prince John
And Westmoreland and Stafford fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day,

\[\text{...}\]

North. How is this derived?
Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence,
A gentleman well bred and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Enter Travers.

L. Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way;
And he is furnish'd with no certainties
More than he haply may retail from me.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings comes with you?

Trav. My lord, Sir John Umfrrevile turn'd me back
With joyful tidings; and, being better h horsed,
Out-rode me. After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forspent with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his blooded horse.
He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury:
He told me that rebellion had bad luck
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.
With that, he gave his able horse the head,
And heding forward struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head, and starting so
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha! Again:
Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur Coldspur? that rebellion
Had met ill luck?

L. Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;
If my young lord your son have not the day,
Upon mine honour, for a silken point
I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

North. Why should that gentleman that rode by Travers
Give then such instances of loss?

L. Bard. Who, he?
He was some hilding fellow that had stolen
The horse he rode on, and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a ti leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragic volume:
So looks the strand whereon the impious fl
Hath left a witness'd usurpation.
Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbur

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord,
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son and broth
Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy che
Is afer than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Pram's cabinet in the dark of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was bur
But Pram found the fire ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death ere thou report'st it.
This thou wouldst say, 'Your son did thus:
Thy brother thus: so fought the noble Dougla
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deec
But in the end, to stop my ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with 'Brother, son, and all are dead.'

Morton. Douglas is living, and your brother, yo
But, for my lord your son—

North. Why, he is dead.
See what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He that but fears the thing he would not know
Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes
That what he feard is chambered. Yet spe
Morton;
Tell thou an earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great to be by me gain'd
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Per dead.
I see a strange confusion in thine eye:
Thou shakest thy head and hold'st it fear or si
To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so;
The tongue offends not that reports his death:
And he doth sin that doth believe the dead,
Not he which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office, and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd tolling a departing friend.

L. Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your s
is dead.

Mor. I am sorry I should force you to beli
That which I would to God I had not seen;
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rendering faint quittance, wearied and o
breathed,
To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath b
down
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more spung
In few, his death, whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Of wounds and scars and that his forward spirit
Would lift him where most trade of danger ranged:
Yet did you say 'Go forth!' and none of this,
Though strongly apprehended, could restrain
The stiff-borne action: what hath then befallen,
Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
More than that being which was like to be?

L. Bard. We all that are engaged to this loss
Knew that we ventured on such dangerous seas
That if we brought our life 'twas ten to one;
And yet we ventured, for the gain proposed
Choked the respect of likely peril fear'd;
And since we are o'erset, venture again.

Come, we will all put forth, body and goods.

Mor. 'Tis more than time: and, my most noble lord,

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle Archbishop of York is up
With well-appointed powers; he is a man
Who with a double surety binds his followers.
My lord your son had only but the corpse,
But shadows and the shows of men, to fight;
For that same word, rebellion, did divide
The action of their bodies from their souls;
And they did fight with queasiness, constrain'd,
As men drink potions, that their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but, for their spirits and souls,
This word, rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. But now the bishop
Turns insurrection to religion:
Supposed sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's followed both with body and with mind;
And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
Of fair King Richard, scraped from Pomfret stones;
Derives from heaven his quarrel and his cause;
Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Casing for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more and less do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak
truth,
This present grief had wiped it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety and revenge:
Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed:
Never so few, and never yet more need. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. London. A street.

Enter Falstaff, with his Page bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men: I do hence walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgement. Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now: but I will inset you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel,—the Juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fletched. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, 'tis not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still at a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he'll be crowing as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he's almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said Master Dombledon about the satin for my short cloak and my slops?
Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his band and yours; he liked not the security.
Fal. Let him be damned, like the glutton!
pray God his tongue be hotter! A whoreson Achitophel!—a rascally yea-forssoth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security! The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is through with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth as offer to stop it with security. I looked a' should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security: for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it:
and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him. Where's Bardolph?
Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.
Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were manned, horsey, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice and Servant.
Page. Sir, here comes the noblemen that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.
Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.
Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?
Serv. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.
Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?'
Serv. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury: and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.
Ch. Just. What, to York? Call him back
again.
Serv. Sir John Falstaff!
Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.
Page. You must speak louder; my master is deaf.
Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good. Go, pluck him by the elbow must speak with him.
Serv. Sir John!
Fal. What a young knave, and beggin'
Is there not wars? is there not employe, doth not the king lack subjects? doth not the need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be any side but one, it is worse shame to beg to be on the worst side, were it worse than name of rebellion can tell how to make it.
Serv. You mistake me, sir.
Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an hor man? setting my knighthood and my soldiers aside, I had lied in my throat, if I had said Serv. I pray you, sir, then set your kni hood and your soldiers aside, and give leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if say I a any other than an honest man.
Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I aside that which grows to me! If thou get any leave of me, hang me; if thou takest le thou west better be hanged. You hunt cont
hence! avant!
Serv. Sir, my lord would speak with you.
Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with a Fal. My good lord! God give your lord the right time of day. I am glad to see your l ship abroad: I heard say your lordship was hope your lordship goes abroad by ad
Your lordship, though not clean past your ye, hath yet some smack of age in you; some ro sameness of time; and I most humbly seek your lordship to have a reverent car your health.
Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you be expedition to Shrewsbury.
Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear majesty is returned with some discomfort Wales.
Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty: I not come when I sent for you.
Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highne fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.
Ch. Just. Well, God mend him! I pray him to speak with you.
Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a ki ladythe, an't please your lordship; a ki sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.
Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it is.
Fal. It hath its original from much gri from study and perturbation of the brain: I read the cause of his effects in Galen: it kind of deafness.
Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into disease; for you hear not what I say to you.
Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: an't please you, it is the disease of not listen the malady of not marking, that I am tro withal.
Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels w amend the attention of your ears; and I car
if I do become your physician.
Fal. I ant as poor as Job, my lord, but so patient: your lordship may minister the p of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty how I should be your patient to follow your scriptions, the wise may make some dram scruple, or indeed a scruple itself.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

1. Just. I sent for you, when there were terrors against you for your life, to come speak a me.
2. Just. As I was then advised by my learned nzel in the laws of this land-service, I did not go.
4. Just. He that buckles him in my belt cannot in less.
5. Just. Your means are very slender, and r waste is great.
6. Just. I would it were otherwise; I would my acres were greater, and my waist slenderer.
7. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.
8. Just. The young prince hath misled me: I am fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.
9. Just. Well. I am loath to gall a new-wound; your day's service at Shrewsbury a little gilded over your night's exploit on it's-hill: you may thank the unquiet time for a quiet o'er-posting that action.
10. Just. My lord?
11. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: ce not a sleeping wolf.
12. Just. To wake a wolf is as bad as to smell a.
13. Just. What! you are as a candle, the ter part burnt out.
16. Just. You follow the young prince up, down, like his ill angel.
17. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light: I hope he that looks upon me will make me out weighing: and yet, in some respects, I m, I cannot go: I cannot tell. Virtue is of little regard in these costermonger times that valour isurnted bear-herd: pregnancy is mar stier, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving lenses; the other gifts appertinent to man, and in the minute capacity of this age shapes them, are not with a gooseberry. You that are old consider the capacities of us that are young; you do make the sure of our lives with the bitterness your galls: and we that are in the vaward of youth, I must confess, are wags too.
18. Just. Do you set down your name in the of youth, that are written down old with all characters of age? Have you not a moist ? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white rd? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? is your voice broken? your wind short? your a double? your wit single? and every part you blasted with antiquity? and will you call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, Sir John!
19. My lord, I was born about three of the ick in the afternoon, with a white head and nothing a round belly. For my voice, I have it with halloing and singing of anthems. To be insensible of you further, I will not: the truth I am old in judgement and understanding: he that will coper me for a thousandicks, let him lend me the money, and have at it! For the box of the ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it, and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes and sackcloth, but in new silk and old sack.

Ch. Just. Well. God send the prince a better companion!

Fal. God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry: I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the Archbishop and the Earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yes; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady Peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but a bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head but I am thrust upon it: well, I cannot last ever: but it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If ye will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with a rust than to be scourd to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare you well: commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief-Justice and Servant.

Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. A man can no more separate age and covetousness than a can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the degrees prevent my curses. Boy!

Page. Sir?

Page. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven galls and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go hear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the Earl of Westmoreland; and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin. About it: you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe. 'Tis no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of any thing: I will turn diseases to commodity.

[Exit.

SCENE III. York. The Archbishop's palace.

Enter the Archbishop, the Lords Hastings, Mowbray, and Bardolph.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause and known our means: And, my most noble friends, I pray you all,
Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:
And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

_Mob._ I well allow the occasion of our arms;
But gladly would be better satisfied
How in our means we should advance ourselves
To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance of the king.

_Hast._ Our present musters grow upon the file to five and twenty thousand men of choice;
And our supplies live largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns
With an incensed fire of injuries.

_L. Bard._ The question then, Lord Hastings, standeth thus;
Whether our present five and twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland?

_Hast._ With him, we may.

_L. Bard._ Yes, marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgement is, we should not step too far
Till we had his assistance by the hand;
For in a theme so bloody-faced as this Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids incertain should not be admitted.

_Arch._ 'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph; for indeed
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

_L. Bard._ It was, my lord; who lined himself with hope,
Eating the air on promise of supply,
Flattering himself in project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death
And winking leapt into destruction.

_Hast._ But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt
To lay down likenesses and forms of hope.

_L. Bard._ Yes, if this present quality of war,
Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot
Lives so in hope as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds; which to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant as despair
That frost will bite them. When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model;
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate on the roof of the erection;
Which if we find outweighs ability,
What do we then but draw anew the model
In fewer offices, or at last desist,
To build at all? Much more, in this great work,
Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down
And set another up, should we survey
The plot of situation and the model,
Consent upon a sure foundation,
Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite; or else
We fortify in paper and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives o'er and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

_Hast._ Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd
The utmost man of expectation,
I think we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

_L. Bard._ What is the king but five and two thousand?

_Hast._ To us no more; nay, not so much, L.
Bardolph.

For your divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads: one power against the French
And one against Glendower; perforce a third
Must take us up; so is the unfair king
In three divided; and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.

_Arch._ That he should draw his several streng

And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

_Hast._ If he should so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and We Buy ing him at the heels: never fear that.

_L. Bard._ Who is it like should lead his for hither?

_Hast._ The Duke of Lancaster and Westm:.land;
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth,
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

_Arch._ Let us on,
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own crotch
Their over-greedily love hath surfeited:
An habitation giddy and unsafe
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond many, with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke
Before he was what thou wouldest have him be
And being now trimm'd in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provokest thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disguise
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wouldest eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these tins
They that, when Richard lived, would have died,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that brewest dust upon his goodly head
When through proud London he came sighing
After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Crest now 'O earth, yield us that king again
And take thou this!' O thoughts of men accrue
Past and to come seems best; things pres worst.

_Mob._ Shall we go draw our numbers:
set on!

_Hast._ We are time's subjects, and time be gone. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. London. A street.

_Enter Hostess, Fang and his Boy with her and Snare following._

_Host._ Master Fang, have you entered action?

_Fang._ It is entered.

_Host._ Where's your yeoman? Is't a true yeoman? will a' stand to't?

_Fang._ Sirrah, where's Snare?

_Host._ O Lord, ay! good Master Snare.

_Snare._ Here, here.
NG. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.

NG. Yea, good Master Snare; I have end him and all.

NG. It may chance cost some of us our for he will stab.

NG. Alas the day! take heed of him; he me in mine own house, and that most good faith, he cares not what mischief
, if his weapon be out: he will foin like devil; he will spare neither man, woman,
child.

NG. If I can close with him, I care not for knight.

NG. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

NG. An I but list him once; an a' come but in my vice.

NG. I am undone by his going; I warrant he's an infinitive thing upon my score. Good Fang, hold him sure; good Master Snare, not escape. A' comes continually to Pier-saving your manhoods—to buy a saddle;
he is indited to dinner to the Lubber-head street, to Master Smooth's the silk-prayer, ye, since my exion is entered so openly known to the world, let him ought in to his answer. A hundred mark is one for a poor lone woman to bear: and borne, and borne, and borne, and have fabb'd off, and fabb'd off, and fabb'd off, to day to that day, that it is a shame to ought on. There is no honesty in such ; unless a woman should be made an ass beast, to bear every knave's wrong. Yonder men; and that arrant malmsye-nose knave, with him. Do your offices, do your Master Fang and Master Snare, do me, e, do me your offices.

Enter Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

NG. How now! whose mare's dead? what's matter?

NG. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Quickly.

NG. Away, varlets! Draw, Bardolph: cut the villain's head: throw the queen in the channel.

NG. Throw me in the channel! I'll throw in the channel. Wilt thou? wilt thou? thon rgle rogue! Murder, murder! Ah, thou
-nickle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers he king's? Ah, thou honey-seed rogue! thou honey-seed, a man-queller, and a woman-

NG. Keep them off, Bardolph.

NG. A rescue! a rescue!

NG. Good people, bring a rescue or two.
wo't, wo't thou? thou wo't, wo't a? do, do,
rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

NG. Away, ye scullion! ye rampallion! you rier! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

'TH E LORD CHIEF-JUSTICE, AND HIS MEN.

JUST. What is the matter? keep the peace
here!

JUST. Good my lord, be good to me. I be-you, stand to me.

JUST. How now, Sir John! what are you brawling here?
these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs. 140
Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong; but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.
Fal. Come hither, hostess.

Enter Gower.
Ch. Just. Now, Master Gower, what news?
Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry Prince of Wales Are near at hand: the rest the paper tells.
Fal. As I am a gentleman. Come, no more words of it.
Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.
Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking:
and for thy walls, a pretty slight drollerie, or the story of the Prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bedhangings and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst. Come, an twere not for thy humours, there's not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw the action.
Come, thou must not be in this humour with me;
dost not know me? come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.
Host. Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles: 't faith, I am loath to pawn my plate, so God save me, la!
Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.
Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together?
Ch. Just. I have heard better news.
Fal. What's the news, my lord?
Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?
Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.
Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: what is the news, my lord?
Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?
Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse.

Are march'd up to my lord of Lancaster,
Against Northumberland and the Archbishop.
Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?
Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me prerently:
Come, go along with me, good Master Gower.
Fal. My lord!
Ch. Just. What's the matter?
Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?
Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here; I thank you, good Sir John.
Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, Master Gower?
Ch. Just. What foolish master taught these manners, Sir John?
Fal. Master Gower, if they become me he was a fool that taught them me. This is right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, a part fair.
Ch. Just. Now the Lord lighten thee! art a great fool.

SCENE II. London. Another street.
Enter Prince Henry and Pains.

Prince. Before God, I am exceeding we.
Pains. Is't come to that? I had the weariness durst not have attached one of so
blood.
Prince. Faith, it does me; though it disc the complexion of my greatness to acknowle. Doth it not show viley in me to desire beer?
Pains. Why, a prince should not be so log studied as to remember so weak a compositi Prince. Belike then my appetite was principly got; for, by my truth, I do now re ber the poor creature, small beer. But, in these humble considerations make me out of with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to remember thy name? or to know thy face?
now? or to take note how many pair o stockings thou hast, viz. these, and those were thy peach-coloured ones! or to be inventory of thy shirts, as, one for superfluity another for use! But that the tennis-court knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of with thee when thou keepest not racket the thou hast not done a great while, because rest of thy low countries have made a shift up thy holland; and God knows, whether that bawl out the ruins of thy linen shall in his kingdom: but the midwives say the child are not in the fault: whereupon the wor creases, and kindreds are mightily stretch Pains. How ill it follows, after you laboured so hard, you should talk so idly!
me, how many good young princes would their fathers being so sick as yours at this ti
Prince. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poin Pains. Yes, faith; and let it be an ex good thing.
Prince. It shall serve among wits of no breeding than thine.
Pains. Go to; I stand the push of you thing that you will tell.

Prince. Marry, I tell thee, it is not me
I should be sad, now my father is sick: all could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad and indeed too.
Pains. Very highly upon such a subjec Prince. By this hand, thou thinkest to far in the devil's book as thou and Falst obdurate, and persistency: let the end to me. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds in that my father is so sick: and keeping such company as thou art hath in reason taken me all ostentation of sorrow.
Pains. The reason?
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

"Prince. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter:

Poins. [Reads] 'Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting.' Why, this is a certificate.

Prince. Peace!

Poins. [Reads] 'I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity:' he sure means brevity in breath, short-winded. 'I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins: for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayest; and so, farewell.

'Thine, by yea and no, which is as much as to say, as thou usest him. Jack Falstaff with my familiars, John with my brothers and sisters, and Sir John with all Europe.'

My lord, I'll steep this letter in sack and make him eat it.

Prince. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. God send the wench no worse fortune! But I never said so.

Prince. Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yea, my lord.

Prince. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord, in Eastcheap.

Prince. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord, of the old church.

Prince. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old Mistress Quickly and Mistress Doll Tearsheet.

Prince. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

Prince. Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

Prince. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir, I will govern it.

Prince. Fare you well; go. [Exit Bardolph and Page.] This Doll Tearsheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

Prince. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leathern jerkins and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

'How comes that?' says he, that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap, 'I am the king's poor cousin, sir.'
Prince. From a God to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in every thing the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned.

[Exit.

SCENE III. Warkworth. Before the castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle
daughter,
Give even way unto my rough affairs:
Put not you on the visage of the times
And be like them to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more:
Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn;
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!
The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now;
When your own Percy, when my heart's dear
Harry,
Threw many a northward look to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.
Who then persuaded you to stay at home?
There were two honours lost, yours and your son's.

For yours, the God of heaven brighten it!
For his, it stuck upon him as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven, and by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move

To do brave acts: he was indeed the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves;
He had no legs that practised not his gait;
And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant;
For noise that could speak low and tardily
Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him: so that in speech, in gait,
In diet, in affections of delight,
In military rules, humour of blood,

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous
him!

O miracle of men! him did you leave,
Second to none, unseconced by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage; to abide a field
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did seem defensible; so you left him.

Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong
To hold your honour more precise and nice
With others than with him! let them alone:
The marshal and the archbishop are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart,
Fair daughter, you do draw my spirits from me
With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go and meet with danger there,
Or it will seek me in another place

And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O, fly to Scotland,
Till that the nobles and the armed commons
Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage

Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our love
First let them try themselves. So did your
He was so suffer'd: so came I a widow;
And never shall have length of life enough
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven
For recordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me,
with my mind
As with the tide swell'd up unto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop.
But many thousand reasons hold me back.
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company.

[Exit.

SCENE IV. London. The Boar's-head Tavern in Eastcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

First Draw. What the devil hast thou bro-there? apple-johns? thou knowest Sir John not endure an apple-john.

Sec. Draw. Mass, thou sayest true, prince once set a dish of apple-johns before and told him there were five more Sir J and, putting off his hat, said 'I will now take leave of these six dry, round, old, wit knights.' It angered him to the heart; but hath forgot that.

First Draw. Why, then, cover, and set down:
and see if thou canst find out Sir

Mistress Tearing-tield would fain hear music. Dispatch: the room where they sit is too hot; they'll come in straight.

Sec. Draw. Sirrah, here will be the Master Pains anon; and they will two of our jerkins and aprons; and Sir must not know of it: Bardolph hath a word.

First Draw. By the mass, here will

Uts: it will be an excellent stratagem.

Sec. Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sir

Enter Hostess and Doll Tearing tide.

Host. I'faith, sweetheart, methinks no are in an excellent good temperality; you sidges beats as extraordinarily as heart desire; and your colour, I warrant you, red as any rose, in good truth, la! But, if you have drunk too much canaries; and a marvellous searching wine, and it per the blood ere one can say 'What's this?'
do you now?

Doll. Better than I was: hem!

Host. Why, that's well said; a good worth gold. Lo, here comes Sir John.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. [Singing] 'When Arthur first in imply the Jordan. [Exit First Drawer.]

{[Segue]} 'And was a worthy king.' How now, tress Doll!

Host. Sick of a calm: yea, good faith.

doll. So is all her sect: an they be once in a ol. You muddier rascal, is that all the com-you give me?

ol. You make fat rascals, Mistress Doll.

ol. I make them! glutony and diseases

y them; I make them not.

ol. If the cook help to make the glutony, help to make the diseases, Doll! we catch

Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my virtue, grant that.

ol. Yea, joy, our chains and our jewels.

ol. Your brooches, pearls, and ooches:

serve bravely is to come halting off, you

: to come off the breach with his pike bent ely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon charged chambers bravely,—

ol. Hang yourself, you muddier conger, hang self: by my troth, this is the old fashion,

two never meet but you fall to some discord:

are both, i' good faith, as rheumatic as two asts; you cannot one bear with another's milies. What the good-year! one must and that must be you: you are the weaker

, as they say, the emptier vessel.

ol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a full hogshead? there's a whole merchant's re of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Come,

e friends with thee, Jack; thou art going ars; and whether I shall ever see thee

o no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter First Drawer.

Host. Hang Sir, Ancient Pistol's below, and speak with you.

4. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him one other: it is the fowl-mouth'd rogue in

and.

It. If he swagger, let him not come here:
y my faith; I must live among my neigh-

I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name name with the very best: shut the door;
comes no swaggerers here: I have not all this while, to have swaggering now:
the door, I pray you.

l. Dost thou hear, hostess?

s. Pray ye, pacify yourself, Sir John:
comes no swaggerers here.

2. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient. 89

s. Tilly-fally, Sir John, ne'er tell me:

age, as he said to me, 'twas no longer ago

day was he; 'I good faith, neighbour

y,' says he; Master Dunbe, our minister, then; 'neighbour Quickly,' says he, 'I

those that are civil; for,' said he, 'you an ill name!' now I said so, I can tell

'for,' says he, 'you are an honest man, and well thought on; therefore take what guests you receive: receive,' says he, aggering companions.' There comes none here: you would bless you to hear what he said:

no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame

ner, i' faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he'll not swagger with a barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance. Call him up, drawer.

[Exit First Drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater: but I do not love swaggering, by my troth; I am the worse, when one says swagger: feel, masters,

how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

ol. So you do, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth, do I, an twere an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swag-

gers.

Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. God save you, Sir John! 179

Fal. Welcome, Ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs nor no bulets: I'll drink no more than will do me good,

for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, Mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Fal. Charge me! I scorn you, scurvy companion. What! you poor, base, rascally, chating, lack-linen mate! Away, you muddly rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, Mistress Dorothy.

Fal. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your muddly chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stale juggler, you! Since when, pray you, sir? God's light, with two points on your shoulder? much!

Pist. God let me not live, but I will murder ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good Captain Pistol; not here,

sweet captain. 150

Fal. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? An captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain! you slave, for what? for tearing a poor who's ruff in a bawdy-house? He a captain!

hang him, rogue! he lives upon muddly stewed prunes and dried cakes. A captain! God's light, these villains will make the word as odious as the word 'occupy,' which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted: therefore captains had need look to't.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, Mistress Dorothy.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporal Bar-dolph, I could tear her: I'll be revenged of her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Pist. I'll see her damned first: to Pluto's damned lake, by this hand, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down, down, dogs! down, dogs! Have we not Hiren here?
Host. Good Captain Peesel, be quiet; 'tis very late, i' faith: I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.
Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall pack-horses
And hollow pamper'd jades of Asia,
Which cannot go but thirty mile a-day,
Compare with Cesar's, and with Cannibals,
And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus; and let the welkin roar.
Shall we fall foul for toys?
Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.
Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.
Pist. Die men like dogs! give crowns like pins! Have we not Hiren here?
Host. O' my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good-year! do you think I would deny her? For God's sake, be quiet.
Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis.
Come, give's some sack.
'Si fortune me tormente, sperato me contento.
Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire:
Give me some sack: and, sweetheart, lie thou there.
[Laying down his sword.]
Come, we'll to full points here; and are eceteras nothing?
Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.
Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neck: what! we have seen the seven stars.
Dol. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs:
I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.
Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags?
Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling: nay, an a' do nothing but speak nothing, a' shall be nothing here.
Bard. Come, get you down stairs.
Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we emburse?
[Snatching up his sword.]
Then death rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days!
Why, then, let grievous, gashly, gaping wounds
Untwine the Sisters Three! Come, Atropos, I say!
Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!
Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.
Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.
Fal. Get you down stairs.
[Drawing, and driving Pistol out.]
Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these tirrils and frights.
So, murder, I warrant now. Alas, alas! I put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons.
[Exeunt Pistol and Bardolph.]
Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal's gone. Ah, you whoreson little valiant villain, you!
Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought a' made a shrewd thrust at your belly.
Re-enter BARDOLPH.
Fal. Have you turned him out o' doors?
I am old, I am old.
I love thee better than I love e'er a young boy of them all.

What stuff wilt have a kirtle of? I shall live money o' Thursday: shall have a cap-tow. And may the hand of God be with me. Thou'lt forget me when I am gone.

By my troth, thou'lt set me a-weeping, you sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself some till thy return; well, hearken at the

Some sack, Francis.

Anon, anon, sir. [Coming forward.

Ha! a bastard son of the king's? And now Poins his brother?

Why, thou globe of sinful continents,
a life dost thou lead! to
A better than thou: I am a gentleman;
art a drawer.

Very true, sir; and I come to draw out by the ears.

O, the Lord preserve thy good grace!
y troth, welcome to London. Now, the I bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are come from Wales?

Thou whoreson mad compound of man,
by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou welcome.

How, you fat fool! I scorn you.

My lord, he will drive you out of your place and turn all to a merriment, if you take be heat.

You whoreson candle-mine, you, how did you speak of me even now before this st, virtuous, civil gentlewoman!

God's blessing of your good heart! and eis, by my troth.

Didst thou hear me?

Yea, and you knew me, as you did run away by Gad's-hill: you knew I your back, and spoke it on purpose to try attent.

No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou within hearing.

I shall drive you then to confess the abuse; and then I know how to handle you.

No abuse, Hal, o' mine honour; no abuse.

Not to dispraise me, and call me
er and breed-chipper and I know not what?

No abuse, Hal.

No abuse?

No abuse, Ned, i' the world; honest none. I dispair'd him before the wicked, the wicked might not fall in love with him;
ich doing, I have done part of a careful and a true subject, and thy father is to me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal: none, none: no, faith, boys, none.

See now, whether pure fear and entire ridic doth not make them worse this virtuous woman to close with us? is she of the 1? is thine hostess here of the wicked? or boy of the wicked? or honest Bardolph, soil burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Answer, thou dead elm. answer.

The fiend hath picked down Bardolph wearable; and his face is Lucifer's prvyn-where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy, there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.

Prince. For the women:

For one of them, she is in hell already,
and burns poor souls. For the other, I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

No, I think thou art not; I think thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for the which I think thou wilt howl.

Host. All victuals do so: what's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?

Prince. You, gentlewoman,—

Dot. What says your grace?

His grace says that which his flesh rebels against.

[Knocking within.]

Host. Who knocks so loud at door? Look to the door there, Francis.

Enter Peto.

Prince. Peto, how now! what news?

Peto. The king your father is at Westminster;
And there are twenty weak and wearyed posts
Come from the north: and, as I came along,
I met and overtook a dozen captains,
Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns,
And asking every one for Sir John Falstaff.

Prince. By heaven, Poin, I feel me much to blame,

So idly to profane the precious time,
When tempest of commotion, like the south
Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt
And drop upon our bare unarm'd heads.
Give me my sword and cloak. Falstaff, good night.

[Exeunt Prince Henry, Poin, Peto,

and Bardolph.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence and leave it un-picked. [Knocking within.] More knocking at the door!

Re-enter Bardolph.

How now! what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently;
A dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. [To the Page] Pay the musicians, sirrah.

Farewell, hostess; farewell, Doll. You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after:
the underserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches: if I benot sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst,—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Falstaff

and Bardolph.

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty nine years, come peascod-time; but an honest and true-hearted man,—well, fare thee well.

Bard. [Within] Mistress Tearsheet!

Host. What's the matter?

Bard. [Within] Bid Mistress Tearsheet come to my master.

Host. O, run, Doll; run; run, good Doll: come.

[She comes blubbered.] Yea, will you come, Doll?

[Exeunt.]
ACT III.

SCENE I. Westminster. The palace.

Enter the King in his nightcap, with a Page.

King. Go call the Earls of Surrey and of Warwick.

But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, and well consider of them: make good speed.

[Exit Page.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep! O sleep, O gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Why rather, sleep, lest thou in smoky cribs, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee 10 And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber, Than in the perfumed chambers of the great, Under the canopies of costly state, And lull'd with sound of sweetest melody? O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingliest couch A watch-case with a common 'larmum-bell'? Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In cradle of the rude imperious surge 20 And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads and hanging them With denfing clamour in the slippery clouds, That, with the hurly, death itself awakes? Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude, And in the calmest and most stilllest night, With all appliances and means to boot, Deny it to a king? Then happy low, lie down! 30 Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty! King. Is it good morrow, lords? War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past. King. Why, then, good morrow to you all, my lords.

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you? War. We have, my liege. King. Then you perceive the body of our kingdom How foul it is; what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it. 40 War. It is but as a body yet distemper'd; Which to his former strength may be restored With good advice and little medicine: My Lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. King. O'God! that one might read the book of fate, And see the revolution of the times, Make mountains level, and the continent, Weary of solid firmness, melt itself Into the sea! and, other times, to see The beathy girdle of the ocean Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances mock, And changes fill the cup of alteration With divers liquors! O, if this were seen, The happiest youth, viewing his progress through, What perils past, what crosses to ensue, Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. 'Tis not ten years gone Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together, and in two years after Were they at wars: it is but eight years since This Percy was the man nearest my soul, Who like a brother 'laid in my affairs And laid his love and life under my foot, Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard Gave him defiance. But which of you was by You, cousin Neville, as I may remember—

[To Warwick.

When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears, Then check'd and rated by Northumberland, Did speak these words, now proved a prophecy: 'Northumberland, thou ladder by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne,' Though then, God knows, I had no such intent But that necessity so bow'd the state That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss: 'The time shall come, thus did he follow it, 'The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption,' so went on, Foretelling this same time's condition And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives Figuring the nature of the times deceased; The which observed, a man may prophesy, With a near aim, of the main chance of thing As yet not come to life, which in their seeds May weak beginnings lie treasured. Such things become the hatch and brood of time, And by the necessary form of this King Richard might create a perfect guess That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would of that seed grow to a greater falsehood Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you. King. Are these things then necessitie Then let us meet them like necessitie: And that same word even now cries out on us! They say the bishop and Northumberland Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord; Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo The numbers of the fear'd. Please it your grace To go to bed. Upon my soul, my lord, The powers that you already have sent forth Shall bring this prize in very easily. To comfort you the more, I have received A certain instance that Glendower is dead. Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill, And these unseason'd hours performe must ad Unto your sickness.

King. I will take your counsel: And were these inward wars once out of hand We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

[Exit.

SCENE II. Gloucestershire. Before just Shallow's house.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting: MERVYN, Shadow, Wart, Fleeble, Bullcal Servant or two with them.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir; me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir early stirrer, by the rood! And how doth good cousin Silence? Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.
And let this be the answer to our question: what is good pleasure with me? My captain, sir, commends him to you; captain, Sir John Falstaff, a tall gentleman, a most gallant leader.

He greets you, sir. I knew him as a backsword man. How doth the good knight? I ask how my lady his wife doth?
Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough, and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so, indeed; but much of the father's substance.
Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?
Fal. Shadow will serve for summer; prick him, for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.
Shal. Thomas Wart!
Fal. Where's he?
Wart. Here, sir.
Fal. Is thy name Wart?
Wart. Yeas, sir.
Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.
Shal. Shall I prick him down, Sir John?
Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.
Shal. Ha, ha, ha! you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well. Francis Feeble!
Fee. Here, sir.
Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?
Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.
Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?
Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor, he'd ha' pricked you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?
Fee. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.
Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said.
courageous Feeble! thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnanimous mouse. Prick the woman's tailor: well, Master Shallow; deep,
Master Shallow.
Fee. I would Wart might have gone, sir.
Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou mightst mend him and make him fit to go.
I cannot put him to a private soldier that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.
Fee. It shall suffice, sir.
Fal. I am bound to thee, reverence Feeble.
Who is next?
Shal. Peter Bullcalf o' the green!
Fal. Yea, marry, let's see Bullcalf.
Bull. Here, sir. Sir.
Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow! Come, prick me Bullcalf till he roar again.
Bull. O Lord! good my lord captain,— Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?
Bull. O Lord, sir! I am a diseased man,
Fal. What disease hast thou?
Bull. A whoreson cold, sir, a cough, sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation-day, sir.
Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee.
Is here all?
Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir: and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.
Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my truth, Master Shallow.
Shal. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's field?
Fal. No more of that, good Master Shallo no more of that.
Shal. Ha! 'twas a merry night. And is Ja
Nightwork alive?
Fal. She lives, Master Shallow.
Shal. She never could away with me.
Fal. Never, never; she would always say a could not abide Master Shallow.
Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to core. She was then a bona-roba. Doh s hold her own well?
Fal. Old, old, Master Shallow.
Shal. Nay, she must be old; she can't choose but be old; certain she's old; and h
Robin Nightwork by old Nightwork before came to Clement's Inn.
Sir. That's fifty five year ago.
Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst se that that this knight and I have seen! Ha, J
John, said I well?
Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight
Master Shallow.
Shal. That, have we that, that we have, that have; in faith, Sir John, we have; our water would be boys! Come, let's to dinner. Jesus, the days that have seen! Come, come.
Exeunt Falstaff and the Justices.
Bull. Good Master Corporate Baldolph, sta friend; and here's four Harry ten shillin French crowns for you. In very truth, sir had ye lie be hanged, sir, as go: and yet, mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rath because I am unwilling, and, for mine own pa have a desire to stay with my friends: else, s
I did not care, for mine own part, so much.
Bar. Go to; stand aside.
Moul. And, good master corporal captain, my old dame's sack, stand my friend: she nobody to do any thing about her when I g and she is old, and cannot help herse you shall have forty, sir.
Bar. Go to; stand aside.
Fee. By my truth, I care not: a man can but what I owe God a death: I'll ne'er be base mind: an't be my destiny, so; an't be n so: no man is too good to serve's prince; a let it go which way it will, he that dies this ye is quit for the next.
Bar. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.
Fee. Faith, I'll bear no base mind.
Re-enter Falstaff and the Justices.
Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?
Shal. Four of which you please.
Bar. Sir, a word with you: I have the bound to free Mouldy and Bullcalf.
Fal. Go to; well.
Shal. Come, Sir John, which four will y have?
Fal. Do you choose for me.
Shal. Marry, then, Mouldy, Bullcalf, Fee and Shadow.
Fal. I will send Mouldy and Bullcalf: for you, Mouldy stay at home till you are past service: and your part, Bullcalf, grow till you come unto
I will none of you.
Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not your
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Scene I. Yorkshire. Gaultree Forest.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gaultree Forest, an't please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers forth

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done. My friends and brethren in these great affairs,

I must acquaint you that I have received

New-dated letters from Northumberland;

Their cold intent, tenour and substance, thus:

Here doth he wish his person, with such powers

As might hold sortance with his quality,

The which he could not levy; whereupon

He is retired, to rife his growing fortunes,

To Scotland: and concludes in hearty prayers

That your attempts may overlie the hazard

And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowbh. Thus do the hopes we have in him

Touch ground

And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?

Mess. West. This forest, scarcely off a mile,

In goodly form comes on the enemy:

And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number

Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowbh. The just proportion that we gave them out.

Let us sway on and face them in the field.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Enter Westmoreland.

Mowbh. I think it is my Lord of Westmoreland.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general,

The prince, Lord John and Duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland, in peace:

What doth concern your coming?

West. Then, my lord,
Unto your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech. If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routes,
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rags,
And countenanced by boys and beggary,
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native and most proper shape,
Your reverend father, and these noble lords
Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insolence
With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war;
Turning your books to † graves, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet and a point of war?
Arch. Wherefore do I this? so the question stands.
Briefly to this end: we are all diseased,
And with our surfeiting and wanton hours
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it; of which disease
Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland,
I take not on me here as a physician,
Nor do I as an enemy to peace
Troop in the thongs of military men;
But rather show awhile like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness
And purge the obstructions which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforced from our most quiet there
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs
When time shall serve, to show in articles;
Which long ere this we offer'd to the king,
And might by no suit gain our audience:
When we are wrong'd and would unfold our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
The dangers of the days but newly gone,
Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet appearing blood, and the examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Hath put us in these ill-beseeming arms,
Not to break peace or any branch of it,
But to establish here a peace indeed,
Concurring both in name and quality.
West. When ever yet was your appeal denied?
Wherin have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forged rebellion with a seal divine
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?
Arch. † My brother general, the commonwealth,
To brother born a household cruelty,
I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress
Or if there were, it not belongs to you.
Mowbr. Why not to him in part, and to us,
That feel the bruises of the days before,
And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand
Upon our honours?
West. O, my good Lord Mowbray,
Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet for your part, it not appears to me
Either from the king or in the present time
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on: were you not restored
To all the Duke of Norfolk's signatories,
Your noble and right well remembered father?
Mowbr. What thing, in honour, had my father past,
That must be revived and breathed in me
The king that loved him, as the state stood
Was force perforce compel'd to banish him:
And then that Henry Bolingbroke and he,
Being mounted and both roused in their seats
Their neighing coursers daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beaver'd
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together
Then, then, when there was nothing could I stay'd
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warder down
His own life hung upon the staff he threw:
Then threw he down himself and all their lives.
That by indictment and by dint of sword
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.
West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now know not what.
The Earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman:
Who knows on whom fortune would then smiled?
But if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry;
For all the country in a general voice
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd and grazed indeed, more than the place:
But this is mere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our princely general
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace
That he will give you audience; and where
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them, every thing set off
That might so much as think you enemies.
Mowbr. But he hath forced us to compel offer;
And it proceeds from policy, not love.
West. Mowbray, you overween to take it
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
For, lo! within a ken our army lies,
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our arm is all as strong, our cause the best,
Then reason will our hearts should be as good
Say you not then our offer is compell'd.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

ROSS. Well, by my will we shall admit no parley.

EST. That argues but the shame of your offence. Then case abides no handling.

Ast. Hath the Prince John a full commission, every ample virtue of his father, near and absolutely to determine what conditions we shall stand upon?

Est. That is intended in the general's name: use you make so slight a question.

RCH. Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland, this schedule, this contains our general grievances: a several article herein redress'd, members of our cause, both here and hence, as insinu'd to this action, asch'd by a true substantial form present execution of our wills is and to our purposes confined, come within our awful wings again knit our powers to the arm of peace.

Est. This will I show the general. Please you, lords, light of both our battles we may meet; either end in peace, which God so frame! the place of difference call the swords chokd must decide it.

RCH. My lord, we will do so. [Exit West.

ROSS. There is a thing within my bosom tells me no conditions of our peace can stand.

Ast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace n such large terms and so absolute ur conditions shall consist upon, peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

ROSS. Yes, but our valuation shall be such: every slight and false-derived cause, every idle, nice and wanton reason to the king taste of this action: were our royal faiths martyrs in love, shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind even our corn shall seem as light as chaff good from bad find no partition.

RCH. No, no, my lord. Note this: the king is weary anity and such picking grievances: he hath found to end one doubt by death yes two greater in the heirs of life, therefore will he wipe his tables clean, keep no tell-tale to his memory may repeat and history his loss ew remembrance; for full well he knows what so precisely weed this land is misdoubt's present occasion: foes are so enrooted with his friends, plucking to unfix an enemy, both unfasten so and shake a friend: at this land, like an offensive wife hath enraged him on to offer strokes, i.e. striking, holds his infant up hangs resolved correction in the arm was unprepared to execution.

Est. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods into offenders, that he now doth lack very instruments of chastisement: at his power, like to a fangless lion, may offer, but not hold.

Arch. 'Tis very true: And therefore be assured, my good lord marshal, If we do now make our atonement well, Our peace will, like a broken limb united, Grow stronger for the breaking.

Ross. Be it so. Here is return'd my Lord of Westmoreland.

R-Enter Westmoreland.

West. The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies.

Ross. Your grace of York, in God's name, then, set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace: my lord, we come. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Another part of the forest.

Enter, from one side, Mowbray, attended; afterwards the Archbishop, Hastings, and others; from the other side, Prince John of Lancaster, and Westmoreland; Officers, and others with them.

LAN. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray:

Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop;
And so to you, Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of York, it better show'd with you When that your flock, assembled by the bell, Encircled you to hear with reverence Your exposition on the holy text
Than now to see you here an iron man, Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum, Turning the word to sword and life to death. That man that sits within a monarch's heart, And ripens in the sunshine of his favour, Would be abuse the countenance of the king, Alack, what mischiefs might he set abroad In shadow of such greatness! With you, lord bishop,
It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken How deep you were written in the books of God? To us the speaker in his parliament;
To us the imagined voice of God himself;
The very opener and intelligencer Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven And our dull workings. O, who shall believe But you misuse the reverence of your place, Employ the countenance and grace of heaven, As a false favourite doth his prince's name, In deeds dishonourable? You have ta'en up, Under the counterfeited zeal of God, The subjects of his substitute, my father, And both against the peace of heaven and him Have here up-swarm'd them.

Arch. Good my Lord of Lancaster, I am not here against your father's peace; But, as I told my Lord of Westmoreland, The time disorder'd doth, in common sense, Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous forth, To hold our safety up. I sent your grace To see parcels and particulars of our grief, The which hath been with scorn shov'd from the court, Whereon this Hydra son of war is born;
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep With grant of our most just and right desires,
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

[ACT IV.]

And true obedience, of this madness cured,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Westmor. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt:
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them;
And so success of mischief shall be born
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up
While England shall have generation.

Lan. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,
To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleadeth your grace to answer them directly
How far forth you do like their articles.

Lan. I like them all, and do allow them well,
And swear here, by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority.

My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours: and here between the armies
Let's drink together friendly and embrace,
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses.

Lan. I give it you, and will maintain my word:
And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain, and deliver to the army 60
This news of peace: let them have pay, and part:
I know it will well please them. Hie thee, captain.

[Exit Officer.

Arch. To you, my noble Lord of Westmoreland.

West. I pledge your grace; and, if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely: but my love to ye
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.

Health to my lord and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am, on the sudden, something ill. 80
Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, coz: since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus, 'some good thing comes to-morrow.'

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true. [Shouts within.

Lan. The word of peace is render'd: hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.

Lan. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged too.

[Exit Westmoreland.

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains
March by us, that we may persevere the men

We should have coped withal.

Arch. Go, good Lord Hastings.

Lan. And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.

[Exit Hastings.

Lan. I trust, lords, we shall lie to-night together.

[Re-enter Westmoreland.

Now cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The leaders, having charge from you stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

Lan. They know their duties.

[Re-enter Hastings.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispersed abroad;
Like youthful steers unyoked, they take their courses.

East, west, north, south; or, like a schism broke up,
Each hurrying toward his home and sporting-places.

West. Good tiding, my Lord Hastings; the which
I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:
And you, lord archbishop, and you, lord Mowbray,
Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

Lan. I pawn'd thee now.

I promised you redress of these same grievances
Whereof you did complain; which, by my honour,
I will perform with a most Christian care.
But for you, rebels, look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence
Fondly brought here and foolishly sent hence.
Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd strays
God, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.
Some guard these traitors to the block of death
Treason's true bed and yeilder up of breath.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Another part of the forest.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Colevile, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you, and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Colevile of the dale.

Fal. Well, then, Colevile is your name, knight is your degree, and your place the dale.

Cole. You shall be still my name, a traitor yet to-day, and the dungeon your place, a place deep enough; so shall you be still Colevile the dale.

Fal. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Cole. As good a man as he, sir, whose' er I am.

Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rouse fear and trembling, and do observance to mercy.

Cole. I think you are Sir John Falstaff, in that thought yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, Blunt, and others.

Lan. The heat is past; follow no further now: I, in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.

[Exit Westmoreland.

w. Falstaff, where have you been all this while?

vill. I was sorry, my lord, but it should thus: I never knew yet but rebuke and check the reward of valour. Do you think me a allow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my old and motion, the expedition of thought? I sped the hither with the very extremest h of possibility: I have foundered nine score odd posts: and here, travel-tainted as I am, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken John Colevile of the dale, a most furious ght and valorous enemy. But what of that? I saw me, and yielded: that I may justly say, I the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, 'I came, y, and overcame.'

Lan. It was more of his courtesy than of your serving.

vill. I know not: here he is, and here I yield; and I beseech your grace, let it be booked h the rest of this day’s deeds; or, by the Lord, will have it in a particular ballad else, with ane own picture on the top on’t, Colevile singing my foot: to the which course if I be forced, if you do not all show like gilt two-ces to me, and I in the clear sky of fame, shine you as much as the full moon doth the ders of the element, which show like pins to her, believe not the word of the noble: before let me have right, and let desert unt.

Lan. Thine’s too heavy to mount.

vill. Let it shine, then.

vill. Thine’s too thick to shine.

vill. Let it do something, my good lord, t may do me good, and call it what you will.

Lan. Is thy name Colevile?

vill. It is, my lord.

vill. A famous rebel art thou, Colevile.

vill. And a famous true subject took him. 70 vill. I am, my lord, but as my betters are at led me hither: had they been ruled by me, u should have won them dearer than you have.

vill. I know not how they sold themselves: thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away dis; and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Lan. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made and execution stay’d.

Lan. Send Colevile with his confederates York, to present execution:

Blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him sure.

[Exit Blunt and others with Colevile.

And now dispatch we toward the court, my lords: I hear the king my father is sore sick; Our news shall go before us to his majesty, Which, cousin, you shall bear to comfort him, And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go Through Gloucestershire: and, when you come to court, Stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.

Lan. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition, Shall better speak of you than you deserve.

[Exit all but Falstaff.

Fal. I would you had but the wit: ’twere better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh; but that’s no marvel, he drinks no wine. There’s never never one of the boys of that age’s proof; for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they are generally fools and cowards; which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and crudy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble fiery and delectable shapes; which, delivered o’er to the voice, the tongue, which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme: it illumineth the face, which as a beacon gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, that all our vital commoners and inland petty spirits must ever all their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning a mere board of gold kept by a devil, till sack com- mences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile and bare land, manured, husbanded and filled with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first humane principle I would teach them should be, to forswear thin potations and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The army is discharged all and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I’ll through Gloucestershire; and there will I visit Master Robert Shal low, esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Westminster. The Jerusalem
Chamber.
Enter the King, the Princes Thomas of Clarence and Humphrey of Gloucester,
Warwick, and others.

King. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Our navy is address'd, our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And every thing lies level to our wish:
Only, we want a little personal strength;
And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot,
Come underneath the yoke of government. 10

War. Both which we doubt not but your majesty
Shall soon enjoy.

King. Humphrey, my son of Gloucester,
Where is the prince your brother?

Glou. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

King. And how accompanied?

Glou. I do not know, my lord.

King. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence,
with him?

Glou. No, my good lord; he is in presence here.

Clar. What would my lord and father?

King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy
brother? 20
He loveth thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas:
Thou hast a better place in his affection
Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy,
And noble offices thou mayest effect
Of instruction, after I am dead.
Between his greatness and thy other brethren:
Therefore omit him not: blunt not his love,
Nor lose the good advantage of his grace
By seeming cold or careless of his will;
For he is gracious, if he be observed:
He hath a tear for pity and a hand
Open as day for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incensed, he's fiant,
As humorous as winter and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day.
His temper, therefore, must be well observed:
Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclined to mirth;
But, being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, 30
Confound themselves with working. Learn this,
Thomas,
And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion—
As, force perfere, the age will pour it in—
Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As aconitum or rash gunpowder.

Clar. I shall observe him with all care and love.

King. Why art thou not at Windsor with him,
Thomas? 50

Clar. He is not there to-day; he dines
London.

King. And how accompanied? canst thou
that?

Clar. With Poins, and other his continual lowers.

King. Most subject is the fattest soil to we,
And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them; therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death:
The blood weeps from my heart when I do
In forms imaginary the unguided days
And rotten times that you shall look upon
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet togeth-
O, with what wings shall his affections fly
Towards fronting peril and opposed decay!

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond

The prince but studies his companions
Like a strange tongue, wherein, to gain the guage,
'Tis needful that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attai
Your highness knows, comes to no further use
But to be known and hated. So, like grosser
The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers; and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mete the lives of oth
Turning past evils to advantages.

King. 'Tis seldom when the bee doth le her comb
In the dead carrion.

Enter Westmoreland.

Who's here? Westmoreland?

West. Health to my sovereign, and new h iness
Added to that that I am to deliver!
Prince John your son dotth kiss your grace's ha
Mowbray, the Bishop Scoop, Hastings and a
Are brought to the correction of your law;
There is not now a rebel's sword unshashe'd,
But Peace puts forth her olive everywhere.
The manner how this action hath been borne
Here at more leisure may your highness read,
With every course in his particular.

King. O Westmoreland, thou art a sum bird,
Which ever in the haunch of winter sings
The lifting up of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Look, here's more news

Har. From enemies keep heaven your maje
And, when they stand against you, may they
As those that I am come to tell you of!
The Earl Northumberland and the Lord Bardol
With a great power of English and of Scots, a
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrow'n:
The manner and true order of the fight
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

King. And wherefore should these good m make me sick?
Will Fortune never come with both hands full?
But write her fair words still in foulest letters
e either gives a stomach and no food;
ch are the poor, in health; or else a feast
d takes away the stomach; such are the rich, that have abundance and enjoy it not.
War. Would you have now this happy news;
I now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:
me! come near me; now I am much ill.
Glo. Comfort, your majesty!
Clar. O my royal father!
War. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself,
look up.
War. Be patient, princes; you do know, these fits
e with his highness very ordinary.
Wind. From him, give him air; he'll straight be
well.
Clar. No, no, he cannot long hold out these pangs;
the incessant care and labour of his mind withdrew the mule that should confuse it in thin that life looks through and will break out.
Glo. The people fear me; for they do observe father's heirs and lostly births of nature:
the seasons change their manners, as the year did some months asleep and leap'd them over.
Clar. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between;
the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
y it did so a little time before our great-grand sire, Edward, sick'd and died.
War. Speak lower, princes, for the king revolves.
Glo. This apoplexy will certain be his end.

Scene V. Another chamber.

King lying on a bed: Clarence, Gloucester, Warwick, and others in attendance.

King. Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
less some dull and favourable hand will whisper music to my weary spirit.
War. Call for the music in the other room.
King. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.
War. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.
War. Less noise, less noise!
Enter Prince Henry.

Prince. Who saw the Duke of Clarence?
War. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.
Prince. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad!
War. Doth the king?
Glo. Exceeding ill.
Prince. Heard he the good news yet?
War. It him.
Glo. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.
War. If he be sick with joy, he'll recover out physic.
War. Not so much noise, my lords: sweet prince, speak low;
knight your father is disposed to sleep.
War. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?
Prince. No; I will sit and watch here by the knight.
War. Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night! sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound and half so deeply sweet
As he whose brow with homely bigger bound Snore out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather which stir's not;
Did he suspect, that light and weightless down Perforce must move. My gracious lord! my father!
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep
That from this golden rigol hath divorced
So many English kings. Thy due from me
Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,
Which God shall guard: and put the world's whole strength
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from me: this from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me.
Exit.

King. Warwick! Gloucester! Clarence!

Re-enter Warwick, Gloucester, Clarence, and the rest.

Clar. Doth the king call?
War. What would your majesty? How fares your grace?
King. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?
Clar. We left the prince my brother here, my
liege,
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
King. The Prince of Wales! Where is he? let me see him:
He is not here.
War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
Glo. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.
King. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?
War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
King. The prince hath ta'en it hence; go,
seek him out.
Is he so hasty that he doth suppose
My sleep my death?
Find him, my Lord of Warwick; chide him
hither.
Exit Warwick.
This part of his rejoins with my disease,
And helps to end me. See, sons, what things you are!
How quickly nature falls into revolt
When gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry; 70
For this they have engrossed and piled up
The cank’rd heaps of strange-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, culling from every flower
The virtuous sweets,
Our thighs pack’d with wax, our mouths with honey,
We bring it to the hive, and, like the bees,
Are murdered for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father. 80

Re-enter Warwick.
Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determined me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks,
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow
That tyranny, which never quaff’d but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash’d his knife
With gentle dye-drops. He is coming hither.
King. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.
Lo, where he comes. Come hither to me, Harry.
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone. 97
[Exeunt Warwick and the rest.
Prince. I never thought to hear you speak again.
King. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought:
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!
Thou seek’st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.
Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.
Thou hast stolen that which after some few hours
Wore thine without offence; and at my death
Thou hast seal’d up my expectation:
Thy life did manifest thou lovedst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assured of it.
Thou hidest a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life. 109
What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
Let all the tears that should bedew my heart
Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head:
Only compound me with forgotten dust;
Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form:
Harry the Fifth is crown’d: up, vanity! 120
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence!
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum:

Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dar
Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more;
England shall double gild his treble guilt,
England shall give him office, honour, might;
For the fifth Harry from curb’d license pluck.
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog,
Shall pluck his tooth on every innocent.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy rage,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopleed with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

Prince. O, pardon me, my liege! but for tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall’d this dear and deep rebuke
Ere you with grief had spoke and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown
And He that wears the crown immortally
Long guard yours! If I affect it more Than as your honour and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my most inward true and duteous spirit
Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending
God witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your nesty,
How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wilderness die
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed!
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were
I spake unto this crown as having sense,
And thus upbraided it: ‘The care on thee pending
Hath fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou best of gold art worst of gold
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine potable;
But thou, most fine, most honour’d, most noun’d,
Hast eat thy bearer up.’ Thus, my most re
liege,
Accusing it, I put it on my head,
To try it with, as with an enemy
That had before my face murder’d my father,
The quarrel of a true inheritor.
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did with the least affection of a welcome
Give entertainment to the might of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head
And make me as the poorest vassal is
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!
King. O my son,
God put It in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou mightst win the more thy faith
over
Pleading so wisely in excuse of it!
Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my
By what by-paths and indirect crook’d ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head.
A scene of action with the king and his nobles, and the people of the country.

Enter Falstaff, BARDOLPH, and Page.

FA. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused. Why, Davy!

Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy, let me see, Davy; let me see, Davy; let me see: yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus; those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir, shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook: are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir. Here is now the smith's note for shoeing and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast and paid. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had: and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. A' shall answer it. Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yea, Davy. I will use him well: a friend; the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are backbitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy: about thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Woncot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There is many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knife, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave, sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to; I say he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come, off with Enter Lord John of Lancaster.

L.J. Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster.

L.J. Health, peace, and happiness to my royal father!

L.J. Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John; health, alack, with youthful wings is flown this bare wither'd trunk: upon thy sight worldly business makes a period.

L.J. Is my Lord of Warwick?

My Lord of Warwick!

Enter Warwick, and others.

W. Doth any name particular belong the lodging where I first did swoon?

W. Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.

W. Laud be to God! even there my life must end. I been prophesied to me many, did not die but in Jerusalem; and I supposed the Holy Land; nor me to that chamber; there I'll lie: Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exeunt.
your boots. Give me your hand, Master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind Master Bardolph: and welcome, my tall fellow [to the Page]. Come, Sir John.

Fal. I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow. [Exit Shallow.] Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt Bardolph and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society that they flock together in consent, like so many wild-geese. If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master; if to his men, I would curry with Master Shallow that no man could better command his servants. It is certain that either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughters, the wearing out of six fashions, which is four terms, or two actions, and a' shall laugh without intervals. O, it is much that a lie with a slight oath and a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up!

Shal. [Within] Sir John!

Fal. I come, Master Shallow; I come, Master Shallow. [Exit.]

Scene II. Westminster. The palace.

Enter Warwick and the Lord Chief-Justice, meeting.

War. How now, my lord chief-justice! whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?

War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature;
And to our purposes he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me with him:
The service that I truly did his life
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed I think the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know he doth not, and do arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time,
Which cannot look more hideously upon me
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter Lancaster, Clarence, Gloucester, Westmoreland, and others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry:
O that the living Harry had the temper
Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen!

How many nobles then should hold their place
That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!

Ch. Just. O God, I fear all will be o'turn'd!

Lan. Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow.

Glow. Good morrow, cousin.

Ch. Just. We meet like men that had forgot
To speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument
Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

Lan. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

Glow. O, good my lord, you have lost a fri
Indeed;
And I dare swear you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your own.

Lan. Though no man be assured what good to find,
You stand in coldest expectation: I am the sorrier; would 'twere otherwise.

Ch. Just. We must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair;
Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour,
Led by the impartial conduct of my soul;
And never shall you see that I will beg
A ragged and forestall'd remission.
If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master that is dead,
And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter KING HENRY THE FIFTH, attended
Ch. Just. Good morrow; and God save your majesty!

King. This new and gorgeous garment,
jesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think.
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear
This is the English, not the Turkish court;
Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds,
But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brother,
For, by my faith, it very well becomes you:
Sorrow so royally in you appears
That I will deeply put the fashion on
And wear it in my heart: why then, be sad;
But entertain no more of it, good brothers,
Than a joint burden laid upon us all.
For me, by heaven, I bid you be assured,
I'll be your father and your brother too;
Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your care
Yet weep that Harry's dead; and so will I;
But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears
By number into hours of happiness.

Princes. We hope no other from your majesty.

King. You all look strangely on me: and most;
You are, I think, assured I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assured, if I be measured rightly,
Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

King. No!

How might a prince of my great hopes forgo
So great indignities you laid upon me?
at! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison: immediate heir of England! Was this easy? y this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten? h. Just. I then did use the person of your father; image of his power lay then in me: in the administration of his law, I was busy for the commonwealth, his highness pleased to forget my place, majesty and power of law and justice, image of the king whom I presented, struck me in my very seat of judgement; so, as an offender to your father, ve bold way to my authority did commit you. If the deed were ill, you contented, wearing now the garland, have a son set your decrees at nought, drunk down justice from your awful bench, zip the course of law and blunt the sword; guards the peace and safety of your person; more, to spurn at your most royal image mock your workings in a second body. go stion your royal thoughts, make the case yours; ow the father and propose a son, your own dignity so much profaned, your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted, did yourself so by a son disdain'd; then imagine me taking your part in your power soft silencing your son: this cold consideration, sentence me; as you are a king, speak in your state I have done that misbecame my place, 100 person, or my liege's sovereignty. ng. You are right, justice, and you weigh this well; fore still bear the balance and the sword: I do wish your honours may increase, on do live to see a son of mine d you and obey me, as I did, all I live to speak my father's words: py am I, that have a man so bold, dares do justice on my proper son; 110 not less happy, having such a son, would deliver up his greatness so he hands of justice. You did commit me:— and I do commit into your hand instated sword that you have used to bear; this remembrance, that you use the same the like bold, just and impartial spirit u have done: gainst me. There is my hand. all be as a father to my youth: ice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear, will stoop and humble my intents ur well-practised wise directions. princes all, believe me, I beseech you; ther is gone wild into his grave, his tomb lie my affections; ith his spirit sadly I survive, ck the expectation of the world, strate prophecies and to raze out opinion, who hath writ me down my seeming. The tide of blood in me proudly flow'd in vanity till now; it turn and ebb back to the sea, it shall mingle with the state of floods ow henceforth in formal majesty. all we our high court of parliament; us choose such limbs of noble counsel, That the great body of our state may go in equal rank with the best govern'd nation; That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us; In which you, father, shall have foremost hand. Our coronation done, we will accite, 141 As I before remember'd, all our state: And, God consigning to my good intents, No prince nor peer shall have just cause to say, God shorten Harry's happy life one day! [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Gloucestershire. Shallow's orchard.

Shal. Nay, you shall see my orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of caraways, and so forth: come, cousin Silence; and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John; marry, good air. Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John: by the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper: a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down: come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a, we shall Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing.

And praise God for the merry year;
When flesh is cheap and females dear,
And lusty lads roam here and there.
So merrily,
And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart! Good Master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give Master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit; I'll be with you anon; most sweet sir, sit. Master page, good master page, sit. Proface! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink; but you must bear; the heart's all.

[Exit.

Shal. Be merry, Master Bardolph; and, my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;

[Singing.

For women are shrews, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in hall when beards wag all,
And welcome merry Shrove-tide.
Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There's a dish of leather-coats for you.

[To Bardolph.

Shal. Davy!
Davy, Your worship! I'll be with you straight [to Bardolph]. A cup of wine, sir? Sil. A cup of wine that's brisk and fine,

And drink unto the leman mine;
And a merry heart lives long-a. 50

Fal. Well said, Master Silence.

Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet o' the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, Master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come; [Singing.

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wantest any thing, and wilt not call, besthrew thy heart. Welcome, my little tiny thief [to the Page], and welcome indeed too. I'll drink to Master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

By the mass, you'll crack a quart togeth, ha! will you not, Master Bardolph? Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle-pot.

Shal. By God's liggens, I thank thee: the knife will stick by thee, I can assure thee that. A' will not out: he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [Knocking within.] Look who's at door there, ho! who knocks?

[Exit Davy.

Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

[To Silence, seeing him take off a bumber.

Sil. Do me right, [Singing.

And dub me knight: Samingo.

Is't not so? 80

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why then, say an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. An't please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court! let him come in.

Enter PISTOL.

How now, Pistol!

Pist. Sir John, God save you!

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol? 89

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good. Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in this realm.

Sil. By'r lady, I think a' be, but goodman

Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff!

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base! Sir John, I am thy Pistol and thy friend,

And helter-skelter have I rode to thee,

And tidings do I bring and lucky joys

And golden times and happy news of price. 100

Fal. I pray thee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foure for the world and worldlings base! I speak of Africa and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news?

Let King Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. [Singing.

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the English?

And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Sil. Honest gentleman, I know not what breeding.

Pist. Why then, lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir: if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it there's two ways, either to utter them, or to confine them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Sil. Under which king, Besonjan? sp or die.

Shal. Under King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth? or F.

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A foure for thine office!

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king; Hast the Fifth's the man. I speak the truth.

When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me, like The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What, is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph! saddle my horse,

Master Robert Shallow, choose what office wilt in the land, 'tis thine. Pistol, I will do charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day!

I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Pist. What! I do bring good news.

Fal. Carry Master Silence to bed. M Shallow, my Lord Shallow,—be what thou art fortune's steward—get on thy boots: ride all night. O sweet Pistol! Away, Bard. [Exit Bard.] Come, Pistol, utter more to and withal devise something to do thyself;

Boot, boot, Master Shallow; I know the world is sick for me. Let us take any horses; the laws of England are at my command. Blessed are they that have beer and wine; and woe to my lord chief-justice;

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his also!

'Where is the life that late I led?' say they Why, here it is; welcome these pleasant days.

[Singing.

Scene IV. London. A street.

Enter Beadles, dragging in HOSTESS QUI and DOLL TEARSEET.

Host. No, thou arrant knave; I would to that I might die, that I might have thee hang thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

First Bead. The constables have deli her over to me; and she shall have whip and cheer enough, I warrant her; there hath be man or two lately killed about her. Do is Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-vi rascal, an the child I now go with do mis thou wert better thou hadst struck thy thou paper-faced villain.

Host. O the Lord, that Sir John were o would make this a bloody day to somebody.
I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

First Head. If it do, you shall have a dozen children (again); you have but eleven now.
I charge you both go with me; for the boast is dead that you and Pistol beat amongst you.

I'll tell you what, you thin man in a ser, I will have you as soundly swung for — you blue-bottle rogue, you filthy famished reatcher, if you be not swung out, I'll forswear flirtles.

First Head. Come, come, you she knight-
tant, come.

First. O God, that right should thus overcome hit! Well, of suffrance comes ease.

Com. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to a lice.

First. Ay, come, you starved blood-hound.

Com. Goodman death, goodman bones!

First. Thou atomy, thou!

Com. You, come you thin thing; come, you rascal.

First Head. Very well.

[Exeunt.

[Scene V. A public place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, strewing rushes.

First Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

Com. Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

First Groom. 'Twill be two o'clock ere they rise from the coronation: dispatch, dispatch.

[Exeunt.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Pistol, Bar-
dolph, and Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, Master Robert Shal-
; I will make the king do you grace: I will upon him as a comes by; and do but mark countenance that he will give me.

Shal. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Com. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me. O, had I had time to have made new liveryes, for I have rowed you to bed. But 'tis no matter; this poor woth better: this doth infer the zeal I had ever him.

Shal. It doth so.

Fallo. It shows my earnestness of affection.—

Shal. It doth so.

Com. My devotion.—

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Com. As it were, to ride day and night; and to deliberate, not to remember, not to have fence to shift me,—

Shal. It is best, certain.

Com. But to stand stained with travel, and reposing with desire to see him; thinking of no thing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as here were nothing else to be done but to see h.

Fallo. 'Tis semper idem, for 'obsque hoc est.' 'tis all in every part.

Com. 'Tis so, indeed.

Shal. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver,
d do make thee rage.

Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, laurel durance and contagious prison;

laid thither
most mechanical and dirty hand:

Rouse up revenge from ebon den with fell Alec'to's snake,
For Doll is in. Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

[Shouts within, and the trumpets sound.

Pistol. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-clangor sounds.

Enter the King and his train, the Lord Chief-Justice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal! my royal Hal!

Pistol. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy!

King. My lord chief-justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what
'tis you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

King. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!

I have long dreamd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old and so profane;

But, being awakened, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace;

Leave gormandizing; know the grave doth gape

For thee thrice wider than for other men.

Reply not to me with a fool-born jest:

Presume not that I am the thing I was;

For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self;

So will I those that kept me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,

Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots:

Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life I will allow you,

That lack of means enforce you not to evil:

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will, according to your strengths and qualities,

Give you advancement. Be it your charge, my lord,

To see perform'd the tenour of our word.

Set on.

[Exeunt King, &c.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Yea, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, Master Shallow.

Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world: fear not your advancements; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceive how, unless you should give me your doublet and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour.

Shal. A colour that I fear you will die in, Sir John.

Fal. Fear no colours; go with me to dinner:
come, Lieutenant Pistol; come, Bardolph: I shall be sent for soon at night.
Re-enter Prince John, the Lord Chief Justice; Officers with them.

Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet; take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormenta, spero contenta.

[Exeunt all but Prince John and the Chief Justice.

Lan. I like this fair proceeding of the king's; he hath intent his wonted followers shall all be very well provided for; but all are banish'd till their conversations appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

Lan. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

Lan. I will lay odds that, ere this year expire, we bear our civil swords and native fire as far as France: I heard a bird so sing, whose music, to my thinking, pleased the king. Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by a Dancer.

First my fear; then my courtesy; last my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my courtesy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what indeed I should say will doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture. Be it known to you as it is well, I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for and to promise you a better. I meant indeed to pay you with this; which, if like an ill venture come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would and here I commit my body to your mercies; but me some and I will pay you some and, as my debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit will you command me to use my legs? and if that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience make any possible satisfaction, and so would I. All the gentle women here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it, a make you merry with fair Katharine of France, where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die a sweat, unless already a' be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so know down before you; but, indeed, to pray for a queen.
PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend e brightest heaven of invention, this unworthy scaffold to bring forth

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. An ante-chamber in the King's palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Ely.

CANT. My lord, I'll tell you; that self bill is urged,
Which in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.
ELY. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?
CANT. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
We lose the better half of our possession:
For all the temporal lands which men devout
By testament have given to the church
Would they strip from us; being valued thus:
As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year: thus runs the bill.
ELY. This would drink deep.
CANT. 'Twould drink the cup and all.
As I perceived his grace would fain have done
The severals and unhidden passages
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms
And generally to the crown and seat of Fran Derived from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that was this off?

Cant. The French ambassador upon instant
Craved audience; and the hour, I think, is to give him hearing: is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy
Which I could with a ready guess declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear [Exe.

---

Scene II. The same. The Presence chamber.

Enter King Henry, Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canberbury?

Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good Sir West. Shall we call in the ambassador, liege?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would resolve,
Before we hear him, of some things of weight
That task our thoughts, concerning us and Fra reading.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Ely.

Cant. God and his angels guard your sat
throne
And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the law Salique that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, war, or bow your
Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles missreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth;
For God doth know how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.
Therefore take heed how you impawn our per
How you awake our sleeping sword of war;
We charge you, in the name of God, take heed.
For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltles do
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint
'Gainst him whose wrong gives edge unto swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjunction speak, my lord;
For we will hear, note and believe in heart
That what you speak is in your conscience was
As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,
you peers,
That owe yourselves, your lives and services.

---

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promised it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment
Consideration, like an angel, came
And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise,
To envelope and contain celestial spirits.
Never was such a sudden scholar made;
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heady currance, scouring faults;
Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat and all at once
As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And all-admiring with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate:
Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say it hath been all in all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter: that, when he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences:
So that the art and practic part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoric:
Which is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain,
His companies unletter'd, rude and shallow,
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports,
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:
And so the prince obscured his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unprun'd, yet creasive in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so; for miracles are ceased;
And therefore we must needs admit the means
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urged by the commons? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us:
For I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual invocation
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem received, my lord?

Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save that there was not time enough to hear,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag; Look back into your mighty ancestors: Go, my dread lord, to your great-grand sire's tomb, From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit, And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black Prince, Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy, Making defeat on the full power of France, Whiles his most mighty father on a hill Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. O noble English, that could entertain With half their forces the full pride of France And let another half stand laughing by, All out of work and cold for action!

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead And with your puissant arm renew their feats: You are their heir; you sit upon their throne; The blood and courage that renowned them Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege Is in the very May-morn of his youth, Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises. Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth Do all expect that you should reuse yourself, As did the former lions of your blood. West. They know your grace hath cause and means and might; So hath your highness; never king of England Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects, Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England, And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France. Cant. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege, With blood and sword and fire to win your right; In aid whereof we of the spirituality Will raise your highness such a mighty sum As never did the clergy at one time Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the French, But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon us With all advantages.

Cant. They of those marches, gracious sovereign, Shall be a wall sufficient to defend Our inland from the piffering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only, But fear the main intent of the Scot, Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us; For you shall read that my great-grandfather Never went with his forces into France But that the Scot on his unfurnished kingdom Came pouring, like the tide into a breach, With ample and brim fulness of his force, Galling the gleaned land with hot assays, Girding with grievous siege castles and towns; That England, being empty of defence, Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood. Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege: For hear her but examined by herself: When all her chivalry hath been in France And she a mourning widow of her nobles, She hath herself not only well defended But taken and impounded as a stray The King of Scots; whom she did send to France, To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings And make her chronicle as rich with praise.
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

West. But there's a saying very old and true,
If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin:'

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot

Comes sneaking and so sucks her princely eggs;
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows then the cat must stay at home:
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high and low and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreasing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Cant. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience: for so work the honey-bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king and officers of sorts:
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds,
Which pillage they with merry march bring home.

To the tent-royal of their emperor;
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o' er to execution male
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariwise:
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark; as many ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege,
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried and our nation lose
The name of hardiness and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.

[Exeunt some Attendants.

Now are we well resolved; and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces; or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery
O' er France and all her almost kingly dukedoms,
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth.
Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepared to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

First Amb. May't please your majesty to give us leisure,
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off
The Dauphin's meaning and our embassy?
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christ king:
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject
As are our wretchesetter'd in our prisons:
Therefore with frank and with uncurbed pleasance
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

First Amb. Thus, then, in few words:
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward Third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says that you savour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advised there's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit
This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speak.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is pleasant with us;
His present and your pains we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chaces. And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valued this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give ourselves
To barbarous license; as 'tis ever common
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin I will keep my state,
Be like a king and show my sail of greatness.
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty
And plodded like a man for working-days,
But I will rise there with so full a glory
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince this mock of his
Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his son
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
KING HENRY V.

ACT II.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

or. Now all the youth of England are on fire, silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies; thrive the armourers, and honour's thought is solely in the breast of every man: we are the pasture now to buy the horse, wing the mirror of all Christian kings, winged heels, as English Mercury, now sits Expectation in the air, hides a sword from hilts unto the point; crowns imperial, crowns and coronets, to Harry and his followers.

French, advised by good intelligence is most dreadful preparation, e in their fear and with pale policy to divert the English purposes.

Ireland! model to thy inward greatness, little body with a mighty heart, mightist thou do, that honour would thee do, all thy children kind and natural! see thy fault! France hath in thee found out of hollow bosoms, which he fills treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men, Richard Earl of Cambridge, and the second, Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third, Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland, for the gift of France,—O guilt indeed!—rind's conspiracy with fearful France; by their hands this grace of kings must die, if and treason hold their promises, to take ship for France, and in Southampton.

Linger your patience on; tand we'll digest The abuse of distance; force a play:
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene Is now transported, gentle, to Southampton;
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas to give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Upto Southampton do we shift our scene. [Exit.

SCENE I. London. A street.

Enter Corporal Nym and Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles; yet shall I do, what I dare not speak; but I will wink and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's an end.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and certainly she did you wrong: for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell: things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Hostess.

Bard. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife: good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol!

Pist. Base tickle, call'st thou me host?

Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Host. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlemen who live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy house straight. [Nym and Pistol draw.] O well a day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! we shall see willful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant! good corporal! offer nothing here.

Nym. Fish!

Pist. Fish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-ear'd cur of Iceland!

Host. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pist. 'Solus,' egregious dog! O viper vile! The 'solus' in thy most mervalous face;
The 'solus' in thy teeth, and in thy throat.
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy, and heart, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the 'solus' in thy bowels;
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.
Nym. I am not Barbazon; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you differently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may: and that's the humour of it.
Pist. O braggart vile and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gape, and doting death is near;
Therefore exhale.
Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say: he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier. [Draws.]
Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abide.
Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give:
Thy spirits are most tall.
Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.
Pist. 'Couple a gorge!' That is the word. I thee defy again. O bound of Crecid, think'st thou my spouse to get? No; to the spinal go,
And from the powdering-tub of infamy Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind, Doll Tarseesh she by name, and her espouse: I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly For the only she; and—pauca, there's enough. Go to.

Enter the Boy.
Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess: he is very sick, and would to bed. Good Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill.
Bard. Away, you rogue! 90 Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days. The king has killed his heart. Good husband, come home presently. [Exeunt Hostess and Boy.
Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?
Pist. Let floods o'erwell, and friends for food howl on!
Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?
Pist. Base is the slave that pays. 100
Nym. That now I will have: that's the humour of it.
Pist. As manhood shall compound: push home. [They draw.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.
Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.
Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why, then, be enemies with me too. Prithie, put up.
Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting? [Exeunt.
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.
See you, my princes and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge here,
You know how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all appertinent
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspired,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hampton: to the which
This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But, O,
What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou cruel,
Ingrateful, savage and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,
Wouldst thou have practised on me for thy use,
May it be possible, that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 'tis so strange,
That, though the truth of it stands off as gross
As black and white, yet my eye will verily see it.
Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them:
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought upon thee so preposterously
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence;
All other devils that suggest by treasons
Do bottch and bungle up damnation
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch'd
From glistering semblances of piety.
But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus
Should with his lion's gait walk through the whole world,
He might return to vasty Tartar back,
And tell the legions 'I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's.'
O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious? 130
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,
Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgement trusting neither?
Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man and best indue'd
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee; 140
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man. Their faults are open:
Arrest them to the answer of the law;
And God acquit them of their practices!
E.xe. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.
I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry Lord Scroop of Masham.
I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of
Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland. 150
Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath disco-very'd;
And I repent my fault more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.
Cam. For me, the gold of France did not seduce;
Although I did admit it as a motive:
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,
Beseeching God and you to pardon me. 155
Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise:
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.
K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.
You have conspired against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd and from his coffers
Received the golden earnest of our death:
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt
And his whole kingdom into desolation.
Touching our person seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
The taste whereof, God of his mercy give
You patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences! Bear them hence.
[Exeunt Cambridge, Scroop and Grey, guarded.
Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason lurking in our way
To hinder our beginnings, We doubt not now
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then forth, dear countrymen; let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. London. Before a tavern.

Enter Pistol, Hostess, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

Host. Prithée, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.
Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.
Bardolph, be blithe; Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins:
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaffe is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.
Bard. Would I were with him, wondrous'er he is, either in heaven or in hell!

Host. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Art's bosome. He made a finer end and went away;
it had been any christom child; a parted just between twelve and one, even at the turn of the tide: for after I saw him humble with sheets and play with flowers and smile upon fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way:
his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a babbie
green fields. 'How now, Sir John!' quoth
'what, man! be o' good cheer.' So a cried
'God, God, God!' three or four times. Now to comfort him, bid him a' should not thin
God; I hoped there was no need to trouble self with any such thoughts yet. So a bade lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand the bed and felt them, and they were as cold any stone; then I felt to his knees, and they as cold as any stone, and so upward and up and all was as cold as any stone.
Nym. They say he cried out of sack.
Host. Ay, that a did.
Bard. And of women.
Host. Nay, that a did not.
Boy. Yes, that a' did; and said they w devils incarnate.
Host. A' could never abide carnation; 't a colour he never liked.
Boy. A' said once, the devil would have about women.
Host. A' did in some sort, indeed, har women; but then he was rachmatic, and tall of the whore of Babylon.
Boy. Do you not remember, a' saw a stick upon Bardolph's nose, and a' said it was black soul burning in hell-fire?
Bard. Well, the fuel is gone that maintain that fire: that's all the riches I got in his serv Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be g from Southampton.
Pist. Come, let's away. My love, give thy lips.
Look on my chattels and my movables:
Let senses rule; the word is 'Pitch and Pay:
Trust none;
For oaths are straw, men's faiths are wat
cakes,
And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck:
Therefore, Caveto be thy counsellor.
Go, clear thy crystals. Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France; like horse-leechees, my boy
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!
Boy. And that's but unwholesome food, th say.
Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.
Bard. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of but, adieu.
Pist. Let housewifery appear; keep close thee command.
Host. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. France. The King's palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King, the Duke of Alençon, the Dukes of Berri and Bretag
the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus comes the English with power upon us;
KING HENRY V.

Of that victorious stock; and let us fear The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England

Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience.

Go, and bring them.

(Exeunt Messenger and certain Lords.

You see this chaste is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs

Most spend their mouths when what they seem to threaten

Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,

Take up the English short, and let them know Of what a monarchy you are the head:

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeunt and train.

Fr. King. From our brother England?

Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty, That you divest yourself, and lay apart The borrow'd glories that by gift of heaven, By law of nature and of nations, 'long To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown And all wide-stretched honours that pertain By custom and the ordinance of times Unto the crown of France. That you may know 'Tis no sinister nor any awkward claim, Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days, Nor from the dust of old oblivion raked, He sends you this most memorable line, In every branch truly demonstrative; Willing you overlook this pedigree: And when you find him evenly derived From his most famed of famous ancestors, Edward the Third, he bids you then resign Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it: Therefore in fierce tempest is he coming, In thunder and in earthquake, like a Jove, That, if requiring fall, he will compel; And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord, Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy On the poor souls for whom this hungry war Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries, The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans, For husbands, fathers and betrothed lovers, That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.

This is his claim, his threatening and my message;

Unless the Dauphin be in presence here, To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further.

To-morrow shall you bear our full intent Back to our brother England.

Dau. For the Dauphin, I stand here for him: what to him from England?
ACT III.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus with imagined wing our swift scene flies
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phoebus fanning:
Play with your fancies, and in them behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give
To sounds confused; behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think
You stand upon the rivage and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight still,
Guarded with grandsires, babies and old women,
Either past or not arrived to birth and puissance;
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
Enter Fluellen.

u. Up to the breach, you dogs! avaunt, villains! [Driving them forward.

st. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould.

e thy rage, abate thy manly rage;

e thy rage, great duke! [Bawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet chuck!]

m. These be good humours! your honour bad humours. [Exit all but Boy.

v. As young as I am, I have observed these swashers. I am boy to them all three: but eye three, though they would serve me, could not man to me; for indeed there is nothing at amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is livered and red-faced; by the means whereby faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he is a killing tongue and a quiet sword: by the

is whereof a breaks words, and keeps whole ons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of words are the best men; and therefore he to say his prayers, lest a should be thought vard: but his few bad words are matched as few good deeds; for a never broke any head but his own, and that was against a when he was drunk. They will steal any

, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute here it twelve leagues, and sold it for three ence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn bro-

in filching, and in Calais they stole a fire-

I knew by that piece of service the men

I carry coals. They would have me as far with men's pockets as their gloves or kerchers: which makes much against anhood, if I should take from another's put into mine: for it is plain pocketing wounds. I must leave them, and seek some service: their villany goes against my weak

k, and therefore I must cast it up. [Exit.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

u. Captain Fluellen, you must come pre-ty to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester

speak with you.

v. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not to come to the mines; for, look you, the

is not according to the disciplines of the

the concavities of it is not sufficient; for,

you, th' athirversary, you may discuss unto ike, look you, is digt himself four yard

under the countermines: by Cheshu, I think a'

will plow up all, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman, a very valiant gentleman, I faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world:

I will verify as much in his beard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter Macmorris and Captain Jamy.

Gow. Here a' comes; and the Scots captain,

Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous falorous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition and knowledge in th' auncient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu,

he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, good Captain

James.

Gow. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioners given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish, la! tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat.

By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blew up the town, so Chrish save me, la! in an hour:

O, tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish

illo done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind,

as touching the direction of the military discipline;

that is the point.

Jamy. It shall be vary gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I shall quit you with gud love,

as I may pick occasion; that saill I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet call us to the breach; and we talk, and, be Chrish, do nothing: tis shame for us all:

so God sa'me, tis shame to stand still; it is shame,

by my hand: and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so

Chrish sa'me, la!

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slother, ay'll de gud service, or ay'll lig i' the grund for it: ay, or go to death;

and ay'll pay 't as valorously as I may, that saill

I suerly do, that is the breff and the long.

Marry, I wad full fain hear some question twen

you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of your nation! What ish my nation?

Ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal. What is my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affection as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will out off your head.

Gov. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. A! that's a foul fault.

Gov. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end.

SCENE III. The same. Before the gates.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English forces below. Enter KING HENRY and his train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit:
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves;
Or like to men proud of destruction
Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier,
A name that in my thoughts becomes me best,
If I begin the battery once again,
I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur
Till in her ashes she lie buried.
The gates of mercy shall be all shut up,
And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart,
In liberty of bloody hand shall range
With conscience wide as bell, mowing like grass
Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants.
What is it then to me, if impious war,
Array'd in flames like to the prince of fiends,
Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats
Enlink'd to waste and desolation?
What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause
If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation?
What rein can hold licentious wickedness
When down the hill he holds his fierce career?
We may as bootless spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil
As send precepts to the leviathan
To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,
Take pity of your town and of your people,
Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;
Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil and villany.
If not, why, in a moment look to see
The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand
Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards,
And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls,
Your naked infants spitted upon pikes,
While's the mad mothers with their howls confused
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jevry 40
At Herod's bloody-hunting slautermen.

What say you? will you yield, and this avow
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gov. Our expectation hath this day an end.
The Dauphin, whom of succours we entreated
Returns us that his powers are yet not ready
To raise to great a siege. Therefore, great king,
We yield our town and lives to thy soft merc
Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours;
For we no longer are defensible.

K. Hen. Open your gates. Come, use
Exeter,
Go you and enter Harfleur: there remain,
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,
The winter coming on and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais.
To-night in Harfleur we will be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we addrest.

Flourish. The King and his train enter the to.

SCENE IV. The French King's palace.

Enter KATHARINE and ALICE.

Kath. Alice, tu as été en Angleterre, et parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseignez; il faut J'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez-vous main en Anglois?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée de hand

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, j'oublie les dois mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense que l'sont appelés de fngres; out, de fngres

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, fngres. Je pense que je suis le bon écolier; gagné deux mots d'Anglois vitément. Comment
appelez-vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? nous les appelons de

Kath. De eiles. Ecoutez; dites-moi; parle bien: de hand, de fngres, et de eiles.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort Anglois.

Kath. Dites-moi l'Anglois pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude?

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répét.
de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris d présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, conn pense.

Kath. Excusez-moi, Alice; écoutez; de hand de fngres, de eiles, de arma, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublieebew. Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De nick. Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sn. Le col, de nick; de mer de sn.

Alice. Oui. San votre honneur, en ve vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les Anglois.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, p grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.
Alice. N'avez vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ai enseigné?

Cath. Non, je reciterai à vous promptement:
hand, de fingres, de maills,—
Alice. De nails, madame.
Cath. De nails, de arm, de libow. 50
Alice. Sauf votre honneur, de elbow.
Cath. Ainsi dis-je; de elbow, de nick, et de commentator appelez-vous le pied et la robe? Alice. De foot, madame; et de cown.
Cath. De foot et de cown! O Seigneur Dieu! Je vous prie de prononcer ces mots devant un seigneur de France pour tout le monde. Le foot et le cown! Néanmoins, je reciterai autrefois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de res, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de de foot, de cown.

SCENE V. The same.

er the Koin of France, the Dauphin, the Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others. Vert. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

m. And if he be not fought withal, my lord, 10 us not live in France; let us quit all give our vineyards to a barbarous people.
am. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays emptying of our fathers' luxury, scions, put in wild and savage stock, t up so suddenly into the clouds, overlook their graffiers?
ur. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards!
10 de ma vie! if they march along sight withal, but I will sell my dukedom, uyy a slobbery and a dirty farm at nook-shotten isle of Albion.

v. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?
at their climate foggy, raw and dull,
hom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
g their fruit with frowns? Can sodden
water,
tich for sur-rein'd jades, their barley-broth,
et their cold blood to the highest heat? 20
shall our quick blood, spirited with wine, frosty? O, for honour of our land, is not hang like roping icicles
our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people

t drops of gallant youth in our rich fields!

u. By faith and honour, 30 قاد mamds mock at us, and plainly say nette is bred out and they will give bodies to the lust of English youth the nails, dearm France with bastard warriors.

w. They bid us to the English dancing-schools, each lavolts high and swift coronts; g our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy the herald? speed him hence:

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance. Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edged More sharper than your swords, hie to the field: Charles Delabreth, high constable of France; 40 You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri, Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy; Jaques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont, Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussii, and Fauconberg, Fox, Lestrange, Bouciqualt, and Charolais; High dukes, great princes, barons, lords and knights, For your great seats now quit you of great

shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land With pennons painted in the blood of Harleure: Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow 50

Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon: Go down upon him, you have power enough, And in a captive chariot into Rouen Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great. Sorry am I his numbers are so few, His soldiers sick and famish'd in their march, For I am sure, when he shall see our army, He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear And for achievement offer us his ransom. 60

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy, And let him say to England that we send To know what willing ransom he will give. Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen. Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty. Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us. Now forth, lord constable and princes all, And quickly bring us word of England's fall. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. The English camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen, meeting.

Gow. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent services committed at the bridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is not—God be praised and blessed!—any hurt in the world; but keeps the bridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an auncient lieutenant there at the bridge, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called Auncient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not. 20

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Here is the man.
KING HENRY V.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well. Flu. Ay, I praiseth Lord; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart, And of buxom valour, hath, by cruel fate, And giddy Fortune's furious fickle wheel, That goddess blind, That stands upon the rolling restless stone— Flu. By your patience, Aunchient Pistol. Fortune is painted blind, with a muffer afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is blind: and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls: in good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him; For he hath stolen a pax, and hanged must a' be: A damned death! Let all shall grape for dog; let man go free And let not hemp his wind-pipe suffocate: But Exeter hath given the doom of death For pax of little price. Therefore, go speak: the duke will hear thy voice: And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut With edge of penny cord and vile reproach: go Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee require.

Flu. Aunchient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, aunchient, it is no thing to rejoice at: for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damned! and figo for thy friendship! Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! [Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I remember him now; a bawd, a cutpurse. Flu. I'll assure you, 'tis uttered as brave words at the bridge as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: and what a heard of the general's cut and a horrid suit of the camp will do among mingling bottles and ale-washed women, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such sanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, Captain Gower, I perceive he is not the man that he would make show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum here. Hark you, the king is coming, and I must up with him from the bridge.

Drum and colours. Enter King Henry, Gloucester, and Soldiers.

God please your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen! camest thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained his pride: the French is gone off, look you; there is gallant and most brave passages: many anath'versary was have possession of the place, but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pride: I can tell you, majesty, the duke is a brave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perfidious of them' anath'versary hath been very great, reasonable great marry, formy; I think the duke hath lost never a man, but that is like to be executed for robbing a cruel one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man his face is all bunionkes, and whirls, and kn and flames o'fire: and his lips blows at his nose; and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plute sometimes rest; but his nose is executed, and fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offended cut off: and we give express charge, that in marches through the country, there be not compelled from the villages, nothing taken paid for, none of the French upbrained or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity cruelly play for a kingdom, the gentler game is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then I know thee: what know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king: Say thou to Hol of England: Though we seemed dead, we do sleep; advantage is a better soldier than rash Tell him we could have rebuked him at Har but that we thought not good to bruise an till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our and our voice is imperial: England shall re his folly, see his weakness, and admire our st. Bid him therefore consider of his rant which must proportion the losses we have be the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we digested; which in weight to re-answer, his p ness would bow under. For our losses, his ei quar is too poor; for the effusion of our bl murder of his kingdom too faint a number; for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling a feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction this add defiance, and tell him, for conclusion hath betrayed his followers, whose condem pronounced. So far my king and master much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know quality.
KING HENRY V.

font. Montjoy.

2. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back, I'll tell thy king I do not seek him now; nor do I mean to be willing to march on to Calais.

Rough imprisonment: for, to say the sooth, thou'st no wisdom to confess so much to an enemy of craft and vantage, people are with sickness much enfeebled; numbers lessened, and those few I have got no better than so many French;

so when they were in health, I tell thee, herald, caught upon one pair of English legs march three Frenchmen. Yet, forgive me, God, it I do brag thus! This your air of France is blown that vice in me; I must repent. therefore, tell thy master here I am;

ransom is this frail and worthless trunk, army but a weak and sickly guard;

God before, tell him we will come on,

thou art hence, and such another neighbour and in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.

bid thy master well advise himself:

may we pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, shall your tawny ground with your red blood colour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.

sum of all our answer is but this: would not seek a battle, as we are;

as we are, we say we will not shun it:

all your master.

fonf. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

[Exit.

fon. I hope they will not come upon us now.

- Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

rch to the bridge; it now draws toward night: and the river we'll encamp ourselves, till on to-morrow bid them march away.

[Exeunt.

NE VII. The French camp, near Agincourt.

"I. The Constable of France, the Lord Ralambre, Orleans, Dauphin, with others.

on. Tut! I have the best armour of the world. Would it were day!

rl. You have an excellent armour; but let horse have his due.

on. It is the best horse of Europe.

rl. Will it never be morning?

"au. My Lord of Orleans, and my lord high-stable, you talk of horse and armour!

rl. You are as well provided of both as any in the world.

"au. What a long night is this! I will not use my horse with any that tire but on four ears. Ca, ha! he bounds from the earth, as its entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the asus, chez les naines de feu! When I bestride him, what say all the world: the signs when he touches it; the basest horn hoof is more musical than the pipe of mes.

rl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

au. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea: turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on: and for the world, familiar to us and unknown to lay apart their particular functions and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise and began thus: 'Wonder of nature,'—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser, for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So perhaps did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O then belike she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait slasses.

Con. You have good judgement in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so and ride not warily, fall into foul bags. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. 'Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au bourbier:' thou makest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress, or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Rarn. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluousness, and 'tware more honour some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were morn-
KING HENRY V.

ACT IV.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time When creeping murmur and the poring dark Fills the wide vessel of the universe. From camp to camp through the foul wond night The hum of either army stilly sounds, That the fixed sentinels almost receive The secret whispers of each other's watch: Fire answers fire, and through their paly flame Each battle sees the other's ember'd face; Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neigh Piercing the night's dull ear, and from the ten The armourers, accomplishing the knights, With busy hammers closing rivets up, Give dreadful note of preparation: The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll, And the third hour of drowsy morning name. Proud of their numbers and secure in soul, The confidant and over-lusty French Do the low-rated English play at dice; And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night Who like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp So tediously away. The poor condemned English Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires Sit patiently and inly ruminate The morning's danger, and their gesture sad Investing lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coat Presenteth them unto the gazing sun So many horrid ghosts. O now, who will behold The royal captain of this ruin'd band Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent, Let him cry 'Praise and glory on his head!' For forth he goes and visits all his host, Bids them good morning with a modest smile, And calls them brothers, friends and countrymen. Upon his royal face there is no note How dread an army hath enrounded him; Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour Unto the weary and all-watch'd night, But freely looks and over-bears attain With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty; That every wretch, pining and pale before, Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks A largess universal like the sun His liberal eye doth give to every one, Thawing cold fear, f that mean and gentle all, Behold, as may unworthiness define, A little touch of Harry in the night And so our scene must to the battle fly;
I love the lovely bully. What is thy name?

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. My liege, I am.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate

Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The figo for thee, then!

K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol call'd. {Exit.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Jesu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and anachronous prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor pibble pabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience, now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you and beseech you that you will. {Exit Gower and Fluellen.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,

There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter three soldiers, John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.

Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No: nor it is not meet he should.

For, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoope, they stoope with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are:
yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest be, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck;
and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself anywhere but where he is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this to feel other men's minds: methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company; his cause being just and his quarrel honorable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after;
for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects; if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

K. Hen. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all 'We died at such a place; some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well that die in a battle;
for how can they charitably dispose of anything, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

Will. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command transporting a sum of money, be assaulted by robbers and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation; but this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services.
Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unsighted soldiers: some peradventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the war their livelihood, that have before gotten the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly at God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance.

That here men are punished for before-breache of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: when they feared the death, they have borne life and and where they would be safe, they perish: if they die unprovided, no more is the king guished of their damnation than he was before guilt-less the king of their damnation before he was guilt-less. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in bed, wash every mote out of his conscience:
dying so, death is to him advantage; or dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein preparation was gained: and in him that escaped it were not sin to think that, making God so an offer. He let him outlive that day to see greatness and to teach others how they shouId prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies the ill upon his own head, the king is not to swear it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer me;
and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight challegen: but when our throats are cut, he may ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never to his word after.

Will. You pay him then. That's a per egot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and pri-disorder can do against a monarch! you as well go about to turn the sun to ice with ning in his face with a peacock's feather. I never trust his word after! come, 'tis a fo saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too ro
I should be angry with you, if the time con venient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, an will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever carest acknowledge it, I will make it my qua

Will. Here's my glove: give me another thing.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, 'I is my glove,' by this hand, I will take thee on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will cense it.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I see in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools: if friend the death, they have borne life and ought to know how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay tw French crowns to one, they will beat us: they bear them on their shoulders: but it i fish treason to cut French crowns, and to -row the king himself be a clipper.
[Exeunt Soldiers.

K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts;
Possess them not with fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O
Lord,
O, not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interred new;
And on it have bestowed more contrite tears
Than from it issued forced drops of blood:
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a-day their withers'd hands hold up Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chapels, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glou. My liege!
K. Hen. My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:
The day, my friends and all things stay for me.
[Exeunt.

Scene II. The French camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambures, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords!
Dan. Montez à cheval! My horse! varlet!
Jaquises! ha!
Orl. O brave spirit!
Dan. Via! les eaux et la terre.
Orl. Rien puis? 'Air et le feu.

Enter Constable.

New, my lord constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!
Dan. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And doute them with superfluous courage, ha!
Rom. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?
How shall we, then, behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtle-axe a stain.
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow on
them,
The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were now
To purge this field of such a hindling foe,
Though we upon this mountain’s basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What’s to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

Enter Grandpre.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar’d host
And faints through a rusty beaver peoples:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal bit
Lies foul with chew’d grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crews,
Fly o’er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh suits
And give their fasting horses provended;
And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guidon: to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. The English camp.

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Ear-pingham, with all his host: Salisbury and Westmoreland.

Glou. Where is the king?
Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three score thousand.

Exe. There’s five to one; besides, they all are fresh.

Sal. God’s arm strike with us! ’tis a fearful ods.
God be wi’ you, princes all; ’tll to my charge:
If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully, my noble Lord of Bedford,
My dear Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord
Exeter,
And my kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu!

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and go luck go with thee!
Exe. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly
day:
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
For thou art framed of the firm truth of valour
[Exeunt Salisbury
Bed. He is as full of valour as of kindness.
Princely in both.

Enter the King.

West. O that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What’s he that wishes
My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cous
If we are mark’d to die, we are enow
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewest men, the greater share of honour.
God’s will! I pray thee, wish not one man me
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yeans me not if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive,
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from Engla
God’s peace! I would not lose so great an hon
As one man more, methinks, would share wi’
 me
For the best hope I have. O, do not wish
more!
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through host,
That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man’s company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call’d the feast of Crispian:
He that outlives this day, and comes safe hon
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say ‘To-norrow is Saint Crispian!’
Then will he strike his sleeve and show his scar
And say ‘These wounds I had on Crispin’s day
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he’ll remember with advantages
What feasts he did that day: then shall our nati
Familiar in his mouth as household words;
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Glouce
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember’d.
This story shall the good man teach his son
And Crispin Crispian shall ne’er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remember’d;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne’er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition;
And gentlemen in England now a-bed Shall think themselves accursed they were
here,
And hold their hands cheap whiles any spe
That fought with us upon Saint Crispin’s day.
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads
And turn them out of service. If they do this,—
As, if God please, they shall,—my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour;
Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald:
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;
Whate'er they have as I will leave 'em them,
Shall yield them little, tell the constable.
Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:
Thou never shalt hear herald any more. [Exit.
K. Hen. I fear thou 'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter York.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee
I beg
The leading of the vaward. 130
K. Hen. Take it, brave York. Now, soldiers, march away:
And how thou pleastest, God, dispose the day!
[Exeunt.

Scene IV. The field of battle.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Pistol, French
Soldier, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur!
Fr. Sol. Je pense que vous êtes gentilhomme de bonne qualité.
Pist. Qualitative calme, custuere me! Art thou a gentleman? what is thy name? discuss.
Fr. Sol. O Seigneur Dieu!
Pist. O, Signieur Dew should be a gentleman:
Perpend my words, O Signieur Dew, and mark:
O Signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O signeur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.
Pist. O, prenez miséricorde! ayez pitié de moi!
Pist. Moy shall not serve; I will have forty
moys:
Or I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat
In drops of crimson blood.
Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras?
Pist. Brass, cur!
Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?
Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moi!
Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy: ask me this slave in French
What is his name.
Boy. Écoutez; comment êtes-vous appelé?
Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.
Boy. He says his name is Master Fer.
Pist. Master Fer! I 'll fer him, and firk him, and ferret him: discuss the same in French unto
him.
Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firk.
Pist. Bid him prepare; for I will cut his throat.
Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?
KING HENRY V.

Scene V. Another part of the field.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dauphin, and Rambures.

Con. O diable!

Orl. O seigneur! le jour est perdu, tout est perdu!

Dau. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Repaeoch and everlasting shame:

Sits mocking in our plumes. O most happy fortune! Do not run away.

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.

Dau. O perdurable shame! let's stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?

Bour. Shame and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us die in honour: once more back again;

And he that will not follow Bourbon now, Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog, His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, frie now!

Let us on heaps go offer up our lives.

But we are now yet living in the field To smother up the English in our throats, If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll throng;

Let life be short; else shame will be too late.

Scene VI. Another part of the field

Enter King Henry and fo. Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice worthymen:

But all's not done; yet keep the French the Duke of York commends h your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice this hour I saw him down; thrice up again, and fight From the spur to all blood he was.

Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth Larding the plain; and by his bloody side, Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds, The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled on Comes to him, where, in gore he lay instead And takes him by the beard; kisses the gant That bloodily did yawn upon his face;

And cries aloud 'Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk My soul shall thine keep company to heavy Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abroad As in this glorious and well-foughten field We kept together in our chivalry.'

Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up He smiled me in the face, caught me his And, with a feeble gripe, says 'Dear my Commend my service to my sovereign.'

So did he turn and over Suffolk's neck He threw his wounded arm and kiss'd his hand And so espoused to death, with blood he so A testament of noble-enduring love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forced Those waters from me which I would have st But I had not so much of man in me, And all my mother came into mine eyes

And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not;

For, hearing this, I must perforce compound With mistit eyes, or they will issue too.

But, hark! what new alarm is this same? The French have reinforced their scattered. Then every soldier kill his prisoners:

Give the word through.

Scene VII. Another part of the field

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! pressly against the law of arms: 'tis as a of knavery, mark you now, as can be;
In your conscience, now, is it not?
"Tis certain there's not a boy left alive;
He cowardly rascals that ran from the battle
One this slaughter: besides, they have burned
Their way all that was in the king's tent;
Ere the king, most worthy, hath caused Soldier to cut his prisoner's throat.
"Tis a king!

Ay, he was born at Monmouth, Captain
What call you the town's name where
Under the Pig was born?

Alexander the Great.

Why, why you pray, is not pig great?
The great, or the mighty, or the huge, or Magnanimous, are all one reckoning, save
Horse is a little variations.

I think Alexander the Great was born
Acedon; his father was called Philip of
As, take it.

I think it is in Macedonia where Alexander
Tell you, captain, if you look in the
Of the 'ord, I warrant you shall find, in
The argosies between Macedonia and Monmouth,
His situations, look you, is both alike.
There is no
In Macedonia; and there is also moreover
At Monmouth: it is called Wyke at Mon-
It is out of my prams what is the
Of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis alike
Fingers is to my fingers, and there is none
In both. If you mark Alexander's life well,
Of Monmouth's life is come after it indif-
Well; for there is figure in all things.

Fingers, and his furies, and his wrathes, and his
And his moods, and his displeasures, and dignations, and also being a little intoxicates Prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look
All his best friend, Cletus.

Our king is not like him in that:
He killed any of his friends.

It is not well done, mark you now, to
The tales out of my mouth, ere it is made Mish'd. I speak but in the figures and Scenes of it: as Alexander killed his friend
Being in his ales and his cups; so also Monmouth, being in his right wits and his Judgements, turned away the fat knight
He great belly-doublet; he was full of jests,
Pipe, and knavery, and mocks; I have Such a man.

Sir John Falstaff.

That is he: I'll tell you there is good
Born at Monmouth.

Here comes his majesty.

Enter King Henry, and forces;
Nick, Gloucester, Exeter, and others.

Hen. I was not angry since I came to France this instant.
Take a trumpet, herald; thou unto the horsemen on yon hill:
'll fight with us, bid them come down,
Of the field: they do offend our sight
'll do neither, we will come to them,
Take them skirry away, as swift as stoves
ced from the old Assyrian slings:
es, we'll cut the throats of those we have,
Not a man of them that we shall take

Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glou. His eyes are humbler than they used to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?
Know'st thou not
That I have fined these bones of mine for ransom?
Comest thou again for ransom?
Mont. No, great king:
I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field
To look our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men.
For many of our princes—woe the while!—
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
Do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs:
In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety and dispose
Of their dead bodies!

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no;
For yet a many of your horsemen
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.
K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength,
For it!

What is this castle call'd that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it Agincourt.
K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory,
An't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Black Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most brave battle
Here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your Majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, Wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which,
your majesty know, to this hour is an honourable Badge of the service; and I do believe your Majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour;
For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your Majesty's Welsh plood out of your pody, I can tell you that: God pless it and preserve it, as long
As it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Jeshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to All the 'ord: I need not to be ashamed of your Majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty
Is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so! Our heralds go
With him:
Bring me just notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to Williams. Exeunt Heralds with Montjoy.]
Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, whyarest thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An’t please your majesty, ’tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman? [129]

Will. An’t please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o’ th’ ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive, I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, Captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an’t please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as ardent a villain as any in the kingdom, as ever his black shoe trod upon God’s ground and his earth, in my conscience, ha! [150]

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is good knowledge and literated in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege. [Exit.

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me and stick it in thy cap: when Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and thou dost me love.

Flu. Your grace doo’s me as great honours as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I will not fail to see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove; that is all; but I would fail see it once, an’ please God of his grace that I might see.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an’ please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. [Exit.

K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, and my brother Gloucester,

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels:

The glove which I have given him for a favour
May haply purchase him a box o’ th’ ear; [181
It is the soldier’s; I by bargain should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:
If that the soldier strike him, as I judge
By his blunt bearing he will keep his word,
Some sudden mischief may arise of it;
For I do know Fluellen valiant
And touched with choler, hot as gunpowder,
And quickly will return an injury; [189
Follow, and see there be no harm between them.
Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exit.

SCENE VIII. Before Henry’s pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, capt.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. God’s will and his pleasure, capta, beseech you now, come apace to the king: it is more good toward you perchance to return your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge [Strikes.

Flu. ’Sblood! an arrant traitor as any in universal world, or in France, or in England. Gow. How now, sir! you villain!

Will. Do you think I’ll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, Captain Gower; I will treasur his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That’s a lie in thy throat. I charge in his majesty’s name, apprehend him: be friendly of the Duke Alençon’s.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

War. How now, how now! what’s the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, here is—pray be God for it—a most contagious treason to light, look you, as you shall desire in a sum day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what’s the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove that your majesty is take out of the helmet of Aler.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; he the fellow of it: and he that I gave it to in chalice promised to wear it in his cap; I promise strike him, if he did: I met this man with glove in his cap, and I have been as good as word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving majesty’s manhood, what an arrant, rascal, garly, lousy knave it is: I hope your majesty may find him and witness, and will appear, that this is the glove of Alençon, that majesty is give me; in your conscience, now?

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, is the fellow of it.

Twas I, indeed, thou promised’st to strike; And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his answer for it, if there is any martial law in world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfy?

Will. All offences, my lord, come from heart: never came any from mine that offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was myself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like you appeared to me but as a common man: taste the night, your garments, your lowliness and what your highness suffered under that shelter: I beseech you take it for your own fault and mine: for had you been as I took you for, I
KING HENRY V.

Exe. 'Tis wonderful!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this or that, or take that praise from God
Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain: but with this acknowledgment,
That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites;
Let there be sung 'Non nobis' and 'Te Deum;'
The dead with charity enclosed in clay:
And then to Calais; and to England then:

Where ne'er from France arrived more happy men.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse
Of time, of numbers and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
Be here presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Awhart the sea. Behold, the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys, Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which like a mighty whistler 'fore the king
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,
And solemly see him set on to London.

So swift a pace hath thought that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vAILNESS and self-glorious pride;
Giving full trophy, signal and ostent
Quite from himself to God. But now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Caesar in:
As, by a lower but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England's stay at home;
The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them; and omit
All the occurrences, whatever changed,
Till Harry's back-return again to France:
There must we bring him; and myself have play’d.
The interim, by remembering you ‘tis past.
Then brook abridgement, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France. [Exit.

Scene I. France. The English camp.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that’s right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy’s day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, asse my friend, Captain Gower: the rascally, scald, beg-garly, lousy, praggling knave, Pistol, which you and yourself and all the world know to be no better than a fellow, look you now, of no merits, he is to come to me and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not bred no contention with him; but I will be so bold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. ’Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks. God pess you, Aunchient Pistol!
your scurvy, lousy knave, God pess you!

Pist. Ha! art thou beddam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,

To have me fold up Parca’s fatal web?
Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I peseech you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections and your appetites and your disgustions doo’s not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.]
Will you be so good, scauld knave, as eat it? 31

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scauld knave, when God’s will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him.] You called me yesterday mountain-squire; but I will make you today a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to:
if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain; have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days. Bite, I pray you; it is good for your green wound and your bloody toxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge: I eat and eat, I swear—

Flu. Eat, I pray you: will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swell it by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.

Flu. Much good do you, scauld knave, heart.
Nay, pray you, throw none away, the skin is good for your broken coxcomb. When you are occasional to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, no at ’em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is good: hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat!

Flu. Ye, yes: verily and in truth, you shall,
for I have another leek in my pocket, with you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of revenge
Flu. If I owe you anything, I will pay in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and nothing of me but cudgels. God b’w’th you, you keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit coward knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition begun upon an honourable respect, and worn a memorable trophe of predeceased valour and, not avouch in your deeds? May of your words have some you gleaning and galing at this time? twice or thrice. You thought, be not could not speak English in the native garb could not therefore handle an English cudgel, you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a W.
correction teach you a good English condition.

Flu. Fare ye well.

Pist. Doth Fortune play the huswif with
now?

News have I, that my Nell is dead: I the spic
Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax: and from my weary limbs
Honour is cudgel’d. Well, bawd I’ll turn,
And something lean to cutpurse of quick han.
To England will I steal, and there I’ll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgel’d so.
And swear I got them in the Gallia wars. [E

Scene II. France. A royal palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Duke
Bedford, Gloucester, Warwick, W
Moreland, and other Lords; at another,
French King, Queen Isabel, the Prince
Katharine, Alice and other Ladies;
Duke of Burgundy, and his train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefor are met!
Unto our brother France, and to our sister,
Health and fair time of day; joy and good wi
To our most fair and princeful cousin Kathar
And, as a branch and member of this royalty
By whom this great assembly is contrived, 80
And, as branches of French, and peers, health to you.

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to be your face,
Most worthy brother England; fairly met:
So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Is. So happy be the issue, brother con
land,
Of this good day and of this gracious meet
As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in the
KING HENRY V.

To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall. Go, uncle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and you, brother Gloucester,
Warwick and Huntingdon, go with the king;
And take with you fresh power to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageous for our dignity,
Any thing in or out of our demands,
And we'll consign thereto. Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us? 91
Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them:
Haply a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles too nicely urged be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here
With us:
She is our capital demand, comprised
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all except Henry, Katharine, and Alice.

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell vat is like me.

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les angels?

Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit-il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What say you, the fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Oui, dat de tongues de de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman. 'T faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say
'I love you:' then if you urge me farther than to say 'do you in faith?' I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; I faith, do: and so clap hands and a bargain: how say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, me understand veill.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure, and for the other, I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly nor gasp out my elocution, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perform may do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of in- finite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or rather the sun and not the moon; for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me; and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king. And what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I could love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate, but, in loving me, you would love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Je quand sur le possess de France, et quand vous avez le possess de moi,—let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!—donc votre est France et vous êtes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, le Francois que vous parlez, il est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, it's not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly-falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much En- glish, canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou loveth me: and at night, when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentleman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to dispose those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully: the rather, gentle princess, because I love it cruelly. If ever thou beest mine, Kate, and I a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt, I thee with simpering, and thou must thereof needs prove a good soldier-breeder: shall not, and I, between Saint Denis and Saint God pig a compound a boy, half French, half English, I shall go to Constantinople and take the Turk the beard! shall we not? what sayest thou, fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you endear your French part of such a b and for my English moiety take the word king, a bachelor. How answer you, la belle Katharine du monde, mon très cher et vin déesse?

Kath. Your majestee ave fausse Fre enough to deceive de most sage demoiselle is en France.

K. Hen. Now, fie upon my false Fren By mine honour, in true English, I love th King: by which honour I dare not swear t lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor untempering effect of my visage. Now, shrew my father's ambition! he was thinking take me, thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shal me, if thou wear me, better and better: therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will have me? Put off your maiden brushes; avo the thoughts of your heart with the looks of thence; if thou wast to see me, as I am thine: what think'st thou, if I should no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will thee aloud 'England is thine, Ireland is th France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is th who, though I speak it before his face, if he not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find best king of good fellows. Come, your air in broken music; for thy voice is music and English broken; therefore, queen of all, Kata, break thy mind to me in broken Eng different thou have me?

Kath. Dat is as it sail please de roi mon p

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kat it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it sail also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissez vo grandeur en faisant la main d'une de vos neuve indigne serviteur; excusez-moi, je vi sur vous en très-puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames et demoiselles pour
KING HENRY V.

Many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them prospectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her; so the maid that stood in the way of my wish shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter first, and then in sequel all, According to their firm proposed nations.

Exe. Only he hath not yet subscribed this: Where your majesty demands, that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form and with this addition, in French, Notre trés-cher fils Henri, Roi d'Angleterre, Héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Praeclarissimus filius noster Henricus, Rex Angliae, et Hæres Franciae.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied,

But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest;

And thereupon give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son, and from her blood raise up

Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms

Of France and England, whose very shores look pale

With envy of each other's happiness,

May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction 480

Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord

In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance;

His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now, welcome, Kate: and bear me witness all,

That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

[Flourish.

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal, That never may ill office, or fell jealousy, Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage, Thrust in between the pation of these kingdoms, To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receive each other. God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage: on which day, My Lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peers, for surety of our leagues. Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

[Exeunt.
EPILOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus far, with rough and all-unable pen,
Our bending author hath pursued the story,
In little room confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but in that small most greatly lived
This star of England: Fortune made his sword;
By which the world's best garden he achieved,
And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown'd King
Of France and England, did this king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for the sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take.

ACT I.

Scene I. Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. Enter the Funeral of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloucester, Protector; the Duke of Exeter, the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night! / Comets, importune change of times and states, brandish your crystal tresses in the sky, and with them scourge the bad revolting stars that have consented unto Henry's death! / King Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long! / England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. / Glow. England ne'er had a king until his time. / Virtue he had, deserving to command: / His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams: / His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings; / His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire, / Fore dazzled and drove back his enemies; / He, mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces; / What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech: / He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered.

Exe. We mourn in black: why mourn we not in blood? / Henry is dead and never shall revive: / Upon a wooden coffin we attend, / And death's dishonourable victory.

We with our stately presence glorify, / Like captives bound to a triumphant car. / What! shall we curse the planets of mishap / That plotted thus our glory's overthrow? / Or shall we think the subtle-witted French Conjurers and sorcerers, that afraid of him / By magic verses have contrived his end? / Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings / Unto the French the dreadful judgement-day / So dreadful will not be as was his sight. / The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought: / The church's prayers made him so prosperous. / Glow. The church! where is it? / Had not churchmen pray'd, / His thread of life had not so soon decay'd: / None do you like but an effeminate prince, / Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe. / Win. Gloucester, whate'er we like, thou art / His protector / And lookest to command the prince and realm.
Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God or religious churchmen may. 40

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lov'st the flesh,
And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars and rest your minds in peace:

Let's to the altar; heralds, wait on us:
Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms;
Since arms avail not now that Henry's dead.
Posterity, await for wretched years,
When at their mothers' moist eyes babies shall suck,
Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears,
And none but women left to wail the dead.

Henry the Fifth, thy ghost I invoke:
Prosper this realm. keep it from civil broils,
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make
Than Julius Caesar or bright —

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all!
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter and descomititure:
Guinée, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Gisors, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead
Henry's corpse?

Speak softly, or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was used?

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.

Among the soldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintain several factions,
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals:
One would have lingering wars with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.

Awake, awake, English nobility!
Let not sloth dim your honours new-begot:
Cropp'd are the flower-de-lyuces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exe. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth their flowing tides.

Bed. Me they concern; Regent I am of France.

Give me my steel'd coat. I'll fight for France.
Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds will I lend the French instead of eyes,
To weep their intermissive miseries.

Enter to them another Messenger.

Mess. Lords, view these letters full of bad mischance.
France is revolted from the English quite; 99
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;
The Bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The Duke of Alençon fleeth to his side.

Exe. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly
him!
O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?
Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemie themselves.

Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloucester, why doubt'st thou of my prowardness?

An army have I musted in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your lament
Wherewith you now bedew King Henry's hear's
I must inform you of a dismal fight
Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? I'ts a Mess. O, no; wherein Lord Talbot was o' the

The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three and twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon.
No leisure had he to enrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes pluck'd out of hedg;
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot above human thought
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance:
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand
him;
Here, there, and every where, enraged he flew
The French exclaim'd, the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood aghast on him;
His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain.
And rush'd into the bowls of the battle.
Here had the contest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward;
He, being in the vaward, placed behind
With purpose to relieve and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back,
Whom all France with their chief assemble strength.

Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself.
For living idly here in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foemen is betray'd.

Mess. O no, he lives; but is took prisoner,
And Lord Scales with him and Lord Hungerford.
Most of the rest slaughter'd or took likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay
I'll hate the Dauphin headlong from his throne
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;
I bold in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal;
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

Of bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

Less. So you had need; for Orleans is besieged;

England army is grown weak and faint;

Earl of Salisbury craveth supply, hardly keeps his men from mutiny,

they, so few, watch such a multitude.

See. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn,

her to quell the Dauphin utterly,

bring him in obedience to your yoke.

I. I remember it; and here take my leave,

go about my preparation.

[Exit.

stay. I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can,

view the artillery and munition;

then I will proclaim young Henry king.

[Exeunt.

To Eltham will I, where the young king is,

ordain'd his special governor,

for his safety there I'll best devise.

[Exit.

Each hath his place and function to attend:

left out; for me nothing remains.

long I will not be Jack out of office:

king from Eltham I intend to steal sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. France. Before Orleans.

and a flourish. Enter CHARLES, ALENCON, and REIGNIER, marching with drum and drums.

Mar's his true moving, even as in the heavens

the earth, to this day is not known:

did he shine upon the English side;

are victors; upon us he smiles.

towns of any moment but we have?

measure here we lie near Orleans;

enemies he islikelie English, pale ghosts,

bly besiege us one hour in a month.

They want their porridge and their fat

bull-bees:

they must be dieted like mules

have their provender tied to their mouths means they will look, like drowned mice.

Let's raise the siege: why live we idly

here?

is taken, whom we wont to fear:

ninth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury;

he may well in fretting spend his gall,

men nor money hath he to make war.

Sound, sound alarum! we will rush on

them.

for the honour of the forlorn French!

I forgive my death that killeth me

see me go back one foot or fly.

alarum; they are beaten back by the English with great loss.

[Re-enter CHARLES,

ALENCON, and REIGNIER.

Who ever saw the like? what men have I!

cowards! dastards! I would ne'er have that they left me 'midst my enemies.

ti. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;

ighteth as one weary of his life,

other lords, like lions wanting food,

Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Av. Froissart, a countryman of ours, records,

England all Olivers and Rowlands bred

During the time Edward the Third did reign.

More truly now may this be verified;

For none but Sansoms and Goliases

it sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!

Lean raw-boned rascals! who would e'er suppose

They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are harebrain'd slaves,

and hunger will enforce them to be more eager:

Of old I know them; rather with their teeth.

The walls they'll tear down than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd glimmers or device

Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on;

Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do.

By my consent, we'll even let them alone.

Av. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome

to us.

Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer

appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?

Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:

A holy maid hither with me I bring,

Which by a vision sent to her from heaven

Ordained is to raise this tedious siege

And drive the English forth the bounds of France.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,

Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome:

What's past and what's to come she can descry.

Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,

For they are certain and unfallible.

Char. Go, call her in. [Exit Bastard.] But first, to try her skill,

Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:

Question her proudly; let thy looks be stern:

By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

Re-enter the Bastard of Orleans, with JOAN

LA PUCELLE.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wond rous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile

me?

Whereis the Dauphin? Come, come from behind;

I know thee well, though never seen before.

Be not amazed, there's nothing hid from me:

In private will I talk with thee apart.

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's dughter.

My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.

Heaven and our Lady gracious hath it pleased

To shine on my contemptible estate:

Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,

And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,

God's mother deigned to appear to me

And in a vision full of majesty

Will'd me to leave my base vocation

And free my country from calamy:

Her aid she promised and assured success:

In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI. [Act II.]

And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With those clear rays which she infused on me
That beauty am I bless'd with which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou darest,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this, thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms:
Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,
In single combat thou shalt buckle with me,
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true;
Otherwise I renounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepared: here is my keen-edged sword.
Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;
The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard,
Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come, o' God's name; I fear no woman.

Puc. And while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.
[Here they fight, and Joan La Pucelle overcomes.

Char. Stay, stay thys hand! thou art an Amazon
And fightest with the sword of Deborah.
Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.

Char. Who'e'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help me:
Impatiently I burn with thy desire;
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant and not sovereign be;
'Tis the French Dauphin sueth to thee thus.
Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above;
When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Meantime look gracious on thy proszrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shires this woman to her smock.
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.
Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?
Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know:
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.
Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?
Shall we go over Orleans, or no?
Puc. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!
Fight till the last gasp; I will be your guard.
Char. What she says I'll confirm: we'll fight it out.
Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.
This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:
Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

With Henry's death the English circle ends;
Dispersed are the glories it included.
Now am I like that proud insulting ship
Which Caesar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a drow
Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine.
Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters, were like
Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth.
How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise a siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save honours;
Drive them from Orleans and be immortalize.
Char. Presently we'll try: come, let's a about it:
No prophet will I trust, if she prove false.
[Exit.]
to the Protector at the Tower Gates Winchelsea and his men in tawny coats.

I. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this?

II. Peep'd priest, dost thou command me to be shot out?

III. I do, thou most usurping predator, not protector, of the king or realm.

IV. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator, I that contrivest to murder our dead lord; I that givest whores indulgences to sin: ananans thee in thy broad cardinal's hat, and proceed in this thy insolence.

V. Nay, stand thou back; I will not budge a foot: be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain, thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

VI. I will not stay thee, but I will drive thee back: scarlet robes as a child's bearing-cloth to carry thee out of this place.

VII. Do what thou dar'st; I beard thee to thy face.

VIII. What! am I dared and bearded to my face? men, for all this privileged place; costs to tawny coats. Priest, beware your beard; in to tug it and to cuff you soundly:

IX. I walk, thou wilt answer this before the pope.

X. Winchester goose, I cry, a rope! a rope! beat them hence; why do you let them stay? I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.

tawnyc coats! out, scarlet hypocrite!

Gloucester's men beat out the Cardinal's, and enter in the hurtly-hurtly the Mayor London and his Officers.

y. Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates, contumeliously should break the peace! Mayor! thou know'st little of my wrongs:

's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king, here dextrain'd the Tower to his use.

n. Here's Gloucester, a foe to citizens, that still motions war and never peace, harging your free purses with large fines, seeks to overthrow religion, is he protector of the realm, would have armour here out of the Tower, own himself king and suppress the prince.

u. I will not answer thee with words, but blows. [Here they skirmish again.

Nought rests for me in this tumultuous strife;

make open proclamation:

officer; as load as e'er thou canst,

All manner of men assembled here in this day against God's peace and the king's, urge and command you, in his highness' repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law: but we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloucester, we will meet; to thy cost, be sure:

Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs, if you will not away.

This cardinal's more haughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell: dost but what thou mayst.

Win. Abominable Gloucester, guard thy head; For I intend to have it ere long.

[Exeunt, severally, Gloucester and Winchelsea with their Serving-men.

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.

Good God, these nobles should such stomachs bear!

I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. Orleans.

Enter, on the walls, a Master Gunner and his Boy.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged.

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Boy. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them.

How'ver unfortunate I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou ruled by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town; Something I must do to procure me grace. The prince's espials have informed me How the English, in the suburbs close intrenched, Wont through a secret grate of iron bars In yonder tower to overpeer the city And thence discover how with most advantage They may vex us with shot or with assault. To intercept this inconvenient To a piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have placed; And even these three days have I watch'd, If I could see them. Now do thou watch, for I can stay no longer. If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word; And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit. Boy. Father, I warrant you; take you no care; I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them. [Exit.

Enter, on the turrets, the Lords Salisbury and Talbot, Sir William Glansdale, Sir Thomas Gargrave, and others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd! How wert thou handled being prisoner? Or by what means got'st thou to be released? Discourse, I prithee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prisoner Call'd the brave Lord Ponton de Santrailles; For him was I exchanged and ransomed. But with a baser man of name far far Once in contempt they would have barter'd me: Which I disdaining scorn'd and craved death Rather than I would be so vile-esteem'd. In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired. But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart, Whom with my bare fists I would execute, If I now had him brought into my power.
Sal. Yet tell’st thou not how thou wert entertain’d.

Tal. With scoffs and scorns and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produced they me,
To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scarecrow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg’d stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame;
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem’d me not secure;
So great fear of my name ’mongst them was spread
That they supposed I could rend bars of steel
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had
That walked about me every minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a linstock.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endured,
But we will be revenged sufficiently.
Now it is supper-time in Orleans: Here, through this grate, I count each one
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the sight will much delight thee,
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me have your express opinions
Where is best place to make our battery next.
Gar. I think, at the north gate; for there stand lords.
Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish’d,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.
[Here they shoot. Salisbury and Gargrave fall.
Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!
Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woful man!
Tal. What chance is this that suddenly hath crossed us?
Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak:
How farest thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thy eyes and thy cheek’s side struck off!
Accursed tower! accursed fatal hand
That hath contriv’d this woful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o’ercame;
Henry the Fifth he first train’d to the wars;
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne’er leave striking in the field. 8r
Yetlivest thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast, to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eyeieweth all the world.
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!
Bear hence his body; I will help to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort; 99
Thou shalt not die whiles—
He becometh with his hand and smiles on me,
As who should say ‘When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.’

Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn
Wretched shall France be only in my name.
[Here the alarum, and it thunders and lightnings.
What stir is this? what tumult’s in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarum and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord, my lord, the French gather’d head:
The Dauphin, with one Joaun La Pucelle join,
A holy prophetess new risen up.
Is come with a great power to raise the siege
[Here Salisbury lifteth himself up and goes.
Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury groan!
It irks his heart he cannot be revenged.
Frenchmen, I’ll be a Salisbury to you:
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I’ll stamp out with my horse’s shank:
And make a quagmire of your mingled brain,
Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we’ll try what these dastard Fr. men dare.

[Alarum. Exit Talbot.

Scene V. The same.

Here an alarum again: and Talbot for the Dauphin, and driveth him; then Joan La Pucelle, driving English before her, and exit after them; then re-Talbot.
Tal. Where is my strength, my valour my force?
Our English troops retire, I cannot stay the
A woman clad in armour chase them.

Re-enter La Pucelle.

Here, here she comes. I’ll have a bout with Devil or devil’s dam, I’ll conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,
And straightforward give thy soul to him thou seest.
Puc. Come, come, ‘tis only I that must grace thee.
[Here they.
Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to vail?
My breast I’ll burst with straining of my co
And from my shoulders crack my arms as
But I will chastise this high-minded strump
[They fight a
Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is no
come;
I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
[A short alarum: then enter the town sal.
O’ertake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strike
Go, go, cheer up thy hungry-starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament:
This day is ours, as many more shall be.
Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a po wheel;
I know not where I am, nor what I do:
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troops and conquerers as she
So heeves with smoke and doves with noissome
Are from their hives and houses driven awa
They call’d us for our fierceless English do
Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.
[A short ala
countrymen! either renew the fight,
the lions out of England's coat;
see your soil, give sheep in lions' stead:
un not half so treacherous from the wolf,
or oxen from the leopard,
fly from your off-subdued slaves.
[Alarum. Here another skirmish.
not be; retire into your trenches;
conseunted into Salisbury's death,
he would strike a stroke in his revenge.
is enter'd into Orleans,
of us or aught that we could do,
I were to die with this Salisbury!
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day caroused and banqueted:
Embrace we then this opportunity
As fitting best to quittance their deceit
Convin'd by art and baleful sorcery,
Bed. Coward of France! how much he wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Bur. Traitors have never other company.
But what's that Pucelle whom they term so pure?
Tal. A maid, they say.
Bed. A maid! and be so martial!
Bur. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long,
If underneath the standard of the French
She carry armour as she hath begun.
Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits:
God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.
Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow
thee.
Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways;
That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.
Bed. Agreed: I'll to yond corner.
Bur. And I to this.
Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.
Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.
Sent. Arm! arm! the enemy doth make assault! [Cry: 'St George,' 'A Talbot.']

The French leap over the walls in their skirts.
Enter, several ways, the Bastard of Orleans,
ALENÇON, and REIGNIER, half ready, and half unready.

ALEN. How now, my lords! what, all unready so?
Bast. Unready! ay, and glad we 'scape so
well.
Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave
our beds,
Hearing alarums at our chamber-doors.
ALEN. Of all exploits since first I follow'd arms,
Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous or desperate than this.
Bast. I think this Talbot be a fiend of hell.
Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour
him.
ALEN. Here cometh Charles: I marvel how he sped.
Bast. Tut, holy Joan was his defensive guard.
Enter Charles and La Pucelle.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame? 50
Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,
Make us partakers of a little gain,
That now our loss might be ten times so much?

Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend? At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping or waking must I still prevail,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?

Improvise soldiers! had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fall’n.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default.
That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Did look no better to that weighty charge.

Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surprised.

Reg. And so was mine, my lord.
Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter and mine own precinct
I was employ’d in passing to and fro,
About relieving of the sentinels:
Then how or which way should they first break in?

Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case,
How or which way: ‘tis sure they found some place
But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.
And now there rests no other shift but this;
To gather our soldiers, scatter’d and dispersed,
And lay new platforms to endanger them.

A larum. Enter an English Soldier, crying ‘A Talbot! a Talbot!’ They fly, leaving their clothes behind.

Sold. I’ll be so bold to take what they have left.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword; 80
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.

Exit.

SCENE II. Orleans. Within the town.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil’d the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury,
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.
Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him
There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night.
And that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen’d in revenge of him,
Within their chiefest temple I’ll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter’d:
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engraved the sack of Orleans,

The treacherous manner of his mournful death,
And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,
I muse we met not with the Dauphin’s grace.
His new- come champion, virtuous Joan of
Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. ’Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when fight began,
Roused on the sudden from their drowsy
They did amongst the troops of armed men
Leap o’er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself, as far as I could well see.
For smoke and dusky vapours of the night
Am sure I scared the Dauphin and his train.
When arm in arm they both came swiftly:
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves
That could not live asunder day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
We’ll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which princely train
Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts
So much applauded through the realm of
Tal. Here is the Talbot: who would

Mess. The virtuous lady, Countess of
With modesty admiring thy renown,
By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst safe
To visit her poor castle where she lies,
That she may boast she hath beheld the
Whose glory fills the world with loud rep:
Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see
Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter’d with
You may not, my lord, despise her genti
Tal. Ne’er trust me then; for when

Of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman’s kindness over-ruled
And therefore tell her I return great thanks
And in submission will attend on her.
Will not your honours bear me company?
Bed. No, truly; it is more than man
And I have heard it said, unbidden guest
Not often welcomed when they are gone.
Tal. Well then, alone, since there’s no more.
I mean to prove this lady’s courtesy.
Come hither, captain. [Whispers.] May ceive my mind?

Capt. I do, my lord, and mean acco

[Exit.]

SCENE III. Anwerpge. The Countess

Enter the Countess and her Port

Count. Porter, remember what I charge;
And when you have done so, bring to me.

Port. Madam, I will.

Count. The plot is laid; if all thing right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit
As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus’ death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadful kni
And his achievements of no less acco would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
Cure the censure of these rare reports. 10

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

5. Madam, ting as your ladyship desired,
SSage craved, so is Lord Talbot come.
6. And he is welcome. What? is this the man?
7. Madam, it is.
8. Is this the scourgé of France? the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad with his name the mothers still their babes?
9. Report is fabulous and false:
But I should have seen some Hercules,
And Hector, for his grim aspect,
RGE proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
10. His is a child, a silly dwarf!
Not this weak and writhed shrimp
Strike such terror to his enemies,
Talbot, I have been bold to trouble you;
And your ladyship is not at leisure,
Some other time to visit you.
11. What means he now? Go ask him further he goes.
12. Stay, my Lord Talbot; for my lady
Raves the cause of your abrupt departure.
13. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
Certify her Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter with keys.
14. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.
Prisoner to whom?
15. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
That cause I train'd thee to my house.
16. Im thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
My gallery thy picture hangs:
17. The substance shall endure the like,
Will chain these legs and arms of thine, as
By tyranny these many years.
18. Our country, slay our citizens
At our sons and husbands captivate.
19. Ha, ha, ha!
20. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth
All turn to moan.
21. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond
K that you have aught but Talbot's shadow
To practise your severity.
22. Why, art not thou the man?
I am indeed.
23. Then have I substance too.
No, no, I am but shadow of myself:
24. Deceived, my substance is not here;
at you see is but the smallest part
Proportion of humanity;
25. Madam, were the whole frame here, such a spacious lofty pitch,
Were not sufficient to contain't.
26. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce;
Be here, and yet he is not here:
These contrarieties agree.
27. That will I show you presently.
Winds his horn, Drums strike up: a Band of ordnance. Enter Soldiers.
28. You, madam? are you now persuaded
Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms and Strength, with which he yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities and subverts your towns
And in a moment makes them desolate.
29. Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:
I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited
And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath; 70
For I am sorry that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.
Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor mis-construe
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body,
What you have done hath not offended me;
Nor other satisfaction do I crave,
But only, with your patience, that we may Taste of your wine and see what vats you have;
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well, 80
Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured
To feast so great a warrior in my house.
[Exeunt.

Scene IV. London. The Temple-garden.

Enter the Earl of Surrey, Suffolk, and Warwick; Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?
Dare no man answer in a case of truth?
Suf. Within the Temple-hall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient.
Plan. Then say at once if I maintain'd the truth;
Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?
Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law,
And never yet could frame my will to it;
And therefore frame the law unto my will.
Som. Judge you, my Lord of Warwick, then,
Between us.
War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye;
I have perhaps some shallow spirit of judgement;
But in these nice sharp quiletts of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.
Plan. 'Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:
The truth appears so naked on my side
That any purblind eye may find it out.
Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining and so evident
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.
Plan. Since you are tongue-tied and so loath to speak,
In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts:
Let him that is a true-born gentleman
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.
Som. Let him that is no coward nor no flat-terer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War. I love no colours, and without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery.
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.
Suf. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset
And say withal I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more,
Till you conclude that he upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well object'd;
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.
Ver. Then for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,
Lest bleeding you do paint the white rose red.
And fall on my side so, against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: who else?

Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held was wrong in you;

[To Somerset.

In sign whereof I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my scabbard, meditating that Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear but anger that thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;
Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding roses,
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy fashion, peevish boy.

Suf. Turn not thy scorns this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Pole, I will, and scorn both him and thee.

Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William de la Pole!
We grace the yeoman by conversing with him. 8x

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel Duke of Clarence, Third son to the third Edward King of England: Spring crested yeomen from so deep a root?

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,
Or dust not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On any plot of ground in Christendom.
Was not thy father, Richard Earl of Cambridge, Executed in our late king's day?
And, by his treason, stand'st not thou a corrup't, and exempt from ancient gentle
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And, till thou be restored, thou art a yeoman?

Plan. My father was attached, not attainted to die for treason, but no traitor.
And that I'll prove on better men than S". Were growing time once ripen'd to my will
For your partaker Pole and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To scourge you for this apprehension:

Look to it well and say you are well warn'd
Som. Ah, thou shalt find us ready to still:
And know us by these colours for thy foe
For these my friends in spite of thee shall

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and rose,
As consequence of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever and my faction wear,
Until it wither with me to my grave.
Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suf. Go forward and be choke'd with bition!

And so farewell until I meet thee next.

Plan. How I am braved and must endure it!

War. This blot that they object against house
Shall I, ere wiped out in the next parliament
Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster,
And if thou be not then created York,
I will not live to be accounted Warwick.
Meantime, in signal of my love to thee,
Against proud Somerset and William Pole,
Will I upon thy party wear this rose:
Grown to this faction in the Temple-gardens,
Shall send between the red rose and the thorns
A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good Master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear this

Law. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say this quarrel will drink blood another day

Scene V. The Tower of London

Enter Mortimer, brought in a chair

Goaler.

Mer. Kind keepers of my weak decay!
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.
Even like a man new haled from the rack,
So far with my limbs with long imprisonment
And these grey locks, the pursuivants of old
Nestor-like aged in an age of care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent:
Weak shoulders, overborne with burthenin
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne:
The reason moved these warlike lords to this
Was, for that—young King Richard thus removed, 70
Leaving no heir begotten of his body—
I was the next by birth and parentage;
For by my mother I derived am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the Third; whereas he.
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but four of that heroic line.
But mark: as in this haughty great attempt
They laboured to plant the rightful heir, 80
I lost my liberty and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke, did reign,
Thy father, Earl of Cambridge, then derived
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of York,
Marrying my sister that thy mother was,
Again in pity of my hard distress
Levied an army, ween'd to redeem
And have install'd me in the diadem:
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True; and thou seest that I no issue have
And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me:
But yet, methinks, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny. 100
Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic:
Strong-fix'd is the house of Lancaster
And like a mountain, not to be removed.
But now thy uncle is removing hence;
As princes do their courts, when they are eloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O, uncle, would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age!
Mor. Thou dost then wrong me, as that slaughterer doth

Which giveth many wounds when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only give order for my funeral:
And so farewell, and fair be all thy hopes
And prosperous be thy life in peace and war! [Dies.

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parted soul!

In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine let that rest.
Keepers, convey him hence, and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.

[Exit Gaolers, bearing out the body of Mortimer.

Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Choked with ambition of the meaner sort:
And for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,
I doubt not but with honour to REDRESS;
And therefore haste I to the parliament,
Either to be restored to my blood:
Or make my ill the advantage of my good. [Exit.}
ACT III.

Flourish. Enter King, Exeter, Gloucester, Warwick, Somerset, and Suffolk; the Bishop of Winchester, Richard Plantagenet, and others. Gloucester offers to put up a bill; Winchester snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Comest thou with deep premeditated lines, With written pamphlets studiously devised, Humphrey of Gloucester? If thou canst accuse, Or aught intend'st to lay unto my charge, Do it without invention, suddenly; As I with sudden and extemoral speech Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glou. Preposterous priest! this place commands my patience, Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me. Think not, although in writing I pretend 10 The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forgot, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen: No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness, Thy lewd, pestiferous and dissentious pranks, As very infants prattle of thy pride. Thou art a most perilous usurer, Froward by nature, enemy to peace; Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseeches A man of thy profession and degree: 20 And for thy treachery, what's more manifest? In that thou lais't a trap to take my life, As well at London bridge as at the Tower. Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted, The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloucester, I do defy thee. Lords, vouchsafe To give me hearing what I shall reply. If I were covetous, ambitious or perverse, As he will have me, how am I so poor? 30 Or how hap'st it I seek not to advance Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling? And for dissension, who preferreth peace More than I do?—except I be provoked. No, my good lords, it is not that offends; It is not that that hath incensed the duke: It is, because no one should sway but he; No one but he should be about the king; And that engenders thunder in his breast And makes him roar these accusations forth. 40 But he shall know I am as good—

Glou. Thou bastard of my grandfather! Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray, But one imperious in another's throne?

Glou. Am I not protector, saucy priest? Win. And am I not a prelate of the church? Glou. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps And useth it to patronage his theft.

War. Roam thither, then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.

Som. Methinks my lord should be religious And know the office that belongs to such. War. Methinks his lordship should be hurl'd It first with a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd near.

War. State holy or unhallow'd, what of Is not his grace protector to the king? Plan. [Aside] Plantagenet, I see, must tongue.

Lest it be said 'Speak, sirrah, when you shall Must your bold verdič enter talk with lord Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

King. Uncle of Gloucester and of Winceby. The special watchmen of our English weal, I would prevail, if prayers might prevail, To join your hearts in love and amity. O, what a scandal is it to our crown, That two such noble peers as ye should join Believe me, lords, my tender years can Civil dissension is a viperous worm That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth [A noise within, "Down with the tawny- What tumult's this?"

War. An uproar, I dare war. Begun through malice of the bishop's men. [Enter Mayor, Gloucester, Serving-men, in skirmish, with g Fell.]

King. We charge you, on allegiance to To hold your slandering hands and keep peace. Pray, uncle Gloucester, mitigate this strife First Serv. Nay, if we be forbidden we'll fall to it with our teeth. Sec. Serv. Do what ye dare, we are solute. [Skirmish

Behold, my Lord of Winchester, the duke look you still so stern and tragical?

Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

malice was a great and grievous sin;
will not you maintain the thing you teach,
prove a chief offender in the same?
Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly [Exeunt Serving-men, Mayor, &c.

Accept this scroll, most gracious
overaign,
in the right of Richard Plantagenet
hibit to your majesty.
I will urge, my Lord of Warwick: for,
peace, your grace mark every circumstance,
av great reason to do Richard right;
ally for those occasions
Place I told you my majesty.
and those occasions, uncle, were of force:
heere, my loving lords, my pleasure is
Richard be restored to his blood.
Let Richard be restored to his blood;
ll his father's wrongs be recompensed.
As will the rest, so will eth Winchester.
If Richard will be true, not that alone
But all the whole inheritance I give
That doth belong unto the house of York,
From whence you spring by lineal descent.
Thy humble servant vows obedience
And humble service till the point of death.
Stoop then and set your knee against foot;
And, in reguerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valliant sword of York:
Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And rise created princely Duke of York.
And so thrive Richard as thy foes may fall!
And as my duty springs, so perish they
That grudge one thought against your majesty!
Welcome, high prince, the mighty Duke of York!
Parish, base prince, ignoble
Duke of York!
Throughout the seas and to be crown'd in France:
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies.
When Gloucester says the word, King
Henry goes;
For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.
Your ships already are in readiness.
Flourish. Exeunt all but Exeter.
Ae, we may march in England or in
France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue.
This late disension grown betwixt the peers
Burns under feigned ashes of forged love
And will at last break out into a flame:
As fester'd men rot but by degree,
 Till bones and flesh and sinews fall away,
So will this base and envious discord breed.
And now I fear that fatal prophecy
Which in the time of Henry named the Fifth
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe;
That Henry born at Monmouth should win all
And Henry born at Windsor lose all;
Which is so plain that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time.

SCENE II. France. Before Rouen.

Enter Pucelle disguised, with four Soldiers with sacks upon their backs.
These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen,
Through which our policy must make a breach:
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market men
That come to gather money for their corn.
If we have entrance, as I hope we shall,
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.
First Sol. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack
the city.
And we be lords and rulers over Rouen
Therefore we'll knock.
Knocks. Watch. [Within] Qui est là?
Payans, pauvres gens de France;
Poor market folks that come to sell their corn.
Watch. Enter, go in; the market bell is rung.
Enter CHARLES, the Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, Reignier, and forces.

Char. Saint Denis bless this happy stratagem! And once again we’ll sleep secure in Rouen.

Bast. Here enter’d Pucelle and her præcisants; Now she is there, how will she specify Where is the best and safest passage in? Reign. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower; Which, once discern’d, shows that her meaning is, No way to that, for weakness, which she enter’d.

Enter LA PUCELLE on the top, thrusting out a torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen; But burning fatal to the Talbotties! [Exit. Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend; The burning torch in yonder turret stands. Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge, A prophet to the fall of all our foes! Reign. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends: Enter, and cry ‘The Dauphin! presently, And then do execution on the watch. [Alarum. Exeunt.

An alarum. Enter TALBOT in an excursion.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears, If Talbot but survive thy treachery. Pucelle, that witch, that dammed sorceress, Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares, That hardly we escaped the pride of France. [Exit. An alarum: excursions. BEDFORD, brought in sick in a chair. Enter TALBOT and BURGUNDY without: within LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, BASTARD, ALENÇON, and REIGNIER, on the walls.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread? I think the Duke of Burgundy will fast Before he’ll buy again at such a rate: ’Twas full of darnel: do you like the taste? Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend and shameless courtzan! I trust ere long to choke thee with thine own And make thee curse the harvest of that corn. Char. Your grace may starve perhaps before that time.

Bed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason! Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a lance, And run a tilt at death within a chair? Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of all despite, Encompass’d with thy lustful paramours! Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age And twit with cowardice a man half dead? Damsel, I’ll have a bout with you again, Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are ye so hot, sir? yet, Pucelle, thy peace; If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow. [The English whisper together in council. God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker? Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in field? Puc. Belike your lordship takes us for fools, To try if that our own be ours or no. Tal. I speak not to that raving Hecate, But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest; Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out? Alen. Signior, no. Tal. Signior, hang! base mullets of France! Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. Away, captains! let’s get us from walls; For Talbot means no goodness by his looks. God be wi’ you, my lord! we came but to tell That we are here. [Exeunt from the wall. Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be day: Or else reproof be Talbot’s greatest fame! Yow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house, By public wrongs sustain’d in France Either to get the town again or die: And I, as sure as English Henry lives And as his father here was conqueror, As sure as in this late-betrayed town Great Cœur-de-lion’s heart was buried, So sure I swear to get the town or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with yours.

Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince The valiant Duke of Bedford. Come, my lord! We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me. Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen And will be partner of your weal or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now suade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for I had That stout Pendragon in his litter sick Came to the field and vanquished his foes: Methinks I should revile the soldiers’ heart: Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast Then be it so: heavens keep old Bedford safe And now no more ado, brave Burgundy, But gather we our forces out of hand And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt all but Bedford and Attend. An alarum: excursions. Enter Sir Jo Fastolfe and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, such haste? Fast. Whither away! to save myself by flight We are like to have the overthrow again. Cap. Where? What will you fly, and leave Talbot? Fast. Ay, All the Talbots in the world, to save my life.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

Act I. Scene i. The plains near Rouen.

Sir John Fastolfe, the Bastard of Orleans, La Pucelle, and forces.

Frot. Dismay not, princes, at this accident, grieve that Rouen is so recovered: it is no cure, but rather corrosive, things that are not to be remedied. Frantic Talbot triumph for a while like a peacock sweep along his tail; ill pull his plumes and take away his train, and the rest will be but ruled.

Bir. We have been guided by thee hitherto of thy cunning had no difference; sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Char. Search out thy wit for secret policies, we will make thee famous through the world.

Bir. We'll set thy statue in some holy place, have thee reverenced like a blessed saint; lay thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Char. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise: all persuasions mix'd with sugar'd words will entice the Duke of Burgundy and the Talbot to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that, France were no place for Henry's warriors; Nor should that nation boast it so with us, But be expir'd from our provinces.

Acle. For ever should they be expuls'd from France And not have title of an eirdom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drum sounds afar off.]

Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

Here sound an English march. Enter, and pass over at a distance, Talbot and his forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread, And all the troops of English after him.

French march. Enter the Duke of Burgundy and forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his: Fortune in favour makes him lag behind. Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

[Trumpets sound a parley.]

Bir. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marching hence.

Char. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words.

Char. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France! Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.

Bir. Speak on; but be not over- tedious.

Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France, And see the cities and the towns defaced By wasting ruin of the cruel foe. As looks the mother on her lovely babe When death doth close his tender dying eyes, See, see the pining malady of France; Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds, Which thou thyself hast given her woful breast. O, turn thy edged sword another way; Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help. One drop of blood drawn from thy country's bosom Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore: Return thee therefore with a flood of tears, And wash away thy country's stained spots.

Bir. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words, Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on thee.

Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny, Who join'st thou with but with a lordly nation That will not trust thee but for profit's sake? When Talbot hath set footing once in France And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill, Who then but English Henry will be lord And thou be thrust out like a fugitive?
Call we to mind, and mark but this for proof,
Was not the Duke of Orleans thy foe?
And was he not in England prisoner?

But when they heard he was thine enemy,
They set him free without his ransom paid,
In spite of Burgundy and all his friends.

See, then, thou fight'st against thy countrymen
And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, return; return, thou wandering lord
Charles and the rest will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquished; these haughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees.

Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen,
And, lords, accept this heartly kind embrace:
My forces and my power of men are yours:
So farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

Puc. [Aside] Done like a Frenchman: turn, and turn again.

Char. Welcome, brave Duke! thy friendship makes us fresh.

Bast. And doth beget new courage in our breasts.

Aien. Pucelle hath bravely play'd her part in this,
And doth deserve a coronet of gold.

Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers,
And seek how we may prejudice the foe.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. Paris. The palace.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Bishop of Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Exeter; Vernon, Basset, and others.

To them with his Soldiers, Talbot.

Tal. My gracious prince, and honourable peers,
Hearing of your arrival in this realm,
I have awhile given truce unto my wars,
To do my duty to my sovereign:
In sign whereof, this arm, that hath reclaim'd
To your obedience fifty fortresses,
Twelve cities and seven walled towns of strength,
Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,
Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet,
And with submissive loyalty of heart
Ascribes the glory of his conquest got
First to my God and next unto your grace.

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle Gloucester,
That hath so long been resident in France?

Glow. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

King. Welcome, brave captain and victorious lord!

When I was young, as yet I am not old,
I do remember how my father said
A stouter champion never handled sword.
Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service and your toil in war;
Yet never have you tasted our reward,
Or been reguerver'd with so much as thanks,
Because till now we never saw your face:
Therefore, stand up: and, for these good deserts,
We here create you Earl of Shrewsbury;
And in our coronation take your place.

[Scene. Flourish. Exeunt all but Ver, Bas, and Bas.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hoarse,
Disgracing of these colours that I wear
In honour of my noble Lord of York:
Darest thou maintain the former words I spakest?

Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patron.
The envious barking of your saucy tongue
Against my lord the Duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.

Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man
As York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take this.

[Striketh. Bas. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms
Such
That whoso draws a sword, 'tis present death:
Or else this blow should broach thy despot blood.

But I'll unto his majesty, and crave
I may have liberty to venge this wrong;
When thou shalt see I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon
As you;
And, after, meet you sooner than you would.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Bishop of Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Talbot, Exeter, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glow. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that natures
The sixth!

Glow. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath
That you elect no other king but him;
Esteem now friends but such as are his friends,
And none your foes but such as shall pretend
Malicious practices against his state:
This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

Enter Sir John Fastolf.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode to Calais,
To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your grace from the Duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy thee!
I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee
To tear the garter from thy craven's leg.

[Plucking it.

Which I have done, because unworthy Thou wast install'd in that high degree.
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:
This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire did run away:
Enter Vernon and Basset.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign.

Bas. And me, my lord, grant me the comb-

Yor. This is my servant: hear him, noble

Sern. And this is mine: sweet Henry, favour

K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them

Bas. And I with him; for he hath done me

K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea from England into France, this fellow here, with envious carping tongue,

Upbraided me about the rose I wear; 91

Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves

Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,

When stubbornly he did repugn the truth

About a certain question in the law

Argued betwixt the Duke of York and him;

With other vile and ignominious terms:

In confection of which rude reproach

And in defence of my lord's worthiness,

I crave the benefit of law and arms. 100

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord:

For though he seem with forged quaint conceit

To set a gloss upon his bold intent,

Yet know, my lord, I was provoked by him;

And he first took exceptions at this badge,

Promising that the paleness of this flower

Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

York. Will not this malicious, Somerset, be left? 110

Sern. Your private grudge, my Lord of York, will out,

Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it.

K. Hen. Good Lord, what madness rules in brainsick men,

When for so slight and frivolous a cause

Such factious emulations shall arise!

Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,

Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight,

And then your highness shall command a peace.

Sern. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;

Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. 119

York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.

Glow. Confirm it so! Confounded be your strife!

And perish ye, with your audacious prate!

Presumptuous vassals, are you not ashamed

With this immodest clamorous outrage

To trouble and disturb the king and us?

And you, my lords, methinks you do not well

To bear with their perverse objections;

Much less to take occasion from their mouths

To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves:

Let me persuade you take a better course.

Exe. It grieves his highness: good my lords, be friends.
K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combatsants:
Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this quarrel and the cause.
And you, my lords, remember where we are;
In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation:
If they perceive dissension in our looks
And that within ourselves we disagree,
How will their gorging stomachs be provoked
To wilful disobedience, and rebel!
Beside, what infamy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certified
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henry's peers and chief nobility
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France!
O, think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years, and let us not forego
That for a trifle that was bought with blood! 150
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife,
I see no reason, if I wear this rose,
[Putting on a red rose.
That any one should therefore be suspicious
I more incline to Somerset than York:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both:
As well they may upbraid me with my crown,
Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd,
But your discretions better can persuade
Than I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we hither came in peace, 160
So let us still continue peace and love.
Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France:
And, good my Lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot:
And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies.
Ourself, my lord protector and the rest
After some respite will return to Calais; 170
From hence to England; where I hope ere long
To be presented, by your victories,
With Charles, Alençon and that traitorous rout.
War. My Lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, methought, did play the orator.
York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,
In that he wears the badge of Somerset.
War. Tush, that was but his fancy, blame him not;
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.
York. An if I wist he did,—but let it rest; 180
Other affairs must now be managed.
[Exeunt all but Exeter.
Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice:
For, had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decipher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils,
Than yet can be imagined or supposed.
But howsoe'er, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This shouldering of each other in the court,
This factious bandying of their favourites,
Scene III. Plains in Gascony.

Enter a Messenger that meets York. Enter York with trumpet and many Soldiers.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again, and do'g'd the mighty army of the Dauphin? They are return'd, my lord, and give it out he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power, and fight with Talbot: as he march'd along, your espials were discovered mightier troops than that the Dauphin led, and join'd with him and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset, thus delays my promised supply. These seven men, that were laggard for this siege! owned Talbot doth expect my aid, I am lown by a traitor villain, cannot help the noble chevalier; comfort him in this necessity! miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength, so needful on the earth of France, to the rescue of the noble Talbot, now is girdled with a waist of iron hemm'd about with grim destruction: Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux, York! farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God, that Somerset, who in proud bearing, stop my corsets, were in Talbot's place! would we save a valiant gentleman one traitor and a coward. ire and wrathful fury makes me weep, thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word; mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get; long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul; on his son young John, who two hours since t in travel toward his warlike father! seven years did not Talbot see his son; now they meet where both their lives are done.

York. Alas, what joy shall noble Talbot have, his young son welcome to his grave? vexionation almost stops my breath, sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Lucy. Farewell: no more my fortune can, curse the cause I cannot aid the man, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours, are won away, Long all of Somerset and his delay.

Lucy. Thus, while the valour of sedition Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders, Sleeping negligence doth betray to loss The conquest of our scarce cold conqueror, that ever living man of memory, Henry the Fifth: whilst they each other cross, Lives, honours, lands and all hurry to loss. [Exit.

Scene IV. Other plains in Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his army; a Captain of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now: This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rashly plotted: all our general force Might with a sally of the very town Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure: York set him on to fight and die in shame, That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.

Cap. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me Set from our o'ermatch'd forces forth for aid. Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, Sir William! whither were you sent? Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold Lord Talbot; Who, ring'd about with bold adversity, Cries out for noble York and Somerset, To beat assaulting death from his weak legions: And whilst the honourable captain there Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs, And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue, You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour, keep off afoot with worthless emulation. Let not your private discord keep away The levied succours that should lend him aid, While he, renowned noble gentleman, Yields up his life unto a world of odds: Orleans the Bastard, Charles, Burgundy, Alençon, Reignier, compass him about, And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on; York should have sent him aid.

Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims; Swearing that you withhold his levied host, Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the horse; I owe him little duty, and less love; And take foul scorn to fawn on him by sending. Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France, Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot: Never to England shall he bear his life; But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will dispatch the horsemen straight: Within six hours they will be at his aid.

Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is ta'en or slain; For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu!
Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. The English camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot and John his son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee To tutor thee in stratagems of war, That Talbot's name might be in thee revived When sapless age and weak unable limbs Should bring thy father to his drooping chair. But, O malignant and ill-boding stars! Now thou art come unto a feast of death, A terrible and unavoidable danger: Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse; And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape. By sudden flight: come, daily not, be gone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son? And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother, Dishonour not her honourable name, To make a bastard and a slave of me! The world will say, he is not Talbot's blood, That basely fled when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain. John. He that flies so will ne'er return again. Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die. John. When let me stay; and, father, do you fly: Your loss is great, so your regard should be; My worth unknown, no loss is known in me. Upon my death the French can little boast; In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost. Flight cannot stain the honour you have won; But mine it will, that no exploit have done: You fled for vantage, every one will swear; But, if I bow, they'll say it was for fear. There is no hope that ever I will stay, If the first hour I shrink and run away. Here on my knee I beg mortality, Rather than life preserved with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?

John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing, I command thee go. John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe. Tal. Part of thy father may be saved in thee. John. No part of him but will be shame in me.

Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, your renowned name: shall flight abuse it? Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain. John. You cannot witness for me, being slain. If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and die?

My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame? No more can I be sever'd from your side, Than can yourself yourself in twain divide: Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I: For live I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of the fair son, Born to avenge thy life this afternoon. Come, side by side together live and die; And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.
Scene VII.  Another part of the field.

Lucy.  Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.
Char.  On what submissive message art thou sent?
Lucy.  Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word:
We English warriors wot not what it means.
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en
And to survey the bodies of the dead.
Char.  For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison is,
But tell me whom thou seek'st.
Lucy.  But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury,
Created, for his rare success in arms,
Great Earl of Washford, Waterford and Valence;
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmire, Lord Verdun of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,
The thrice-victorious Lord of Falconbridge;
Knight of the noble order of Saint George,
Worthy Saint Michael and the Golden Fleece;
Great marshal to Henry the Sixth.
All of his wars within the realm of France?
Puc.  Here is a silly stately style indeed!
The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath,
Writes not so tedious a style as this.
Him that thou magnifist with all these titles
Stinking and fly-blown lies here at our feet.
Lucy.  Is Talbot slain, the Frenchmen's only scourge,
Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O, were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces! 80
O, that I could but call these dead to life!
It were enough to fright the realm of France:
Were but his picture left amongst you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies, that I may bear them hence
And give them burial as becometh their worth.
Puc.  I think this upright is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them here,
They would but stink, and putrefy the air.
Lucy.  Go, take their bodies hence.
Lucy.  I'll bear them hence; but from their ashes shall be rear'd
A phoenix that shall make all France afeard.
Act V.

Scene I. London. The palace.

Senet. Enter King, Gloucester, and Exeter.

King. Have you perused the letters from the pope, the emperor and the Earl of Armagnac?

Glou. I have, my lord; and their intent is this: They humbly sue unto your excellence To have a godly peace concluded Of between the realms of England and of France.

King. How doth your grace affect their motion? Glou. Well, my good lord; and as the only means To stop effusion of our Christian blood And establish quietness on every side. It was both impious and unnatural That such immensity and bloody a life Should reign among professors of one faith. Glou. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect And surer bind this knot of amity, The Earl of Armagnac, near knit to Charles, A man of great authority in France, Proffers his only daughter to your grace In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

King. Marriage, uncle! alas, my years are young! And fitter is my study and my books Than wanton dalliance with a paramour. Yet call the ambassadors; and, as you please, So let them have their answers every one: I shall be well content with any choice Tends to God’s glory and my country’s weal.

Enter Winchester in Cardinal’s habit, a Legate and two Ambassadors.

Exe. What! is my Lord of Winchester install’d, And call’d unto a cardinal’s degree? Then I perceive that will be verified.

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy, If once he come to be a cardinal, He’ll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

King. My lords ambassadors, your several suits Have been consider’d and debated on. Your purpose is both good and reasonable; And therefore are we certainly resolved To draw conditions of a friendly peace; Which by my Lord of Winchester we mean Shall be transported presently to France.

Glou. And for the proffer of my lord your master, I have inform’d his highness so at large As liking of the lady’s virtuous gifts, Her beauty and the value of her dower, He doth intend she shall be England’s queen.
